MR. CRAVEN DOING HIS BIT

A Letter

INDIANA STATE PRISON
Edward J. Fogarty, Warden
Michigan City, Ind.

Mr. Carl E. Craven, 422 Fine Arts Building, Chicago, Ill.

My Dear Mr. Craven—I take this method of thanking you for the most excellent patriotic recital you gave in the chapel of the Indiana State Prison and on the institution's baseball field on Sunday and Monday, Sept. 1 and 2. Not in the history of the institution has such a patriotic spirit been displayed among the men as was indicated upon the occasion of your visit. Not only are the men still discussing your visit with pleasure, but your method of having the men join with you in the singing of patriotic songs has aroused their patriotic spirit to the extent that the sale of war stamps has been doubled over corresponding periods prior to your visit.

It is my opinion that men in institutions of this kind are as patriotic as are the people on the outside; however, manifestation of this spirit of patriotism is dampened by the ever-present thought that they are locked away from the free world. It requires such opportunities as you offered to release this patriotic spirit.

The officers and inmates of the Indiana State Prison join me in extending their sincere thanks for the most excellent recital you offered to us.

(Signed) E. J. FOGARTY.
Warden.

LYELL BARBER

Lyell Barber has returned to the city after a successful concert trip during August, in which he appeared in several states, including Missouri, Indiana, Ohio and Iowa.

The following is quoted from the Richmond (Ind.) "Item":

"The brilliant young pianist, Lyell Barber, who made such an impression last week, returned to the Chicago Operatic Company because of the absence of their accompanist, who was called to Chicago on account of the death of a relative.

"Mr. Barber was received with great acclaim when he appeared yesterday afternoon, playing several solo numbers which displayed his confident handling of the instrument, his fine technical possessions, and his easy, fluent tone. Mr. Barber was given repeated recalls."

OVERSEAS ENTERTAINMENT

All musicians desirous of doing overseas entertainment work should see Mr. C. W. Best, Room 1014, Y. M. C. A. building, 19 South La Salle street, Sept. 16 to 20, inclusive, as Mr. R. Howell of New York City will be in Chicago at that time.

Reuter—Rudolph Reuter's summer activities include considerable work for war charities. He is spending his vacation in Fish Creek, Wis., and soon after his arrival there, being an ardent tennis player himself, he engineered a tournament among the summer and native residents of the vicinity for the benefit of the American fund for French wounded, which netted a sum of almost three hundred dollars. Last week he played at a concert for the benefit of the Red Cross, which netted a much larger sum, and was turned over to the Sturgeon Bay Chapter.

Park—Ralph Munroe Park, pianist, gave a program before a small but appreciative audience at a dinner given by Mrs. Emil Gutgsell of Oak Park. Among Mr. Park's numbers were the Grieg Nocturne and Liszt's Sixth Rhapsody.

LUCIE ROBERTS-LENOX

The mail of last Monday brought to Music News office three items, yes, five, counting two letters written to Mrs. Lenox and which she forwarded for our inspection, being justly proud of them.

The first of the items to come to hand was a neat little announcement which tells of the opening of the Lucie Roberts-Lenox Studios, both in Chicago and Oak Park, at an early date, and this was accompanied by another small circular in which restatement was made of the fact that Mrs. Lenox has been, in past years, a student of Sbriglia, Paris; Carobbi, Florence; Mme. Barrachia, at the Marchesi School in Paris; Frank King Clark and Mme. Lena Coen, Berlin, and Mme. Aileen Baker of London.

The second item of mail to come to notice was a card of "greeting" from New York City, where Mrs. Lenox has been sojourning all Summer, and where she has done special coaching with Bispham, Witherspoon and others in certain advanced interpretative details.

The third item proved to be an "appreciation" of the life work and ideals of this fine singer and intelligent woman, and was prepared by a friend who, knowing that Mrs. Lenox's picture was to be shown on our cover page today, wished our readers to know more of the busy and artistic life being led by her.

The appreciation is as follows:

"Gen. Hugh Lenox Scott, former Chief of the Staff of the United States Army, is authority for the statement that as in the army music promotes morale—that undefinable spirit which holds an army together, and animates it with a single idea of victory, so in civilian life music promotes equanimity of mind, which is a basis of confidence in the ultimate triumph of our struggles.

"An enthusiastic advocate of this high ministry of music in life, illustrating it by her own gifted service, whether it be in concert, recital, at social functions or in the home, is Lucie Roberts-Lenox.

"This Chicago teacher and vocalist, who has been teaching in New York for the past two months, has also been doing special work with David Bispham, Herbert Witherspoon and Edwin Schneider, along the line of repertoire and 'the dramatic side of vocal art.' Mrs. Lenox, just before the war, spent two years in Europe, studying with leading masters of Paris, London, Berlin and Florence, acquiring a knowledge and mastery of technic which is shown in her thorough and finished work.

"Returning to Chicago for the season of 1918-19, she re-opens her studios in the Fine Arts building and in Oak Park on October 1st."

The accompanying letters, in appreciation of her ability as a singer and teacher of singing, bear testimony as to the place in musical circles of Lucie Roberts-Lenox:

New York, September 5, 1918.

My Dear Mrs. Lenox:

It has been a real pleasure to renew our friendship of former years and to work with you on your repertoire, the past few weeks.

It is needless to say that your enthusiasm and splendid musicianship were a real inspiration to me. I consider those working with you fortunate indeed.

Wishing you every success, I am, as always,

Sincerely your friend,

(Signed) EDWIN SCHNEIDER.

New York, September 1, 1918.

Dear Mrs. Lenox:

I am so glad you have done me the honor to come to me this summer, for such hints as I was fortunately able to give you, for I had to look very carefully indeed for anything to criticize in such an accomplished and musicianly vocalist and mistress of her art as yourself.

A master of mine once dwelt upon the value to the pupil of "a sharp, friendly pair of ears" to pick up the little things that the singer is so near to, that often he doesn't notice, he has let fall.

So if I have been of any service to you in this way, I hope you will allow me to lay the very small collection upon a tray, pleasant remembrance, and present them to you with the homage of the owner of the pair of ears.

Your friend,

(Signed) DAVID BISPHAM.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE NOTES

The fifty-third season of the Chicago Musical College opens next Monday, September 16, with the largest registration in its history. That music plays a part of vast importance in these times of war is made evident by the great desire disclosed in all parts of the country to exploit it, either as a means of consolation or with a view to the practice of it as a career. That the Fall term would likely bring to the college a vast number of students was foreshadowed when the Summer term opened last June, for the registration for that session represented an increase of 60 per cent over any previous Summer term.

The final competition for the sixty free scholarships and the 140 partial scholarships offered to gifted students in various departments by the Chicago Musical College began last Monday morning. The number of applications was large and some admirable talent has been disclosed.

Professor Leopold Auer, the famous violin instructor who gave Heifetz, Elman, Zimbalist, Seidel, Rosen and many another renowned violinist to the world, will arrive in Chicago this week ready to take up his work in the Chicago Musical College. Drawn to the institution by the opportunity to study with the greatest violin teacher in the world, students have flocked to Professor Auer's classes from all parts of the country, and when the great pedagogue meets these classes for the first time he will find the cream of violinistic talent awaiting him.

So great and so widespread is the public interest in music this season that, in answer to many requests, the Chicago musical College has decided to begin its series of weekly matinees as early as possible. Instead of opening the series in October, the institution will begin the Saturday morning concerts in Ziegfeld Theater September 28. The concerts will be given, as usual, at 11 o'clock.

NEW COMPOSITIONS BY GEORGE B. NEVIN

The following new compositions by George B. Nevin are in the press of the Oliver Ditson Company, Boston: "Let This Mind Be in You," anthem with bass solo; "The Witness of John," tenor and bass solos and chorus; "Sing and Rejoice," anthem for Christmas; "The Vesper Hour," anthem for evening service; "Lord God, to Whom Vengeance Belongeth," a war-time anthem which has received many favorable commendations, but nothing more significant than the words of an old Frenchman, a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war: "Cela me fait vibrer comme la Marseillaise" (It stirs me like the Marseillaise).

Mr. Nevin's popular song, "When the Flag Goes By," is now published for orchestra, band, quartet, mixed voices, solo (medium voice), and quartet for men's voices.

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company has made a very effective record of this song.

Mr. Nevin has been very successful in leading the men at Camp Lafayette, Easton, Pennsylvania.

GRAHAM HARRIS

Graham Harris, American violinist, has begun an unusually busy season with a tour through the South in joint recital with Miss Marie Tiffany of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

The itinerary includes the following cities during the first two weeks, beginning September 3:

September 3—Harrisonburg, Va.
September 4—Roanoke, Va.
September 5—Lynchburg, Va.
September 6—Danville, Va.
September 9—Salisbury, N. C.
September 10—Durham, N. C.
September 11—Greensboro, N. C.
September 12—Winston-Salem, N. C.
September 13—Albemarle, N. C.

The tour will continue through Georgia, Alabama and South Carolina for six weeks, after which Mr. Harris will go immediately to Detroit as a first violin member of the new orchestra under Ossip Gabrilowitsch, beginning rehearsals October 14. Mr. Harris will occupy third chair (referred to officially in some orchestras as third concertmaster) and will be soloist in the regular series of concerts with the orchestra in Detroit.

The Detroit Conservatory of Music has engaged Mr. Harris as head violin teacher, and as he has already formed a trio with Mr. Penha, the first cellist of the orchestra, with dates already booked in Michigan, this promises to be the busiest season of this violinist's busy career.

SAM FOX CO. TO PUBLISH SOUSA'S NEW WEDDING MARCH

The following telegram was sent by Sam Fox to his home office on September 1:

Kansas City.

Cleveland, Ohio.

John Philip Sousa has just placed with us by wire his Wedding March for publication. Same was written at request of American public and dedicated to American people to supersede old German wedding marches, now under ban. This is Sousa's masterpiece and will live in history as a monument to this eminent American composer. Interviewed tonight by Associated Press, who consider this as a big thing and suggested simultaneous feature by all naval bands during fourth Liberty Loan, which will be done. Story going over press wires tonight.

WESTERN CONSERVATORY

Miss Vera Guedtner, pupil of the Western Conservatory, under instruction of Miss Margaret Dahlstrom, has been engaged to sing at the War Exposition Wednesday, Friday and Saturday evenings of this week. Miss Margaret Masley will play the piano accompaniments.

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK: MOTHER, PATRIOT AND SINGER

The following was published in the Des Moines Capital on August 21:

Mme. Schumann-Heink is a great singer. We cannot recall the name of a singer about whom so much good has been said and written. Schumann-Heink was born in Germany, educated in Germany and became the wife of a German. She was engaged to come to America to join the forces of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and from that time her popularity grew and her success as a great singer was assured.

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK

But great as is her popularity as a singer, it has become secondary to that still greater quality of mind and heart—"mother." By common consent of the soldier boys and the great public this title has been conferred upon her, and it exceeds any tribute that has ever been paid to any artist or queen who has come to this country. She has freely given her four stalwart sons, George Washington, Walter, Henry and Ferdinand, to the United States Army and Navy to help win the war against Germany. In the cantonments of our country she has gladdened the hearts of the soldier boys with her beautiful voice. She has so won the love and admiration of the people of the Pacific Coast that the authorities of San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego have passed resolutions in her honor and presented the same to her, together with the keys of the cities.

No one questions her loyalty. No one associates the name Schumann-Heink with Germany. She is a patriot through and through, and her loyal sacrifices to her country have set a noble example for every person of German extraction in the United States to heed and emulate.

MARIE SIDENIUS ZENDT

On September 11, Mrs. Marie Sidenius Zendt appeared in an important patriotic meeting at the Austin high school, at which Judge Lindsey was the speaker. She is singing under the auspices of the War Camp Community Service of New York. Gavin Williamson accompanied her.

On September 18 she will give a program with Harrison Wild at Calvary Presbyterian church, Chicago.

OSCAR WAGNER

Oscar Wagner, pianist, teaching at the Cosmopolitan School of Music, has recently completed a very successful series of engagements for the past season, during which he has appeared in recital as soloist or accompanist in the following cities: Denver, Indianapolis, Louisville, Lexington; Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala.; Augusta, Ga.; Wilmington, N. C.; Chattanooga, Tenn., and Flint, Mich.

Mr. Wagner has already booked engagements as accompanist for the coming season with Alfred Hiles Bergen, baritone, members of the Chicago Opera Company, and Vera Poppe, 'cellist, with whom he will also give Sonata Recitals.

THE NATIONAL AMERICAN MUSICAL FESTIVAL ATTRACTS RECORD AUDIENCES —MANY FINE PROGRAMS GIVEN—AN UNUSUALLY HEAVY ATTENDANCE FROM CHICAGO AND THE WEST

Reviewed by CHARLES E. WATT

Lockport, besides having become an annual habit with many, is a genuine pleasure jaunt, as well as an artistic delight.

Everyone in the fine old city helps to entertain the visitors and the exchange of cordiality between the musicians themselves is notably on the increase and promises shortly to make the event the banner social function for the profession, even as it is already a famous melting pot for American composers, compositions, artists and managers.

Monday Morning

The first session opened with "America," and every session thereafter included either that number or "The Star Spangled Banner."

The Rev. J. Webster Bailey, noted for his sympathy with the Lockport project, was at the piano for this feature.

The Apollo Quartet of Boston came next and they continued to sing at almost every program through the week, which was an error of judgment, inasmuch as their singing this year was far below the standard they made for themselves last year. Nevertheless, they were received with considerable favor, partly because of the great reputation they had previously made.

Mayor Gold of Lockport made the address of welcome, and J. Lawrence Erb, presiding officer, was eloquent in his response. Rev. Papperman, another festival enthusiast, also spoke, referring to the absent Mr. Hemingway of the Apollos, who died last Winter.

Bessie Bown Ricker followed and was given a wonderful reception. She is the most intelligent of all child imitators and throughout the convention was the subject of continual applause. On Monday she read "Picnic Time" (Field), "Orville Brown" (Nesbitt), "The Naughty Clock" (DeKoven), scoring in each one.

Then followed one of the big moments of the convention in the work of the Chicago Ensemble Trio, which is composed of Mable Corlew Smith, Lacy Coe and Seneca Pierce.

The last named has been called to the colors and his place was taken by Miss Siedhoff, who did excellent work as a substitute. "Unto Thy Heart" (Allitsen), which is very difficult to intone, was given with perfect ensemble. "Sacrament" (MacDermid) again proved its loveliness, and Nevin's "One Spring Morning" was again a tripping delight.

In the absence of Parnell Egan, the morning was closed with a number by Everett Glines of the Apollo Quartet.

Monday Afternoon

Lynn B. Dana of Ohio, an expert on the subject of "Standardization," again held close attention to that subject and gave most helpful suggestions as to courses, certificates, credits and the relations between private teachers and the public schools.

Theresa G. Lynch, contralto, came next and gave pleasure with a group containing "Bird Raptures" (Schneider), "The Sea" (MacDowell), "The Lamb" (John H, Densmore), "A Ballad of Trees and the Master" (Chadwick) and "The Cry of Rachel" (Salter).

Winifred Lamb, one of the members of the brilliant set of young pianists of which Chicago boasts, came next and in the Campbell-Tipton Sonata demonstrated her breadth and power, while in Griffe's "Vale of Dreams" she was musically and emotionally cantabile, and in Leo Sowerby's "Irish Washerwoman" paraphrase she disclosed the fact that she has wit, as well as fancy. A charming personality is Miss Lamb, as well as a beautiful pianist and an intelligent interpreter.

For encore she played a setting by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach of one of the Strauss songs which was thus made tolerable in this time of stress. She played it exquisitely.

Mary Jones Sherrell read a group of short pieces with great pleasure to the audience, these ranging from bucolic inspiration to patriotic fervor and all proving her gift. Her encore, "At the Movies" (much liked), was a clever imitation of the noisy but impressionistic shopgirl who swallowed her gum in excitement over the pictures.

Lucy J. Hartman, Chicago contralto, came next, effecting her first appearance at the Lockport festival.

Her group was beautifully chosen and was sung throughout not only with opulence of tone, but also great variety and intelligence of interpretation.

"At Parting" (Allitsen) was very beautiful in its vocal aspect and the popular "By the Waters of Minnetonka" (with splendid obbligato by Lacy Coe) made such an impression that it had to be immediately repeated.

The quality of tone in Kraemer's "Last Hour" was fine and the reading emphasized the artistry of the singer, while Woodman's "A Birthday" gave a wholesome, vigorous finish to a thoroughly interesting group.

Hazel Lucille Peck, pianist, was accurate and brilliant, as well as intelligently appreciative of the content of the splendid sonata in A by Charles Wakefield Cadman.

Lillian Rose Veatch, soprano, made a good impression in a well contrasted group consisting of "My Lover He Comes on the Ski" (Clough-Leighter), "Hymn to the Night" (Campbell-Tipton), and "Love is the Wind" (MacFayden).

A ladies' quartet from the Torrens studio in Chicago showed lovely tone and exquisite ensemble in "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" (Bland), arranged by Rose Hilton.

The personnel of this very satisfactory body is Isabel Cline, Mable Corlew Smith, Lucy J. Hartman and Gertrude Kastholm Darcie.

Monday Evening

The American Festival Chorus made its debut and showed really fine tone and good balance in spite of the lack of men singers.

The numbers (directed by Alfred Jury) were "Recessional" (Hadley), and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

Lowell Mabie Welles, a singer from the west who made a good impression last year, was even more successful at this time.

His fine style and good voice, no less than his unusually good enunciation, made him a favorite.

His well chosen group contained "The Pine Tree" (Salter), "The Red, Red Rose" and "The Pilot" (Protheroe), "Her Rose" (Whitney Combs), and "Ah, Love, but a Day" (Beach), all sung with fine style and finish.

Bertha Lansing Rodgers, a beautiful woman and fine artist, showed great range, rich voice and good style in a group excellently chosen to show her unusual resources.

The numbers were "Sheep and Lambs" (Homer), "I Heard a Cry" (William Arms Fisher), "Ma Little Banjo" (Dichmont), "Cradle Song" (MacFayden), and "Canticle of Love" (Kursteiner).

Following came Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, a brilliant artist, thoroughly established in Lockport, who, with that prince of accompanists, Harry Gilbert, at the second piano, swept the audience off its feet by her electric playing of the A Minor Concerto (MacDowell)—a wonderful American work, wonderfully well presented.

Lowell Mabie Welles followed in another excellently given group, including "Invocation" (Rogers), "Yesteryear" (Crist), "The Cross" (Ware), "At Parting" (Rogers), "Jordan River" (George Chittenden Turner) and "Requiescat" (Cadman). Mr. Welles, in his two groups, proved himself one of the best of Lockport artists.

Tuesday Morning

Ethel Hague Rea, coloratura soprano, was the first soloist of the day and greatly deepened the fine impression made last year. "Yesterday and Today" (Spross) was beautifully done. "Across the Hills" (Rummell) was invested with lovely tone. "The Unfurling of the Flag" (Densmore) was thrilling, and "Oh, Bye and Bye," a negro spiritual by Burleigh, was as fine as one could ask.

Minnie C. Hubbard, a fine musician and brilliant violinist from Minnesota, was thoroughly big and impressive in the great sonata by F. S. Converse, in which she displayed great technical skill, as well as breadth of vision.

Clarinda B. Smith, soprano, made a fine impression in Carrie Jacobs Bond's "Little Pink Rose" and showed also good, clear voice in "Pirate Dreams" (Charles Huerter), "Consecration" (Manney) and "Youth" (Gilberte).

Jessie Comlossy, a western girl who has studied extensively with Max Kramm in Chicago and gave a successful recital there under his direction, came next and played with spirit, style and understanding the big "Theme and Variations" of Ernest Schelling.

Emily Beglin, somewhat nervous, but the possessor of a good, solid voice of nice quality, sang "Le Petit Papillon" (Mana Zucca), "Song of the Canoe" (Gilberte), "Passing Out of the Shadow" (Frank H. Mather), and "Fairy Bark" (Ware).

Tuesday Afternoon

The afternoon program opened with a group of MacDowell numbers played with the expected authority and sweep by Edith Thompson of Boston. Expected, because this young player was a MacDowell pupil, and doubly so in view of the remembrance of her fine handling of the D Minor Concerto at the time she was soloist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Miss Thompson has great power, as well as glittering clarity and a remarkable facility, and these assets helped her to shine, especially in the big concert etude, as well as giving point and finish to "The Witches' Dance," "From the Depths," "An Old Love Song" and "Dance of the Elves."

Miss Thompson was fortunate to be the especial exponent of MacDowell, and Lockport was fortunate to have Miss Thompson on the program.

Isabel Cline, a pupil of L. A. Torrens (Chicago) and a resident of Kenilworth, Ill., disclosed in her song group the fact that she has a tone of very great beauty, as well as a gracious and pleasing personality.

So well liked was Del' Acqua's "Provencale" that she was twice interrupted by applause, and she found much favor also in "The Star" (Rogers), "Last Night I Heard the Nightingale" (Salter), a particularly fine song, and "Love's Madrigal" (Rae).

Another vocalist of the afternoon was Mable Corlew Smith, who has became one of the established favorites at Lockport.

She sang with remarkable poise and style and in "Spring's Singing" (MacFayden) tossed off some tones in altissimo which were of thrilling effect.

"Invocation" (J. H. Kraemer) and "Loneliness" (Sturkow-Ryder) are songs of serious introspective aspect—very difficult to sing—but were done with great suavity and intensity by Mrs. Smith, who excelled signally also in a wonderful song, "I Call to Mind a Day" (MacDermid), and the equally potent "The Trail to Shadow Land" (William Lester).

The Hon. Woodbridge N. Ferris was the speaker of the afternoon, and chose for his subject "Is Life Worth Living?" "It all depends," said he, "on whether your work is an avocation or an occupation."

If the former, then truly life is worth while.

It is the duty of all educators to help youth to find its proper avocation.

Lockport ought to prove a great factor to this end.

Mr. Ferris is one of those enthusiastic talkers who stays on the stage too long and who yells himself hoarse in putting his points home.

Nevertheless he is brilliant and witty, and correspondingly entertaining.

Perhaps as funny a thing as any he told was this:

"Are you moving," said one of the irrational sort to a neighbor whom he detected in the act of helping load his household goods on a van.

LUCY J. HARTMAN

"Oh, no," replied the other, "I am just taking my furniture out for an airing."

Mrs. Sherrill again appeared and gave a group of readings, with piano accompaniments, which were interesting.

The numbers, with the composers of the music, were as follows: "Out to Old Aunt Mary's" (A. D. Liefeld, Pittsburgh), "The Island Where Babies Grow" (James S. Ford), "Lil' Boy" (Katherine Stockwell Hazzard), "Hush a Bye, Close Yo' Eye" (Jessie L. Gaynor), and "The Bowlegged Boy" (Alfred Hiles Bergen).

The afternoon program was completed with a remarkably fine playing of the splendid Concerto in E Minor (Cecil Burleigh) by Amy Emerson Neill, with an accompaniment which could not have been better, played by Carol Robinson.

The work is a truly great one, elaborate and colorful, and it loses nothing in that all the movements are played without pause.

Tuesday Evening

There were four soloists on Tuesday evening—Harriet Case, soprano, of Chicago and the Iowa State Normal School; Richard Knotts, New York, bass-baritone; Gaylord Yost, Indianapolis, violinist, and Ida Geer Weller, mezzo-contralto, of Pittsburgh.

Miss Case, looking radiant and with concert poise and style very much above the average, gave ten songs (besides encores) and thus encompassed a wide reach of vocalism as well as interpretative detail.

She has a most engaging quality of mezzo-voce, and her manner of taking very high tones pianissimo is exquisite.

She has rare intelligence as well as skill in reading texts and had no difficulty in holding her audience in rapt attention. "There Sits a Bird" (Foote) seemed to me the finest bit she did, although "The Day Is Done" (Spross) and Dunn's "Serenade" were close seconds.

Her attractive program included, further, "Yesterday and Today" (Ward-Stephens), "The Lark Now Leaves His Wat'ry Nest" (Parker), "The Sea" (Grant-Schaefer), "The Call of Rahda" (Ware), "A Maid Sings Light" (MacDowell), "In the Treetops High" (Schneider) and "The Awakening" (Spross).

Mr. Knotts, the possessor of striking personality, proved that he has grown vocally in one year, for his singing had an added musical value over last year. He sang "The Hour Glass" (Burleigh), "Wind Voices" (Frank H. Brackett), "Waiting" (Claude Warford), "Boots and Saddles" (Dudley Buck), "A Ballad of Trees and the Master" (Chadwick), "Spring's a Lovable Ladye" (Keith), "O Little Mother of Mine" (Burleigh) and "Bedouin Love Song" (Chadwick),

Of this list the two Chadwick songs were best, closely seconded in popular favor by the two of Burleigh.

CARRIE JACOBS BOND

Mr. Yost introduced his own great Concerto in G minor, which he played with much skill. The work is of very large sweep; it has an abundance of material and a lavish wealth of color. It is exceedingly ultra-modern, and this will probably prevent its extensive use, but it is nevertheless the vehicle through which much musical playing may be expressed. And it is also very difficult in its technical aspect.

Mr. Yost proved conclusively that he is a fine technician and that he has musical impulse.

Mrs. Weller came to the stage a newcomer, but she retired with the enthusiastic approval of a new and very much in earnest clientele.

She is a singer of bright style, goodly vocal color and extraordinarily fine interpretation.

"Hidden Wounds" (La Forge) and "Separation" (Ward-Stephens) served to establish a fine musical mood, and in "The Linnet Is Tuning Her Lute" (Bauer) Mrs. Weller rose a step higher and started a thrill which increased in intensity through "A Golden Thought" (Ross) and two of the "Chinese Mother Goose Rhymes" of Crist, reaching a resounding climax in "Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorree" (Spross), which is a tragedy in miniature and which she interpreted ideally.

Grace Brune-Marcusson and John Rankel who both sang repeatedly afterward, finished out this program with the duet "Whispered Vows" (Mana Zucca), in which they showed individual charm and good ensemble.

Wednesday Morning

After a scholarly and convincing talk on "Public School Music" by William Henry Hoerner of Colgate University, who decried especially the engaging in this work of anyone without proper preparation, the first musician of the day was introduced in the person of Marguerite Ringo, soprano.

Miss Ringo has a rich, wholesome-sounding voice to correspond with a sparkling and intellectual personality, and was particularly charming in "Dawn" (Pearl C. Curran) and scarcely less so in "Far Away" (Mrs. H. H. A. Beach). Chadwick's "The Rose Leans Over the Pool" was as fine as it was unusual, and "Come Unto These Yellow Sands" (La Forge) completed an excellent group in a fine way, supplemented gracefully by Lily Strickland's "Sleep Song."

Lacy Coe, Chicago violinist, came next and at once attracted attention by his poise, style and brilliant technic, and holding it steadily through the excellence of his readings. His own "Pastorale" was promptly redemanded, so charming did it prove, while the "Barcarolle" (Macmillan) was again very popular. "Rondino" (Eddy Brown) proved a scintillant moment, and "The Avalanche" (Cecil Burleigh) was shown by Mr. Coe to be a big three minutes' work, but entirely within his powers and metier.

Miss Lou Stowe, announced as a diseuse, appeared next and regaled the audience with a group of children's songs, being also togged out accordingly.

Miss Foster wrote the songs and contributed the accompaniments, but by so doing added nothing to her prestige, for they did not compare to other songs presented.

As for Miss Stowe, she has gifts aplenty, as she showed at other times, and particularly at "The Humoreske" on Saturday night, when she did a "mechanical doll" bit, but her singing voice is not beautiful and she is not, much as she may think to the contrary, a good singer of child songs.

In my opinion, this group had much better have been left off the program.

The same stricture, however, may be made about Mrs. Sherrill, who did the "Shanewis" (Cadman) beautifully later in the week, but whose child imitations were also as much out of place as were those of Miss Stowe.

Where is the proper place for such crude imitations? In cheap vaudeville if anywhere. Certainly not at Lockport.

Ruth Bowers Gibson, a young violinist, who followed, drew a clear and steady tone and gave pleasant interpretation to her group, which included "Prelude Americana" (Dowling), "Fairy Sailing," "Ghost Dance" (Cecil Burleigh) and Foster's "Old Kentucky Home, which, played in pristine purity of melody, was a very grateful antidote to some of the more modern American compositions, which were more notable for an attempt to ape foreign ultraism than for any effort to depict American thought or feeling.

Louise Lancaster, an attractive young soprano with good presence and a definitely well handled voice, sang a distinctly good group, including "God Keep You, Dearest" (Homer Bartlett), "Fairy Song" and "Hi, Hi, Hi" (MS. dedicated to Miss Lancaster), by Wallingford Riegger; "The Robin Sings in the Apple Tree" (MacDowell) and "When Celia Sings" (Mohr).

Sturkow-Ryder at the High School

Nearly every day during the festival certain artists volunteered to sing or play for the high school children, and Mme. Sturkow-Ryder's appearance there was a complete musical joy. She played Russian and American compositions, and although scheduled for a twenty-minute group she was kept busy for one full hour. The addition of some Scarlatti gave the children especial delight.

The high school at Lockport is most enthusiastic in response to patriotic sentiment in song, and on other mornings this writer heard them do some remarkably virile work.

Also one morning he heard Mrs. Sherrill read "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" and found her work in that masterpiece to be amazingly fine.

She is noble in appearance and style and should adhere strictly to the dramatic and the romantic, letting severely alone the comic and the child-imitation pieces, neither of which suits her personality.

Wednesday Afternoon

After some very poor singing by the Apollo Quartet, Harriet Ayer Seymour, a well-schooled pianist, was heard to advantage in a MacDowell group, showing several phases of that master's art, this including "Shadow Dance," "Romance and Hungarian Etude," "The Sea" and "The Nautilus."

L. H. Harper, a robust tenor, came next and administered a real thrill in the Burleigh "Deep River" and also in his encore, "When the Boys Come Home" (Speaks), singing also with style and effect "My Desire" (Nevin), "Standin' in the Need of Prayer" (a very unusual Negro Spiritual by Reddick), "The Moon Drops Low" (Cadman) and "The Cross" (Harriet Ware).

Leonard Liebling Addresses the Festival Audience

Probably because of the announcement that Leonard Liebling would speak, there was an exceptional audience on this afternoon, and he was greeted most enthusiastically, having won his Lockport spurs the previous year.

As before, he devoted himself to a speech of glittering generalities, which was, however, shot through and through with good, commonsense ideas.

A few of the things said by Mr. Liebling were:

"The composers of a nation express its life and hope. Lockport is, therefore, a very important as well as characteristic thing."

"The Germans have long tried to tell us that all the best music came from Germany, but in spite of the war the leading tenor of the Grand Opera in Berlin today is an American."

"They tell us also that Americans cannot write music; but they said also that our soldiers could not fight."

"They dwell upon German efficiency and our lack of it; but the German Army was built up on German efficiency—and look at the d—— thing now!"

"Americans sing in all languages; the foreign artist usually can sing only in his own language."

"We have made great strides since the days when Ole Bull played all over this country his 'Imitation of Niagara' on the violin, or when the best salon pieces were given such names as 'The Whispering Rivulet,' in which the right hand did the 'whispering' and the left hand impersonated the rivulet.'"

He referred to conditions all over the country and spoke incidentally of the predicament in which Conductor Stock of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra finds himself.

He bade us remember, however, that even should Stock lose his position through the technicality that he is an alien enemy, he is still known absolutely as patriotic.

Mr. Liebling even had the courage to name some Americans whom he considered as possibilities for the positions left open through the interning of Germans in this country, and among them were Hadley, Spiering and Dunham.

"Our composers are now all-embracing and very adept," he continued. "We have a Cohan who can concoct a national rally song—i. e., 'Over There.' We have a Sousa who can write national marches; a Herbert who can compose light opera as well as anyone in the world; a Nevin and a Bond for soul songs, and a Berlin for our specialty—the 'rag.'"

He told us to cultivate imagination and ideals, and to beware of commercialism. And, speaking of inspiration, he said that a certain New York publisher had offered to give an outright bonus of $10,000 to anyone who could produce a second "Perfect Day."

"No one will win it," however," he said, "for the first 'Perfect Day' is an inspiration, and that is a quality which cannot be commanded by money."

Grace Brune-Marcusson, a Chicago soprano of style and high ideals, who had not previously appeared at Lockport, followed Mr. Liebling, singing "Come Down, Laughing Streamlet" (Spross), "In the Wood of Finvéra" (Burleigh), "My Menagerie" (a charming little burlesque by Fay Foster), "Awakening" (Mrs. Mason), "A Burst of Melody" (Seiler) and "Dear Lad o' Mine" (Branscombe).

Mrs. Marcusson has a lovely quality of voice and a very deft way of interpreting quiet songs, while in a brilliant one, such as that of Seiler, she is virtuosic and at the same time sincerely and consistently musical.

Not only in this group, but on her various other appearances, she was greeted with much enthusiasm, and Lockport said plainly, in enthusiastic applause, that she was desired for other appearances.

FREDERICA GERHARDT DOWNING

Carol Robinson, whose work as a pianist has placed her at such a high point in public esteem in Chicago, but who was also a newcomer to Lockport, was heard variously there and became a great favorite, both personally and for her charming and forceful playing.

At this time she presented the Arne Oldberg Sonata, Opus 28, with such a wonderful sweep of interpretative thought and such technical accuracy as to make it one of the features of the week.

Later (perhaps it was on another day) she played "Winter" and "Br'er Rabbit" (MacDowell) with rare discriminative sense of mood and proportion, and was heard also in the Carl M. Beecher F sharp minor Rhapsody, which, while it is an interesting and probably scholarly piece of writing, is entirely lacking in imagination or thrill, and was not a good vehicle for the display of Miss Robinson's best points, although she played it admirably.

The Mixed Quartet of Chicago, which has been taught by L. A. Torrens and coached by Albert Cotsworth, comprising Mable Corlew Smith, Lucy J. Hartman, George Darsie and John Rankel, came to the stage at this point, and with the assistance of Isabel Cline in a wonderfully high soprano obligato, presented a number from Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta." The work of the quartet was distinctive and the high tones of Miss Cline thrilling.

The remaining artist of the afternoon was Bessie Bown Ricker, the interpretative reader, who is so supreme a favorite at Lockport that no one else can hope to enter her realm.

Her specialty is child verse, and she does it so altogether exquisitely as to make it impossible to feel anything but sympathetic assent to whatever mood she presents and to compel always the tribute which is due to high art.

She appeared again and again during the week and charmed the audiences—great or small—morning, noon or night, with her skill, her philosophy, her humor and, perhaps most of all, her touches of pathos.

Bessie Bown Ricker is a great little artist, and Lockport wouldn't be Lockport without her.

Among the pieces read by Mrs. Ricker was a little verse written especially for her by Rev. J. Webster Bailey, D. D., a Lockport minister, who has always been a staunch upholder of the festival and who has contributed in countless ways to its success.

Another helpful minister, often on the programs in one way or another, is the Rev. Augustus Papperman, whose every asset—including his auto—is always at the disposal of the festival.

Other Lockportians who always help mightily are George W. Pound, who gave a wonderful address on Saturday morning on "America, the Greatest Music Loving and Music Producing Land in the World," and Mrs. M. A. B. Evans, a writer of poetry of national fame, who loves Lockport devotedly and has given freely of her presence and her talent to further the musical life there, and who is also devoted to the festival.

Wednesday Evening

One of the strongest concerts ever given at Lockport was that of Wednesday evening, this being called, properly, the Chicago concert, inasmuch as it enlisted the services of Charles W. Clark, baritone; Lucille Stevenson, soprano; Frederica Gerhardt Downing, contralto, and Edna Gunnar Peterson, pianist.

EDNA GUNNAR PETERSON

Mr. Clark, in glorious spirits and corresponding voice, sang a Homer group, which he has already made a classic through his remarkable manipulation.

This includes "Sheep and Lambs," "Uncle Rome," "Old Watt and the Rabbits" and "How's My Boy?"—all being done with superb style vocally and in intensely interesting interpretations.

More novel and equally beautiful was his second group, which included, first, "The Devil's Love Song" (Hallett Gilberte), a magnificent song, done in such a magnificent way as to evoke a storm of applause, followed by Three Small Songs of Ernest Leo of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, these being "My Bit," "Song of Riches" and "Silence Is Golden," piquant, as well as dainty trifles; "A Messenger," that wonderfully effective little tragedy of Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, which takes like wildfire whenever Mr. Clark sings it; "Absent," a suave bit of beauty by Frances Wyman, and a definite, distinct and remarkable novelty by Fay Foster, "The Americans Come," the song we have all been reading about and waiting for, and which, on its first arrival, proved Mr. Clark again a serious and resourceful artist and Miss Foster a very big composer.

The Gilberte, Sturkow-Ryder and Foster songs all had to be repeated, and the audience insisted upon personal thanks to each of the three composers, all of whom were in the audience.

Miss Stevenson, lovely and radiant, was also in perfect form and sang at the best of her artistic powers, which is quite the same thing as saying that she sang most beautifully.

Her numbers included, "What's the Use of Sighing?" a very definite little piece of music joy by Walter Goodell, Chicago; "Twilight," a quiet piece of Rummel, but fully as good as his "Ecstasy," so much used; "The Little Rain," a dainty conceit by Frances Wyman; "Her Love Song," a noble piece of work by Mary Turner Salter, and three songs by John Alden Carpenter, who is interpreted by no one better than by Miss Stevenson, if, indeed, anyone else has done so many of his songs or done them so well. Those chosen at this time were "When I Bring You Colored Toys," "Le Ciel," "Dansons la Gigue" and "Light."

For encore she used "The Home Road" (Carpenter) and showed it to be a commanding, as well as popular war song.

Mrs. Downing, completing the trio of great singers, all in exceptional form, like Miss Stevenson, came to her first appearance on the Lockport platform, and, like her, was rapturously received.

Her voice seems to have grown and broadened still more even since she was last heard, and at this time proved itself a very wonderful voice indeed.

Her first group included that big, bold song of Chadwick, "Allah," which seems to have been written for Mrs. Downing; "The Bitterness of Love" (Horssman) was sung extremely well, and a suave Cradle Song of MacFayden.

For her second group she sang "The Sea," by Grant-Schaeffer, and proved that the Chicago writer also had a noble conception of the picture, while "Don't Ceare" showed that she too knows her Carpenter, and "The Last Hour" proved that in this fine Chicago contralto Kreamer has found his really fine interpreter.

"When Thou Commandest Me to Sing," a remarkable work by Hammond, was so much liked that an encore was necessary and Mrs. Downing added "By the Waters of Minnetonka" (Lieurance).

Miss Peterson appeared but once on the program and scored so electric a success as to make herself a distinct and unforgetable feature.

She has buoyancy, as well as poise, and her amazing power is tempered properly with every available finesse, while in the matters of rhythm and sweep she is unexcelled by any young pianist before the public.

In "The Eagle" (MacDowell) she displayed the power to make a striking picture and to disclose a big story within the space of a few moments; "Winter," by the same composer, was remarkable in introspectivity, as well as tonal charm, and Edward Collins must needs be extremely grateful to Miss Peterson for the sane, but concisely brilliant way in which she delivered three of his difficult waltzes (Opus 15).

The group ended with "Polonaise Americaine," which, while it is not the best piece ever written by John Alden Carpenter, yet served to disclose brilliancy of technic and accuracy of accent and rhythm in the player in such abundance and so tempered with tonal finish as to make the piece seem much better than it is.

The Accompanists

The excellence of Harry M. Gilbert as accompanist for Mr. Clark at this concert, and the very fine work also of J. Warren Erb in like capacity for Miss Stevenson and Mrs. Downing, was subject of much comment.

The official accompanists of the week were these two, with the addition of Elizabeth Siedhoff and Blanche Sanders Walker in some events of every day and a scattering list appearing, each once or twice, besides the many composers, who at times played the accompaniments to their own songs.

Mr. Erb proved himself a rising artist in the line of accompanying throughout the week, doing many pieces of good work. Mrs. Walker was rather nondescript in most that she did and Miss Siedhoff again proved that she is not so good an accompanist as she is a solo player.

Mr. Gilbert was a distinct, definite and constant joy. He was always ready for any emergency and played remarkably well, often rising to accompanative elegance on more than one occasion on each day of the festival.

Evidently there is no limit to what he can do and he has become an institution unique at Lockport.

Thursday Morning

Beginning with Thursday there was a series of Composers' Concerts, and interest and delight ran evenly throughout the remaining three days.

On this morning, after singing by the Apollos and a fine address of welcome to the composers by J. Lawrence Erb, a group of songs by Rosalie L. Hausman was carefully and effectively given by Clarinda B. Smith, soprano.

Miss Hausman is distinctly futuristic in her work, but interesting withal and logical according to her beliefs.

The numbers presented were "On the Downs," "An Irish Nocturne" and "A Chinese Screen." All were interesting, but the second was so much the best liked that it had to be repeated.

The Artists' Ensemble Trio of Pittsburgh came next and easily proved itself one of the fine attractions of the week. The personnel is Blanche Sanders Walker, piano, Ruth Bowen Gibson, violin, and Myrtle June McAteer, cello, the last named being a pupil of Hans Hess of Chicago.

They have fine ensemble as well as individual excellence and chose for their vehicle a composition which gave wide scope to their powers; i. e., the beautiful Trio in D (Opus 50), by Charles Wakefield Cadman.

On another day they played equally as well and with splendid effect also the Trio, Opus 61 (Serenade), by Adolph M. Foerster of Pittsburgh.

This is a work of lyric beauty, intermixed copiously enough to make agreeable brilliancy, with various items of musical spice—the Allegro Molto being particularly joyful. The other two movements, "Tempo Rubato" and "Andante Sostenuto," are logical and very agreeable to hear.

Frederick W. Vanderpool, a thoroughly fine young New York composer, had his special quarter hour next and himself played a beautiful accompaniment for his "Ye Moanin' Mountains" (Negro Spiritual), "Design," "Love and Roses" and "I Did Not Know," sung exceedingly well by Edward Evans, tenor.

These proved to be songs of intelligent design and beautiful musical mood, as well as exhibiting splashes of color at logical moments and each one displaying also cohesiveness and design.

GAYLORD YOST

Richard Knotts, who made a previous successful appearance, came next, singing successfully "The Song of Brother Hilario," "A Patriotic Song," "Peggy" and "The Road's Lament," well written compositions by Ralph Cox, who was himself at the piano.

A group of songs followed which in themselves were fine and were also beautifully accompanied by their writer, Harry M. Gilbert. They were "Ah, Love, I Should Have Known," "Lead Gently, Lord," and "Spring's Rapture."

They were sung with great differentiation as to varying content, with pronounced emotionalism and in splendid musical style by Bertha Beeman, Chicago contralto, who not only at this time but throughout the week made herself known to the Lockport audience in no uncertain way and whose fine voice found constantly growing favor.

Thursday Afternoon

The inevitable Apollo Quartet appeared. Louise Lancaster, soprano, came on for a second time, singing "Come, Love, Across the Sunlit Land," "La Nuite de la Lune" and "Wai Ki Ki" (Charles T. Griffes), and the Ladies' Quartet of Chicago (Miss Cline, Mrs. Smith, Miss Hartman and Mrs. Darsie) sang "The Sweetest Flower That Blows" (Crawley), so exquisitely that it had to be repeated at once.

Minnie C. Hubbard, the Mankato (Minn.) violinist, who had appeared previously with marked success, came on again, this time introducing four American women in violin compositions.

These were "Love Song" (Helen Ware), "Minuet" (Irma Seydel), "La Captive" (Mrs. H. H. A. Beach) and "Berceuse" (Marguerite Melville).

This constituted a charming group, at once violinistic and full of mood values, and Mrs. Hubbard, a player of rich, sweet tone and suave style, gave a lucid and altogether attractive reading of the numbers.

Olive Nevin, a favorite of the week, gave a group of songs by Gena Branscombe which had great intelligence back of beautiful musical qualities.

The pieces were characteristic and well contrasted and the group made a fine impression, both for Miss Branscombe and Miss Nevin. The list was "Three Mystic Ships," "Dear Lad o' Mine" (as fine a song as one could wish), "The Morning Wind" (already a popular favorite) and "Radiant as the Morning."

Miss Nevin, as usual, preluded each song with explanatory matter and again proved herself adept.

Marguerite Ringo, "the singer with sunshine in her voice," as someone said at the festival, and surely also with unusual charm of manner and beauty of interpretative feeling, brought to notice next a group of songs by Harvey Worthington Loomis and had the advantage of his own deft and beautiful accompaniment.

"A Little Dutch Garden," always a delight, re-emphasized its charm. "Awake" provided a genuine thrill as manipulated by Miss Ringo, and the "Chinese Lullaby" proved itself a song worthy of any artist's attention.

Grace Brune-Marcusson made an added appearance and sang with beautiful thought and musicianship a group of songs by Edward Horssman, the American composer, so lately deceased that he was programmed to play the accompaniment for her.

The group included the deservedly popular "Bird of the Wilderness" and "The Yellow Dusk," "Yon Are the Evening Clouds" and "The Shepherdess."

The accompaniments were beautifully played by the invaluable Mr. Gilbert.

The remaining item of the program was the glorious Sonata for Violin and Piano, by John Alden Carpenter, and it was given a reading by Amy Emerson Neill and Carol Robinson, which would have warmed the cockles of his heart to hear. It is too big a work for desultory mention, but will doubtless be heard often from the great artists, but this writer never expects to hear a finer reading than that at Lockport by the Misses Neill and Robinson.

Thursday Evening

An entire article could be written about Thursday evening and it is difficult to do the necessary boiling down when there was such a mass of wonderful and effective material presented.

To begin with, the most characteristic as well as a magnificently brilliant half hour was that devoted to an Operalogue on "Shanewis" (Charles Wakefield Cadman), given sympathetically and brilliantly by Mary Jones Sherrill and J. Warren Erb, both of Pittsburgh.

The choosing of piano excerpts was adroitly done and skilfully presented by Mr. Erb, who certainly has a rare gift for this sort of work. Mrs. Sherrill, the possessor of noble style, splendid speaking voice, and being also a good singer, explained the story and read the text in a fascinating way.

It is impossible to detail this remarkable performance more than to say that the themes were made perfectly clear by Mr. Erb, and the scene was held vividly before the mind by Mrs. Sherrill.

"Shanewis" is at once an apostrophe to the Indian and a protest against the wrongs he has suffered at the hands of the White Man.

In this work all American music development is exemplified. There is much of Indian characteristic and color, there is originality as well as terror in "The Impending Doom" theme and excitement in "The Poisoned Arrow" item.

"The Song of the Robin Woman" is lyric delight and the "Ojibwa Canoe Song" is one in which woodland notes are changed to refined lyric charm.

Following came the idol of Lockport, the woman who can sway there as no one else may hope to do—Carrie Jacobs Bond.

When she appeared on the stage, both at this time and on the following afternoon, every man, woman and child in the place rose to his or her feet in salute to her and the applause was deafening. Mrs. Bond was deeply affected and reacted to the occasion with one of the most charming half hours this writer has ever heard her do, and that, surely, is a big statement.

She gave at this time and the next day some "Old Man" stories and displayed the old chuckle in pristine working order and her rare philosophy still intact.

She recited "Practicing" and made the audience howl with delight. She brought a tear to every eye through the deft suggestion in "His Buttons Are Marked U. S.," and as a special favor to Lockport she sang beautifully "The End of a Perfect Day," a song which she has steadily refused to put on anywhere for the last two years.

She regaled us again with a lot of the "Half Minute" songs; did "Make Believe" as beautifully as I have ever heard her do it, and was altogether herself—the incomparable manipulator of emotions.

But, she did some new things too. Some fine things they were, and the audience could not get enough of the first of these, "My Son," which is full of heartbreak as well as of renunciation, and which is her fine contribution to the war song library of the country.

Also, she was fine, positively, in "Out in the Fields," her setting of beautiful Browning text, and "Your Song," one of her best as well as newest melodies, set to lovely text by George O'Connell of Chicago.

It was worth going to Lockport to see the ovation given to Carrie Jacobs Bond and to hear her again in her delightful entertainment.

On Sunday afternoon two of the Bond songs were beautifully presented by Bertha Beeman (with Mrs. Bond at the piano), and at a previous occasion two of the Children's Songs were given most sympathetically by Bessie Bown Ricker.

Another big item of this fine evening was a group of the Fay Foster songs given by Mable Corlew Smith, Lacy Coe and Miss Foster, the group comprising "Somewhere" (which is of exquisite texture), "Your Kiss," thrilling song), "Dusk in June" and "Were I Your Star," which is bravura to the last degree.

Mrs. Smith, in magnificent form throughout the week; Mr. Coe, artistic as few violinists have ever been in this sort of ensemble, and Miss Foster, glowing and pulsating in co-operation, made of this group something to remember and scored an immediate success worth special recording.

Miss Foster played also some more unimportant and unimpressive things for Miss Stowe and was also represented by a number given by the Chorus, a piece called "In the Carpenter's Shop," for women's voices.

The Chorus, conducted by Alfred Jury of Buffalo, was composed of seventy-five voices and made a number of successful appearances during the week. Their singing of William Arms Fisher's arrangement of "Deep River" was particularly impressive.

Another item presented by this body of singers at this time was "You Is Jes' as Sweet," a cunning conceit by Hallett Gilberte, who himself made the piano sparkle in accompaniment. Nothing given in ensemble during the week had a quicker appeal or more direct touch than this.

Ida Geer Weller, by this time grown to be a great favorite, came again to the stage and was vociferously greeted by the immense audience present. She chose as her medium of expression this time the work of another Pittsburgh woman, Mrs. Gertrude Martin Rohrer, and sang "The Sea," "Love's on the Highroad," and the patriotic "Your Land and My Land," with clear intonation, beautiful enunciation and definite dramatic and emotional values.

Mrs. Weller has a great many of the attributes which are unusual in a singer and which make for great success. She is sparkling and dramatic as well as thoroughly sympathetic to thoroughly refined text, and always she suits her tone to the text mood, something much more difficult to do than it sounds in the telling.

Friday Morning

Friday was another day with the composers, and began brilliantly and logically with a violin group by Hallett Gilberte, most beautifully played by Lacy Coe. Mr. Gilberte, talented in limitless ways seemingly, proved at this time that he understands and can write with great effectiveness for the violin, while Mr. Coe again demonstrated his skill and his artistry.

The numbers were "Spanish Serenade," "Berceuse" (incorporating "Bye, Bye, Baby Bunting") and "Gavotte."

Next followed the paper on "Commercialism" by the Editor of Music News.

In this there was advocated the principle that musicians must needs study money valuations, as related to music, more thoroughly, and the slogan was proposed for adoption by musicians, "Nothing for nothing."

In response to many requests, this paper will be printed in full in the columns of Music News next week.

Two groups of songs were next presented by composers whose works are being sent out by Witmark & Sons, New York.

These were Robert Huntington Terry and David Wendel Guion, both of whom were present to play their own works.

Mr. Terry was so fortunate as to secure as his collaborator George Darsie, Chicago tenor, who sang with good tone and much musicianship, "I Never Knew," "Don't You?" and "The West"—all good songs, the first being, perhaps, the best.

Mr. Guion is a young southerner and specializes in Negro spirituals, founded on themes sung him by his own colored "mammy" not so many years ago.

"Poor Sinner," "Nobody Knows de Troubles I Seen," "Some o' These Days" and "The Ghostly Gallery" were all effective, and this composer also was fortunate in his interpreter, Lillian Rose Veatch.

This young lady has presence and style, and her vocal art is already well developed and gives promise of still greater things, for she is, evidently, a girl with brains.

Friday Afternoon

Frank H. Grey, not being present, his songs were played for Theresa Lynch, who had chosen them, by one of the regular festival accompanists.

The songs were "Only a Little While," "For You and Me" and "Think, Love, of Me," the second being the best, but all well done by Miss Lynch.

Harriet Case, fully recovered from an indisposition which had hampered her earlier, came again to the stage and proved herself delightful in a group of songs by John H. Densmore, which were more or less familiar. Mr. Coe assisted with his violin, and the group was intensely beautiful, including "Kiss Me Good-Night," "April," "In a Field" and "Awake, My Heart, to Gladness."

Miss Case can take an extremely high note with the most wonderfully sweet pianissimo, and can do about what she pleases with it afterward, but this high tone manipulation is not all she can do by any means.

She had in the last Densmore song a full voice bravoura throughout her scale, which was big and true, and throughout the group she showed great powers of differentiation, both as regards musical and text values of the songs she presented.

Ida Geer Weller made still another appearance at this time, and again did she honor a Pittsburgh woman, Anna Priscilla Risher, although this time the composer was not present to play her own songs.

They were, "As in Old Gardens," "Always One More Dawn," "A Baby's Hair Is Built of Sun" and "The Heart of June," all agreeable, if not great songs, and in every case sympathetically and effectively presented by Mrs. Weller, who, as said before, is a singer of the greatest versatility.

An addition to the program, at once indicative and beautiful, was a group of the songs of Williams Arms Fisher, sung with great breadth of voice and refinement of style, as well as clear interpretative values, by Bertha Lansing Rodgers.

These were the very familiar and always popular "Under the Rose," "Swing Low," "I Wonder Why" and the remarkably fine Negro spiritual, "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child," all accompanied very wonderfully by Mr. Fisher himself.

At this point there occurred a number which should have been better placed, for, being so great a work as it is, and lengthy, it needed to be almost alone on an afternoon program.

Reference is made to Cadman's very beautiful and wholly great quartet cycle, "The Morning of the Year," which was sung at this time by Mrs. Smith, Miss Hartman, Mr. Darsie and Mr. Rankel.

To Charles E. Watt, Esq.
Mr. Charles E. Watt
With the Quartette
Mrs. Ethelbert Nevin

ETHELBERT NEVIN

New York July 6th 1905.

As you know, each solo voice has at least two big numbers, and at this time these were all done excellently.

The ensembles, too, were full of charm, even as they were also good exponents of fine musicianship, and the audience, especially the more critical portion, found this number very delightful.

Friday Evening

The evening of this remarkably full day was devoted to Arthur Hartmann and Hallett Gilberte—the same artistic trio, Mrs. Smith, Mr. Coe and Mr. Gilberte again ravishing the musical senses with the beauty of their work in "Ah, Love, but a Day," which was thrilling; "Minuet la Phyllis," which was tantalizing; "An Evening Song," which was unusually true to caption, and "Spring Serenade," which was exhilarating in the extreme.

Mr. Hartman was best shown, of course, in his violin number, for he is an artist supreme and played admirably a "Largo" (Vivaldi), "Humoreske" (Tschaikowski), "Dancing Doll" (Poldini), in arrangements of his own, and his very own "Cradle Song," "Souvenir" and "Aria from "Old Style Suite."

Edith Thompson, who had a previous appearance, made a fine impression in the Hartmann "Paysage Russe," "Tania" and "An American Prelude," and Charles W. Clark repeated the triumphs of Wednesday night in "A Fragment," "A Child's Grace," "When I Walk With You," "Cherry Ripe" and "A Ballade"—good songs all—but "Cherry Ripe" seeming to be quickest in public appreciation.

The Banquet

Following this, the Lockport people put their autos at the service of the guests and after reaching the attractive Country Club, tendered there a banquet which was enjoyed to the utmost by a very large company, many of whom remained to dance till morning.

The speeches at this time were full of interest, as well as thought, and contained much statement of facts and hopes relative to Lockport, which will be told in Music News at another time.

Saturday Morning

On Saturday morning, Marguerite Potter, clear of voice and decisive of style, sang "Southern Dialect Song" (Rogers), "Let Miss Lindy Pass" (Johnson), "I Want to Be Ready" (Burleigh), "When Mammy's Away" and "You is Jes' as Sweet" (Gilberte). These were done in a very quaint costume and constituted an attractive feature of the week.

The Chicago Ensemble Trio (Miss Siedhoff substituting for Senaca Pierce) again delighted the audience greatly, presenting "At Dawning" and "From the Land of the Sky Blue Water" (Cadman), and "Sioux Serenade" and "By the Waters of Minnetonka" (Lieurance), and the morning closed with some fine duet singing by Grace Brune-Marcusson and John Rankel, their media of expression being "A Canadian Boat Song" (Beach) and "Awake, Dearest One" (Ball).

Saturday Afternoon

John Rankel, Chicago Baritone, who had been indisposed earlier in the week, was presented at this time in the previously announced group, and scored the success that had been expected after his realistic and telling work in a number of ensembles.

His voice was in fine condition and his artistic powers and well-known dramatic qualities were well shown in the group he chose to present.

"Blue Are Her Eyes" (Winter Watts) was a piece of suave delight; the "Soldier's Song from Paola and Francesca" (Bernice Wyer) proved interesting; "At Twilight" did honor to Herbert E. Hyde of Chicago (its composer) as well as to Mr. Rankel, and "I Have a Rendezvous With Death" (Jeanne Boyd) brought to the attention of the audience one of the finest songs of the entire week—a song pulsating with meaning and full of intensity.

Edward Evans, good musician and fine tenor, made another appearance, singing "The Last Hour" (Kraemer), "The Dearest Place" (John P. Scott), "Young Warrior" (Burleigh) and "Give a Man a Horse He Can Ride" (J. O'Hara).

Following this came "Forty-five Minutes With Ethelbert Nevin," this being in line with the idea that some composers of a little while ago ought to be given a definite hour on the programs.

This period opened with a paper by Charles E. Watt, in which he explained that he had consented to resurrect a part of a lecture-recital given formerly by himself (perhaps in a previous incarnation), if Mme. Sturkow-Ryder and Olive Nevin would collaborate in piano and song numbers.

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder chose to play the

OLIVE NEVIN

"Water Scenes" and the Barcarolle, and she did them all wonderfully well.

Her musical thought is just delicate enough for Nevin, the while it is so crisp and definite as to avoid too great sentimentality even in the "Narcissus."

This remarkably popular piece was so well played by the pianist that when she came to the stage for encore the audience shouted out its desire to hear it again, which was promptly and beautifully gratified by the player.

Miss Nevin, a cousin of Ethelbert Nevin, sang "Before the Dawn" very exquisitely and did three of the children's songs with great charm, after which she gave the biggest of all the Nevin songs, the "Nocturne," that throbbing, potent text in which the timid lover sees his lady lean from her window and take to her bosom the Romeo rose, and he sighs "Ah, me, 'twas he that won her, because he dared to climb."

On her reappearance on the stage Miss Nevin had the same experience as had Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, and the audience, with great unaminity, demanded "The Rosary," which she gave with rare style and feeling.

The period closed with beautiful singing of "The Night has a Thousand Eyes," by Mrs. Smith, Mr. Darsie and Mr. Rankel.

Gertrude Darsie was heard at this point in a group of songs which showed her rich, clear voice to much advantage and which, late as it was in the week, endeared her to the Lockport clientele.

She used "I Am Thy Harp" (Woodman), "A Maid Sings Light" (MacDowell), and

MINNIE C. HUBBARD

"A Serenade" (Spross), investing them with charm and variety as well as vocal art.

Mr. Darsie followed with a second solo appearance in which he showed growth as well as the same beauty of tone as before.

"Jean" and "Yesterday and Today" (Spross) were very well done, the second especially, and an aria from Dudley Buck's "The Legend of Don Muzio" proved that Mr. Darsie has variety as well as power.

The afternoon closed with a duet for Mr. and Mrs. Darsie, their medium of expression being, "Dews of the Summer Night," from the same (Dudley Buck), Cantata and their work in ensemble having all the good qualities of their solo appearances plus a very sympathic blend of voice and musicianship. ♮ ♮ ♮

Saturday Evening.

Saturday evening had but two serious musical groups, but the first proved to be one of the wholly definite and artistic musical joys of the week.

This was a solo group by Bertha Beeman, contralto, and it displayed her fine voice to distinct advantage.

Miss Beeman has impressive appearance on the stage and she sings with style as well as authority.

In "Invocation to Eros" (Kursteiner), she created a proper atmosphere at once and built up, logically and skillfully, a very impressive climax.

Katherine Glen's lovely "Twilight" found in her a wholly sympathic interpreter and "June Time," a crisp delight by Elthea Snider, was given in like manner and with added tonal beauty.

"Possession," an entirely new song (to me at least) by Earl C. Sharp, proved to be a good one and also a fine medium for Miss Beeman's voice, while "Life's Paradise"

BESSIE BOWN RICKER

(Mary Helen Brown) capped the climax of brilliancy and effect.

Altogether Miss Beeman's group, which was well placed as well as excellently chosen, made a fine impression and left the feeling strongly in evidence that she will be more than welcome at any time she returns to Lockport.

Miss Siedhoff, whom we have already named as a better solo pianist than accompanist, again proved the fact at this moment, giving brilliant, as well as differential reading to "Prelude in D Minor" (Courtlandt Palmer), "Concert Etude" (Dennee), which was hardly worth the effort, "Berceuse Trieste" (Charles Fonteyn Manney), which is full of thought as well as introspective beauty and two movements from the stupid Suite Op. 2 by F. S. Converse.

The Humoreske

Then came "The Humoreske," an event which had drawn a packed house through the previously acquired reputation of Harry M. Gilbert, its director, of skill in funning.

This writer had to leave midway of this startling program, but remained long enough to see and hear the wonderful chorus and orchestra, and to witness a few of the more striking characters in costume, including Sturkow-Ryder as a School Girl; John Rankel as a Chautauqua Youth, George Darsie as Pierrot, and Hallett Gilberte as a Child Prodigy.

Altogether the event was provocative of a series of screams of laughter and it is hoped that it will be possible to leave Lockport at a later hour next year.

"Star Spangled Banner"

So many people helped to make the meeting a success that it is almost futile to try to mention them all.

Miss Howard of the Buffalo Enquirer, reported the Festival for a Lockport local paper and was very helpful.

A good many publishers' agents were present and helped make a very discriminating audience. Among those was Miss Joseph of Witmark's, Mr. Priaulx of Ditson's, Mr. Fisher of Boston.

Many helped socially. The Lockport people were enthusiastic in support and in sociability.

And last, but far from least, J. Lawrence Erb of Illinois, who was presiding officer for a third time, again proved himself symphatetic, artistic, practical and wonderfully effective.

M. T. N. A.

Reports from widely scattered members of the Music Teachers' National Association indicate that an unexpectedly large attendance will be one of the features of the annual meeting at St. Louis December 30-31 and January 1 next. The plans of the standing committees interest so many persons and are including so many features of value to every teacher that they are attracting general attention. The work of the Affiliation Committee, of which J. Lawrence Erb of the University of Illinois is chairman, is bringing about a very desirable condition. Max Swarthout of Decatur, Ill., is a new member of the Standardization Committee of which Charles H. Farnsworth of Teachers' College, New York, is chairman. Dean Carl E. Seashore of the State University of Iowa will present a paper at the St. Louis meeting on "An Analysis of the Traits of the Musical Mind," and will provide opportunity for certain tests and demonstrations during the convention. Messrs. Leon R. Maxwell of New Orleans and Lynn B. Dana of Warren, O., will discuss the problems of music teachers during present abnormal conditions. Throughout the meeting stress will be laid upon the subject of the musician's duties and place in the community. At the piano conference, to be conducted by E. R. Kroeger of St. Louis, Miss Alice Pettingill of St. Louis will talk on Walter Swayne's ensemble class in Paris, and E. A. Schubert of St. Charles, Mo., will have a paper on "The Piano Hand." New items are being added to the convention program almost daily, and the entire list will soon be ready for publication.

Yung—Mme. Yung has just received word from The Thaviu Band and Opera Company, with whom seven of her pupils are now on tour, to the effect that the girls were enthusiastically received and met with remarkable success in Des Moines, Iowa, last week. The patriotic number was a big feature on the program and received enviable applause. This week the company will appear at Indianapolis.

# # #

Neumann—Mr. and Mrs. F. Wight Neumann, 3155 Michigan avenue, have left their summer home at Butternut Bay, Thousand Islands, and are at present at Saranac Lake. They expect to stay in the Adirondack mountains until the middle of September.

# # #

Craven—Carl E. Craven, tenor, will sing two groups of duets with Miss Beulah Hayes, soprano, and the Lament from "Pagliacci" and a group of four songs by Thayer, Ryder, Salter and Foster, at the Edgewater Beach Musicale next Sunday, Sept. 15, at 4 p. m.

# # #

Mandy—Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Mandy have returned from their summer vacation and have reopened their studios in Kimball Hall.

# # #

Olin—Nora Loraine Olin has removed to 605 Kimball Hall, where she alternates days with Frances Frothingham. This is an ideal arrangement, for the voice pupils of Miss Olin are to have the advantage of certain theoretical classes of Miss Frothingham while the theory pupils of the latter will have vocal class work with Miss Olin.

Mischa Levitzki and Esther Ferrabini Appear for the Red Cross at Avon, N. J.

When Labor day of 1918 expired, vacation days were over—if such days can be had in war times. On Sept. 1 the Club House of Avon-on-the-Sea (New Jersey) was taxed to its capacity, when a Red Cross concert was given for the vacationists. From the neighboring resorts a select and discriminative audience came in great numbers to listen to the genial playing of Mischa Levitzki, the marvelous pianist; Esther Ferrabini, soprano, who made herself famous with her eventful impersonation of Carmen with the San Carlo Opera Company; Bernardo Olshansky, a brilliant bass-baritone, and Rafael Diaz, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Mme. Quintero and Signor Jacchia officiated as accompanists. The applause was vehement, and encores multiplied. Each of the soloists gave the best of his talents and the listeners spent one enjoyable evening.

The American Society of Singers

The opening of the above organization will take place on Sept. 23 at the Park theater. The following works are announced for the first week: "Mignon," by Ambrose Thomas, with Maggie Teyte, Yvonne de Treville and Herbert Witherspoon; "The Daughter of the Regiment," with Bianca Soroya, David Bispham and George Hamlin; "Carmen," with Marguerite Sylva, Riccardo Martin and Henri Scott.

Galli-Curci at Ocean Grove, N. J.

The vacationists of the Jersey coast received the first treat from the voice of Galli-Curci. Long before the diva appeared the house was completely sold out. Thousands of curious people and anxious folks as well as professional artists tried to secure seats, but the answer was "too late." There were over seven thousand people and the government also had its share in the cashing in of war taxes. To describe her singing we should have to turn on again the wheel of praise. It is sufficient to say that those who were fortunate to secure seats broke out into a stampede of bravos, cheers and, it may be said, that even Enrico Caruso when he sang "Over There" did not succeed in getting the unheard-of applause which the auditorium of Ocean Grove tendered to Galli-Curci. A frenzied people is the best term applied. The program consisted of all the battle horses used by Galli-Curci in concert; encores were flashed until the folks got weary of clapping their hands. The talk of the New Jersey vacationists was Galli-Curci, and it may be added as a curiosity that phonograph lovers, the day after the concert, invaded the shops seeking records, until the storekeepers were left without a single record.

Metropolitan Announces Novelties

The sphynx has spoken: The management announces some novelties for the coming season, but no names of re-engaged or new forces. Presumably by the time this reaches our readers more information will creep out. The two novelties announced are by two Americans. Many manuscripts were submitted to Signor Giulio Gatti Casazza, but only Joseph Carl Breil with "The Legend," book by Jacques Byrne, and John Adam Hugo with "The Temple Dancer" were passed favorably for presentation. The other novelties, three in number, are by Giacomo Puccini, and they will be conducted by Maestro Roberto Moranzoni, who is at present in Italy studying them. The novelties are: "The Tabarro" (The Mantle), libretto by Guiseppe Adami, and "Sister Angelica," a mystery playlet opera,

THE WARRINGTON, OAK PARK

Rejuvenated and very much improved, Pyre's Popular Players opened the Fall season at the Warrington Theater on last Saturday, and nightly ever since have been playing the splendid comedy, "Marrying Money," to big audiences and enthusiastic applause.

Not being able to attend until Tuesday evening, this writer is prevented by time limitations from giving so elaborate a review as the merit of the company warrants, but he intends to do better next time.

The writers of the play, Washington Pezet and Bertram Worburgh, have certainly made a "ten strike" in this work, and the Pyre Players have just as surely digested the content very thoroughly and are able to present it with utmost of conviction.

Not to detail all of the acts, it may yet be said in passing that in the first act there is a lot of good, sensible talk about the American business man, and it is shown clearly that in the majority of cases he cannot "retire," because his family will not cease its "aspiring."

"You make money in Keokuk," said he, "and your family insists, sooner or later, in making a splurge in New York. Then it must needs be a fling in Washington, and finally the spending of a fortune in London; after which a merciful God puts an end to it all by physical limitations."

The players are excellently cast this week. Mr. Pyre, suave, insouciant and routined, is an ideal Frank, and Mrs. Pyre is pretty, vivacious and appealing as Mildred, who marries "for money" but decides to "remain" married after developing genuine love for Ted.

This attractive youth, attractively played by Karl Way, shows a considerable yellow streak during the progress of the play, but his innate manliness, well depicted by Mr. Way, shone forth in "true blue" at the end.

The Bellboy was neatly and humorously done by Jean De Perioe, a newcomer to the company, who will certainly be an attractive addition.

Mrs. Niles, the silly and scheming American parvenue, was exceedingly well done by Cora King, while the unimportant part of Mrs. Augustus Vanderpool was adequately done by Miss Angela Baker, and the Maid proved to have been safely placed when it was given to Miss Margaret Adams.

Harry Castle was fair only in the part of Mr. Niles, but in the last act, where he "doubled" in the part of Tim O'Flannegan, he was splendid.

Miss Jean Cooper, a very attractive personality, was personable and clear-cut as Gladys, though she, in common with all the women, excepting Mrs. Pyre, should study clarity of enunciation.

The affectation of an eastern accent and drawl is unnecessary.

Jimmy Sweeny, a breezy, comic part, was played breezily and clearly by Robert Valentine.

Another newcomer to the company, who, however, is no stranger to Oak Park audiences, is Allen York, who made so fine a reputation as director and chief actor of the Community Players in that suburb last Winter.

Mr. York had the important and difficult role of Count Sebastian, in which he simulated foreign mannerisms and the quaintly broken speech adopted by the character in America, admirably.

This character, light and volatile at first, develops into a really fine one in the last act, and at this moment Mr. York rose to genuine emotionalism, and he scored also a genuine success. C. E. W.

A PUBLICITY MONTH

Last year Music News inaugurated the plan of a Publicity Month instead of having, as had been its custom, an Anniversary Number.

Such was the success of this venture that we have decided to retain it as a permanent policy of the paper and therefore announce that of the current year will be our

SECOND PUBLICITY MONTH

It is desirable—in fact, necessary—that a special announcement of plans should be made in the Fall, and every artist and teacher—following the vacation time—should have a little extra PUBLICITY, calling attention to his plans and purposes of the coming year.

A Publicity Month is more sensible than a single Special Number, for it divides attention, thus preventing the presentation of so great a mass of material at one time as to be indigestible, and, also, it provides a more extended announcement.

AND IT IS CHEAPER

We can afford, through the wholesaling of space, to offer a special reduction on advertisements taken for two or more issues of the PUBLICITY MONTH.

In this respect our plan will be the same as last year, and we therefore offer our advertising columns in the Publicity Month issues not only at regular card rates for one insertion but, further, we will give a reduction of ten per cent on two display ads used during the month, or fifteen per cent on the four issues.

TO ILLUSTRATE: A quarter-page display ad is listed at $15 in any issue. The price remains the same in any of the four October issues and, in addition, on two insertions of the advertisement during that month we will give a reduction of ten per cent, or on four issues a reduction of fifteen per cent—thus the advertisement would cost $27 for two times or $51 for four.

We will sell no pictures nor any reading notices for these issues, both these being contrary to U. S. Postal law, but we want every artist in the country, and especially every Chicago artist, to buy display advertisement space and we will back up every advertisement by giving the issues a very wide circulation and will, in every way, endeavor to make them thoroughly attractive from a news standpoint.

Reserve space early. Come in and talk it over with us, or write for further particulars.

If you intend to place a standing card in Music News, even if no more than a Directory Card, you should place it before October, in order to have the special benefit of the Publicity Month Issues.

SECOND METROPOLITAN SEASON OF THE SAN CARLO OPERA COMPANY—FIRST WEEK

Reviewed by Joseph De Valdor

"Aida"

When Labor took its annual legal recess, the San Carlo forces gave the first signal of the 1918-19 season at the Shubert theater. That Fortune Gallo left a lasting impression on his first New York season cannot be doubted. In spite of the fact that vacation days were not over, and though Labor day carried away thousands of people to the country, there were no seats for the opening night, and if the theater had been of a large capacity more people would have poured into the house. The Shubert theater is inadequate for opera; bad acoustics draw away the atmosphere. The stage is limited. Under such circumstances the chorus had to put up with many obstacles, and the stage management could not give us the proper spirit in the scenery. Once more the question of municipal opera houses comes to the fore. When Mr. Gallo retires from the field he will have left something to be done by our municipal authorities. The "Aida" performance brought two new singers with the company. The principal female part was interpreted by Elizabeth Amsden, formerly of the Chicago Opera Company. In justice to her it may be said that her performance was of better quality than when she appeared under Campanini's forces. Leone Zinovieff, the Russian tenor, saved the evening by his substituting for Manuel Salazar, whose arrival from Costa Rica was delayed. After the "Celeste Aida" the tenor claimed the victory of the evening. He demonstrated that the adverse criticism of a Chicago morning paper was unjustified. He received an ovation for his brilliant vocalization. The balance of the artists were the same who appeared last year. Stella Demette repeated her excellent impersonation of Amneris, and Joseph Royer his correct vitalization of Amonasro. The rest of the singers need no commendation. At the baton we noted a new leader for the organization, but not for the opera habitue. Signor Gaetomo Merola, formerly of the Manhattan, gave an excellent exhibition of musicianship, control of musicians and soloists, and brought throughout the performance results which have gratified even the cynical critic. There is no doubt that under his guidance the performances will attain the higher level of popular priced performances. In the audience the newly married Caruso was discovered and cheered, which compelled a response from the Neapolitan tenor.

"Rigoletto"

There is little to be said about this performance. The past year's interpreters were again on the board, save for Signor Enzo Bozzano Casso, who, in the part of Sparafucile, took the first vocal honors of the evening. Signor Bozzano is the possessor of a rare basso profundo voice, and such voice would fill the gap existing in the Chicago Opera. His voice is sweet, powerful and sonorous; besides, he gives intelligent acting. Mme. Vaccari as Gilda, Antola as Rigoletto, Stella Demette as Maddalena, and Guiseppe Agostini as the Duke, completed the cast. The last year's conductor, Signor Peroni, was at the baton—this time in the uniform of a sailor—for the leader is bandmaster at Pelham Bay. His uniform led the public to a warm applause. The audience was large. The performance was given for the benefit of the Red Cross. On Sept. 4 the house was sold out when "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci" were given under the admirable leadership of Gaetomo Merola. In the first, Elisabeth Amsden sang Santuzza and Romeo Boscacci, Turiddu; Merola was Alfio in "Pagliacci." Manuel Salazar, who finally reached our shores from Costa Rica, repeated his last year's success of Canio. Merola sang Tonio; Estelle Wentworth, Nedda; and Dellemolle, Silvio. In the afternoon "Tales of Hoffman" was given before a fair attendance, with Queen Mario as Olympia, of whom I shall speak in a future appearance. The cast enlisted Cervi, Royer and Agostini.

"Carmen"

The first French opera season attracted a capacity house. Standees were numerous. The leading part was again interpreted by Esther Ferrabini, and, as last season, she gave again a characteristic impersonation of the cigarette girl. Though not in the best of voice, besides the lack of acoustics, the timbre was at all times of a nature to please the listeners. As a whole, all Carmens care little for the singing part; their devotion is wholly concentrated on the histrionic side. Mme. Esther Ferrabini gave a moving picture of the Spanish girl in all its potency. The last act was a powerful dramatization of Merimee's story; the card scene and the entire third act was an emotional tableau of the wayward woman. In all, the writer prefers her in the dramatic scene than in the gay side of Carmen. She was again rewarded with applause. Queen Mario, a pupil of Sembrich, reappeared as Micaela, and proved a better asset in this opera than in "Tales of Hoffman." Romeo Boscacci substituted Salazar, who was indisposed, and, in the "Flower Song" at least, he did justice to himself. The off key singing of Joseph Royer marred the role of Escamillo. The leading figure of the performance was Gaetomo Merola at the baton, and through his keen knowledge of the scores, he gave effective help to the soloists and extracted all the beauty from the limited orchestra of thirty-one.

On Saturday matinee, Sept. 7, "Romeo and Juliet" was given, with Ralph Errole and Queen Mario. In the evening, "Trovatore," with Leone Zinovieff, Antola and Amsden. The first week was a successful one from a financial point of view, and it is expected to still draw larger audiences owing to the cool weather and the more interesting operas announced for the second and final week.

On Friday evening "Faust" was given, with Agostini and Marcella Craft.

Albert Spalding Talks on Music and War

(From the New York Sun, September 1)

"It would be difficult, not to say impossible, for me to answer your question as to my impression of the Italian front and of the heroic valor and endurance of our troops and those of our allies," said Albert Spalding. "First because words are cheap things with which to express all that one feels; and second, because of my uniform I am not permitted to discuss military matters in any way. But I must say as an American that we feel proud and happy to be able to work side by side with Italy in her great fight for national freedom and aspirations."

Lieutenant Spalding was then asked to express his views in regard to musical Italy and the effect that the war would have on music in general. He said:

"It is my belief that music will take a more prominent place in people's lives, and in fact is taking a more vital place now than ever before. Guglielmo Ferrero, the historian, once said: 'Art is a pleasure without a need.' I wonder if he would repeat that statement today. Life, from a material standpoint, has during these past four years come to be made of sterner stuff than it was in the inconsequential days which preceded the great war.

"People have sacrificed and suffered to the utmost extent. Material pleasures have had to be given up one by one. Distractions, luxuries and manifold interests have narrowed themselves down and become merged into one great spiritual, mental and physical effort—winning the war for democracy.

"The psychological result of this will be to prepare and fit people more for the great consolation and mental uplift that art, and especially music, can give. For the pleasures of the body will be substituted the pleasures of the mind, by necessity at first and by choice afterward. Books will be read, pictures looked at and music listened to with greater attention, interest and concentration than ever before.

"More will be got from them; more will be demanded of them. No patience will be shown the charlatans, the faddists and the tricksters who hitherto have owed their facile success to the easy credulity of a public who would go inconsequentially to their art much in the same state of mind as they would go to a fashionable restaurant.

"Remember that the intelligent listener, the layman, plays almost as important a role in the development of the music of his country as does the executive musician, the composer or the interpreter. His is the right and indeed the duty to demand the best and nothing but the best.

"He should not applaud an acknowledged success simply because somebody else has told him it was good. There is nothing to be ashamed of in saying 'I do not understand,' or 'I do not like such and such a work.' Enjoyment of art, looking through the eyeglasses of another person, is not enjoyment at all, or at least it is only enjoyment of the faded and pale kind that people have who are contented to know the great pictures of the world only through reproductions and cheap chromos. They get the surface without the substance; it is food without a taste.

"We will have no patience with musicians, composers and interpreters generally who have a vocabulary of many words but have nothing to say. The vocabulary, the dictionary, is as necessary in music as it is in literature, but jugglers of notes and jugglers of words can never give us what we really want—the true expression of men's ennobling experiences and ideals.

"Too many composers of talent have allowed spontaneous inspiration to be drowned by an overflow of rhetoric. The whole tendency of modern music, while enriching our vocabulary and power of expression, has been to develop this decadent form of art. It has brought us many admirable things and it has taken away some of the essential things.

"We must have more simplicity, more thought and less notes. Please remember that I am not decrying the value or the necessity of obtaining a greater range and scope of expression, whether it be in harmony, orchestration or form. But too often in modern music it is used to swamp and cloud thought rather than to clarify it.

"Those blind worshipers of modernism whose motto is: 'Away with form, tradition and the conventionalities of musical grammar,' must not forget that in seeking this freedom of art they should not run the danger of becoming slaves to chaos; else they will be emulating the political example of the Bolsheviki in Russia.

"With reference to this I must say that I already see a healthy reawakening in Italy. A public that we had thought only opera mad is now turning to the works of Perosi and Bossi. Perosi is certainly the first musical figure in Italy. He is too little known in our country; indeed, until the present time he has been too little known in any country, including his own, but there is now a gradual and ever increasing awakening to the lasting value of his religious oratorios and of his beautiful orchestral works.

"If Italy can produce more like him we will have to reform our impression that she is solely an operatic country. It has been so long since I have been out of music personally that you may wonder at my temerity in expressing opinions about it, but I will say that although I never make any music myself now I think about it more perhaps than ever before. In the face of the terrible disaster that is an every-day living reality, music in the abstract has come to mean a necessity."

I then asked Lieutenant Spalding what his views were on German music, saying: "I understand that a wave of reaction against German music has gone all over the States as well as in the allied countries. What is your opinion in regard to this?"

He replied, smiling humorously:

"I do not believe in excluding all German music, but I believe that we should only listen to music of dead Germans. There are two reasons for this: First, because it is good music; and second, because the Germans who wrote it are dead and a dead German is better than a living German.

"Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Schubert, Schumann and Brahms have nothing to do with the hellishness of the Hohenzollerns and Hapsburgs. Their utterances are heaven storming proclamations of nature's beauties.

"We have more right to the heritage of their beauty than has war-mad Germany of today. We are more their followers in our ideals and aspirations than the Germans are, and why should we deny ourselves the privilege of listening to them simply because the unhappy land from which they came has since run amuck—temporarily, we hope—from the poisons of Nietzsche and Bernhardi?"

"Do you consider that modern Germany has produced any great music?"

"I do not," said Lieutenant Spalding. "Modern Germany has produced many clever musicians, many efficient musicians, but in my opinion their lasting value is nil.

"A nation whose avowed purpose is the triumph of materialism cannot produce spiritual results worthy of the name and the same ruthless hand that burned the library at Louvain and pointed the guns of destruction at Rheims, Paris and Venice, has for forty years been nailing all true artistic effort and impulse toward individual freedom of thought to a military cross of iron.

"A Germany that would repudiate her Hohenzollerns and Hindenburgs might some day in the future have something to say to us in art, but as they stand today Goethe, Beethoven and Kant would renounce and disinherit them as followers."

"What place do you think America is going to take in music? Do you think that she has a future in the art of music?"

"Most certainly," replied Lieutenant Spalding. "Even before the war there was an awakening throughout America to the great need for artistic expression by the artist himself and artistic experience by the layman. And now more than ever with the sacrifices and trials and with the purification that comes by fire, American men and women will turn to music for consolation and for the expression of their thoughts and ideals. And why should we doubt that a nation that has already produced great writers, great painters and gerat architects should be able also to produce great musicians?"

"If you will permit a personal question, Mr. Spalding, will you tell us your own feelings at having to give up a musical life and turn to military duties? You say that you hardly ever touch the violin now. Doesn't this fill you with a great sense of loss?"

"I haven't time to think about it," said Lieutenant Spalding, "and if I had there would be no sense of regret. There is just one thing before us now—winning the war.

"Germany has got to be beaten and she will be beaten so that democracy can live; and I might add so that art also shall not perish. Once the war is won I shall be happy, if I am able, to return to my music; but until the war is won this world holds no place for free men or artists except the line of duty—the duty of preserving the ideals which they hold dear."

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder Plays at High School

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder this morning gave an informal lecture-recital in the beautiful high school auditorium to teachers and pupils of the school. The auditorium was filled. The lecture was most delightfully instructive; the music was exquisite and it is hardly necessary to tell Lockport readers how well rendered it was by the charming pianist, who is indeed very well known to Lockport audiences, always received with a welcome.

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder's program consisted of the Suite in D Minor by d'Albert, a Gigue by Scarlatti, "Two Dreams" by Rebikoff, Polichinelle by Rachmaninoff and two Water Scenes by Nevin—which had to be repeated because of the insistent calls of the audience—"The Dragon Fly" and "Narcissus."

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder added her own composition, "Imps," to the delight of her hearers.—Niagara Daily Press, Lockport, N. Y.

An Ovation to Carrie Jacobs Bond

Thursday evening's program was such a feast of good things that choice morsels were to be had for all tastes. One of the last in order, but first in importance, was the appeaarnce of Mrs. Carrie Jacobs-Bond, unique in personality and achievements. A wonderful tribute of admiration and affection was given when the whole audience rose with one accord to greet Mrs. Bond and applauded until it seemed as though the enthusiasm would never abate.

It was a touching ovation to a remarkable and much-loved woman and artist, for whether Mrs. Bond talks, sings or plays, her art is manifested in all. She recited a poem of her imaginary old man, possessed of all the virtues, who has figured on her programs for long. She sang some of her "one minute" songs, for she can claim credit as a pioneer in short song writing. She gave her appealing new song, "My Son," and, naturally, was compelled to sing also "A Perfect Day."

"Would you have your songs endure, build on the human heart," said Browning, and Mrs. Bond's songs will last. The audience punctuated her numbers with the tumultuous outbursts of applause to which Mrs. Bond is accustomed and simply would not let her go until she had responded to recall after recall.—Niagara Daily Press, Lockport, N. Y.

Charles E. Watt at Lockport

A paper on "Commercialism," written and read by Charles E. Watt, editor of the Music News, Chicago, was so admirable that it should be printed in detail, if space only permitted. Mr. Watt offered such practical, clear and helpful suggestions to the struggling young artists seeking to make a living out of music as to be a practical solution of their problem. He contends that the musician is worthy of his hire, no less than the laborer, and that the slogan for the professional musician should be, "Nothing for nothing," but rightful compensation should be asked for worthy work. Mr. Watt was recalled enthusiastically at the end of his talk.—Niagara Daily Press, Lockport, N. Y.

Charles E. Watt, editor of the Music News of Chicago, read an interesting paper on "Commercialism in Music." Mr. Watt made a plea to musicians to be more businesslike in their work. He said that it was necessary for every public artist to have "personality, preparedness and publicity." Mr. Watt believes that the general custom of artists appearing at clubs, etc., without financial remuneration is very detrimental to the ultimate success of the artist. Illustrations were given, showing that practically every other professional man sets a price upon his services and no one ever expects him to work gratis. The speaker suggested the following slogan for musicians, "Nothing for nothing."—Lockport Union-Sun and Journal.

Ethel Leginska in New York and Boston

One of the most remarkable woman pianists now before the public.—H. E. Krehbiel, New York Tribune.

In her methods there is a Paderewski-like impressiveness, a theatrical element which holds the audience in its spell.—Paul Morris, New York Herald.

There is a burning intensity in her style, a fiery sweep; her playing is impetuous and hotblooded, full of high lights and deep shadows, yet it can be exquisitely restrained and is not lacking in artistic reticences. Her tone is of great beauty, whether it is in passages of delicacy or of power, or in finely differentiated graduations between these extremes.—Richard Aldrich in the New York Times.

Of the younger generation of pianists now before the public Leginska ranks highest.—Grena Bennett in the New York American.

As a player of Chopin she stands close to Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann. We doubt whether he could rival her in the performance of the mysterious Prelude in A Minor. We know of no pianist that can be classed with her. She is singularly original as a pianist and interpreter.—Philip Hale in the Boston Herald.

Chicago Press Comment on Mable Corlew Smith

Mrs. Smith sang the Micaela aria from "Carmen" with the orchestra and a group of songs with Edgar Nelson at the piano. She would make a fine Micaela in the academic style, for her voice is well schooled and flexible and her diction admirable. She has some ringing high notes and in her lower register a warmth of tone to express the emotion of her lieder-geure. She sang her "Floods of Spring" particularly well, which is a feat, for the song is taxing.—Chicago Examiner.

Mrs. Corlew Smith, a soprano, elected to be heard in Micaela's aria from "Carmen" and in a group of songs. In these works the singer was provided with many opportunities and she made good use of them. Her voice is of charming quality; moreover, its possessor has learned how to use it to good advantage. It is saying much for Mrs. Corlew Smith that "Cara Selve" was one of her most successful offerings. The vocalist who can interpret Handel well has won important victories of art.—Chicago Herald.

Mme. Hassler-Fox at Worcester

The assisting artist (Worcester Symphony Orchestra) was Mme. Regina Hassler-Fox of New York, a contralto of pleasing personality and marked ability, and, although a comparative stranger to Worcester audiences, a singer who won her hearers at once. Her voice is one of full, rich quality and wide range, and is especially pleasing in the lower tones.—Worcester (Mass.) Evening Gazette, December 13, 1918.

Worcester, Mass. (Special).—An excellently arranged and well presented program marked the second appearance of the Worcester Symphony Orchestra this winter in Mechanics' Hall, Tuesday night. Assisting soloist was Mme. Regina Hassler-Fox, contralto, who created a most favorable impression in this, her first appearance in Worcester. Her selection with the orchestra was the aria, "O Don Fatale" from Verdi's "Don Carlos," and she gave it with excellent dramatic interpretation. The notes of her middle and low registers are particularly beautiful, which was perhaps even more apparent in her solo group of songs, which included "Morning" (Speaks), "Dutch Serenade" (de Lange), old negro melody, "Deep River" (Burleigh) and "The Awakening" (Spross).—Musical America. December 30, 1916.

Ethel Brenk in "The Seasons"

"The Seasons," Presented by De Pere-Green Bay Choral Society Is Grand Success

The music itself was exceptionally fine and the work of the soloists was splendid. Miss Ethel Brenk of Milwaukee, the soprano soloist, possesses an unusually fine voice and her work was exceptional—Green Bay Press Gazette.

Haydn's masterpiece, "The Seasons," was the offering that was presented by De Pere-Green Bay Choral Society. It is tuneful in composition and varied in expression, lending itself admirably to rendition by even a small chorus and yet the number of singers was not a limited one, fully one hundred singers taking part. It is not our purpose to enter into a lengthy review of the concert as a musical production. We desire briefly to mention only the work of the soloists, conductor, artist and orchestra. First then must be mentioned the soprano soloist, Miss Ethel Brenk of Milwaukee, whose charming personality immediately captivated the audiences before whom she appeared. Her voice is a brilliant soprano imbued with a distinctive sympathetic quality betraying in its flexibility and tonal range persistent training and loving study. The manner in which she interpreted the difficult passages of this oratorio proved her possessed of originality of thought and musical conception. Her singing either in solo parts, duet or trio was fascinating and distinctive. Miss Brenk won for herself the warm appreciation of her audience both evenings and deservedly so.—Brown County Democrat.

DENVER, COLO.

By MRS. JAMES M. TRACY

The Saslavsky series of chamber music came to a very successful close on August 9. Alexander Saslavsky, violinist; Frederick Goerner, cellist, and Alfred de Voto, pianist, the members of this trio party, have for several seasons past delighted large audiences with their excellent rendition of the old and modern classics. This form of music is the most perfect that can be created, and therefore proves the most pleasing and educational. The proceeds of this series, which netted $995, were contributed to the American Red Cross. An extra concert of Belgian music was given by request on Friday, August 16, assisted by Della Hoover, violin, and Maurice Perlmutter, viola.

The pupils of the Lecil Sisk School of Expression gave a benefit recital for the Sands House at the Woman's Club auditorium. The talented young women participating were Helen Clay Below, Ida B. Blakemore, Helen E. Kohankie, Florence Alsie Study, Nellie De Lisle, Imogene M. Dickinson and Mrs. E. B. Field, assisted by Katherine Irene Writt and Mrs. C. H. Arbenz at the piano, Kathleen Harrington, the young cornetist, and the Denver Orchestra of young musicians, under the direction of Mrs. Charles Du Rall.

The Cuno College of Music presented Myrtle Wilkins in a piano recital August 15 at Knight-Campbell Music Hall. She gave a most excellent program of old and modern compositions. Edna Wilkins, soprano, and Ethel Wilkins, violinist, assisted her with equally splendid numbers.

Heniot Levy, the well known Chicago pianist, and wife are summering in Estes Park. A reception attended by the most prominent musical people of Denver was given in their honor at the home of Mrs. Gerald Chambers, 1126 Emerson street, on August 15. The hostess was assisted by Mrs. Clara Crane Laws and Esther Gumaer. Mr. Levy played several selections in a very brilliant manner.

Her many friends will be pleased to learn that Mme. Emma Manlove, vocal teacher, has returned to the city to remain permanently, after several months' sojourn in Minneapolis.

Mrs. A. J. Halter, the well known organist of St. Frances de Sales Church, has been doing community singing with her choir at several of the special attractions at Washington Park. This is one of the most popular and attractive parks in the city, where large crowds congregate daily.

The first meeting, in the form of a reception, of the Musical Society of Denver, held on the beautiful roof garden of the International Rubber Company, was one of the most successful and pleasant affairs ever held in the city. The Saslavsky Trio and Percy Rector Stephens, vocal teacher of New York City, were the guests of honor and contributed several numbers to an informal musicale. Mr. Stephens gave a short talk, and Mr. Ferguson, a splendid baritone from New York, sang several numbers.

Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Gower, who have for many years been prominent musically and socially in Denver, gave an informal reception at their home on Thursday, August 22, in honor of Rev. and Mrs. Bispham of New Orleans (Mr. Bispham is a cousin of the noted David), Mrs. Chase Doster, a former musician of Denver, and Alexander Saslavsky. A short program was given.

Josephine Buff, whose picture accompanies this article, is one of the bright 14 year old pupils of the Liszt School of Music. She displays a great deal of talent for concert work and, as a student in theory and harmony, she is exceptionally quick and interesting. She has played successfully before the Liszt Music Study Club and other audiences, and has always memorized her music. She belongs to the brilliant style of pianists. Unlike the majority of school girls, she preferred to pursue special study through the summer, rather than to take a vacation. Dr. and Mrs. Tracy predict a splendid musical future for her. Aside from her talents, she has a most pleasing and agreeable personality.

Apropos a splendid article in Music News of July 26, in regard to the "incidental music" at the performance of that wonderful movie film, "Hearts of the World," D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, the writer, although not belonging to the society of movie "fans," yet fond of certain productions, had her curiosity aroused to attend its performance at the Orpheum, one of the prettiest and most comfortable of Denver's show houses. The orchestra, under the direction of Frederick Baker, brought out this "medley of music," for such it verily is, in an entrancing manner, enhancing to a wonderful degree the vividness of this silent drama.

The principal movie theaters all are supplied with good musical attractions. At the Rialto, Jerome Spolidoro conducts a well balanced eight-piece orchestra; the Isis has one of the best organs in the West, with Henri Keates, organist, and the Ogden, a new and beautiful cozy theater, also attracts a splendid class of patronage, due in part to its good music of violin and organ. Louella Roschie is the regular organist.

Mrs. James M. Tracy gave an informal musicale August 6, in honor of her mother, Mrs. L. Stegeman, from Chicago, Mrs. Jennie Hopkins Seibold, well known newspaper woman, from New York City, and Mrs. W. S. Goodwyn, a noted D. A. R. member of Emporia, Va. The program was given by Nelda Felter Blackwell, violinist, and Mrs. Tracy and Irene Hubbell, pianists.

Clarence Reynolds, municipal organist, is introducing local singers at the free daily organ concerts at the Auditorium. J. Warren Turner was the soloist at the August 27 concert. In the evening of the same day, R. Jefferson Hall, organist and director of St. Mark's Church, conducted a chorus of 500 voices at the war camp community service, with Mrs. William Terry of Kansas City, soloist, and Clarence Reynolds, organist.

AMERICAN MALE QUARTET

The American Male Quartet, of which Dr. Carver Williams and Mr. William Beard are members, has just returned from a very successful Chautauqua tour during August. In five weeks the men appeared in twenty-three engagements, giving over forty-five concerts. Their route took them as far east as Wheeling, W. Va., north to Bay View, Mich., and west as far as Kansas City, Mo. In all places they were most enthusiastically received. The following is quoted from the Jacksonville Daily Journal, Jacksonville, Ill.:

"This fine organization is worthy of a very extended notice. Their repertoire consisted of classical and popular music and the manner in which their efforts were received by the audience showed how much they were appreciated. They were all artists of the first quality and thorough gentlemen as well. They will always be welcome in Jacksonville.

"The American Quartet again sang with superior ability, encore after encore following their various efforts."

COMMERCIALISM

A Paper Read by Charles E. Watt at the Lockport American Music Festival on Sept. 6, 1918, and Reproduced Here by Request of Many Who Were Present at That Time.

OUR BUSINESS TODAY IS TO WIN THE WAR.

And when we say "Our Business" we mean the business of Musicians as well as all other factors of the civic life.

And let no one imagine that the American musicians do not wish to give their whole strength to the one important end.

Recently, in a speech at the Auditorium in Chicago, a United States Senator told the story of a division of soldiers which was called before an officer, who asked that a volunteer for a very hazardous expedition should step forth.

Apparently no one responded, for the line remained, in appearance, absolutely as before.

The officer expressed his disappointment, when—"Sir," said an orderly. "The entire line stepped forward so promptly that you did not even see them do it."

And, in spite of previous study, affiliations and predilections—in spite of the fact that many musicians have lived in and loved the OLD Germany—in spite of the fact of many previous friendships and the further fact that the music of the OLDER Germany has been an accepted standard for the world—American musicians have now stepped forward as one man in their effort to help win the war.

There has been a more than reasonable amount of enlistment from the ranks of American musicians; there has been no murmur at conscription, and those who could not serve in these ways have given, not alone of their store of money—be it great or small—but have also given their personal services as artists out of all proportion to what has been given by or expected of other professions.

And this is the attitude which should be maintained steadily, and it will be maintained until the end of the war.

* * * * * *

But—even as the country at large has now learned, that in the time of Peace was the logical and proper time to have prepared for War—even so in this day of war is the time to prepare for Peace, and it behooves musicians very especially to consider the Future and to think out the plans which will raise the status of the profession afterward—for, unquestionably, every other profession and trade will have a better working basis after the war, and music must be no laggard in this respect.

It is no breach of confidence nor any folly of the imagination to say at this time that musicians have suffered financially very greatly since the very beginning of the war and increasingly so during the time since our own country went into it.

And while it may be contended with a very fair show of reason that this was (1) because of a stringency of money matters and a desire for retrenchments affecting first of all, of course, music and (2) because of the fact that the public mind was not, in the early months of the war in a music-receptive condition, it must be confessed also that the whole situation is but the logical outgrowth of a condition which has too long existed and which, unless corrected, will keep the music profession just where it is now in so far as business advancement or money success is concerned.

In a word the music profession lacks commercialism and needs to make a careful study of the word and of its specific application to music.

* * * * * *

Some laymen will smile sardonically at this statement and will declare that favorite opera singers are paid out of all proportion to what they really earn and that John McCormack or Galli-Curci receive splendid remuneration when they sing in concert.

There are just enough of these cases to prove the statement by their very rarity and, when the situation is analyzed, it will be found that it is usually a keen business man who gets the bulk of the money which the public pours out because of the notoriety of an artist and that the musicians who have made a great deal of it are rare and, sad as it is to confess it, they are decreasing in numbers.

A few big teachers make a great deal of money, it is true, and a few big artists attract large paying audiences, but the rank and file of musicians are not today making so much as their talents, their ambitions and their work warrant.

Musicians have ideals and fancies galore. They work to develop art and, after putting an incredible amount of time and energy (as well as money) into the development they hesitate to set a price on their achievement.

To give an illustration and draw a parallel, a man who is sincerely attracted to the practice of dentistry, for instance, devotes much time, strength and money to perfecting himself in the practice, but after he has attained a point of proficiency he puts an exact price upon each hour of work he does for the public.

Does this, in any way belittle his profession or does it mean that he ever, in any case, gives less than the best that is in him to give? Not at all.

It simply means that he has common sense and, if he is really fitted for his profession in the first place and if he has had good preparation, he will eventually, and usually very promptly, put himself into a practice where he makes money easily and freely and can thus meet his life obligations and, usually, can gratify his own whims and the whims of those who depend upon him.

* * * * * *

There is an immense requirement made by tradition and society of the one who would become a successful musician.

To put the matter in a clear, if somewhat simple form, we will quote a recent magazine article and say that he must develop to the full "the three P's."

* * * * * *

The three are Personality, Preparedness and Publicity.

The man or woman who would please the public either as a performer or a teacher, must have personality.

This is a quality which we usually conceive to be an inheritance purely. But, it can just as surely be acquired.

Self-analysis, study of every form of art, travel, attendance at the theatre and the art gallery, and the hearing of great speakers on all possible subjects, all help to develop personality, as also do reading and intimate association with interesting people.

The subject of preparedness need scarcely be mentioned. We all know that countless hundreds of dollars, yes, even thousands, must be expended in lessons, in music libraries, in concert and opera tickets and in books, to say nothing of proper instruments and other paraphernalia.

* * * * * *

But, we are not all quite so sure about the last item—publicity. Some of us still think that this is an asset which will take care of itself and that it comes by chance.

A careful study of the subject and a sensible appropriation of funds, remembering always that publicity is an essential, will show that it can be had for the seeking.

* * * * * *

A proper placing of one's self before the public is no more to be ashamed of than is the admission that personality and preparedness are essentials and only that young artist will succeed who has arrived at the point where he knows that personality, preparedness and publicity are equally important and that they constitute in very fact, the essential trinity.

* * * * * *

But, when an infinity of time, strength and money have been expended and, also granting that the young artist has attained a well rounded development, why does he not succeed better in this day and age than is the usual, the average case?

Beyond any question it is because of a lack of commercialism.

Because, in plain words, he does not put a definite price upon his work and insist upon receiving that price always.

There are two reasons for his failure to do this. (1) There is still rampant the old idea that music is "different" and that it is "unethical" to make it a purely commercial proposition.

The second item is that all young musicians are filled with a consuming desire to "appear" before the public and in gratifying this desire they sacrifice the commercial end of the matter in the supposition and the hope that this will adjust itself later.

No idea could be more fallacious, and you of the musical profession in America will get your deserts only when you have studied it to the full and repudiated it as utterly untenable.

* * * * * *

The time has fully come for the complete divorcement of the amateur and the professional and we must set standards and institute comparisons through which we can properly classify each musician and after he has once stepped over the borderland from the amateur to the professional he should never again do the things that belong to the amateur, but should become professional in every detail and practice.

During the stage of study the young musician would be better off were he to appear only in his teacher's studio functions, or in his own home or at the home of friends, before invited guests.

All these are legitimate means of instruction and they will not only develop confidence but also prove whether or not the pupil has it in him to make a successful public appearance.

But these appearances should be as a pupil and not at all on the plane or the pretense of professional work.

But when comes the day that he is professional, when he has mastered a certain definite technical equipment and a satisfactory repertoire, that day forward he should not appear anywhere except for money.

The only possible exception to this should be in the case of such a well recognized charity as to leave no doubt as to the fact that he is appearing for a definite purpose and he should never do even this unless he is absolutely assured that, in the same concert the hall, the printing, the flowers, the ushers—in fact every factor concerned—is also contributed.

* * * * * *

To pay for the hall and the flowers and the printing and to ask the musician to appear for nothing is to belittle and to insult him, and the practice should be stopped by the musician himself.

The specious argument is always used that by appearing in one place for nothing, other and very lucrative engagements will be secured.

This is totally wrong and for one, but very definite reason.

The public will always grab eagerly for the "free" thing—be it what it may—but just as certainly it never appreciates the article.

Only that which is bought and paid for, that which costs time, blood or money, has value.

When a singer has been heard for nothing he becomes of no value to the particular group which has so heard him and which rates him ever afterward at his own valuation, i. e. "nothing."

"Why, I heard that singer at my club, where he was glad to sing for nothing," says the casual concert goer, "how ridiculous to pay money for a ticket to hear him at another concert."

"Mrs. B. sang before our society for nothing and evidently was glad to do it," said another, "and now she has the nerve to expect me to buy tickets for her own downtown concert."

"My artist," said an exclusive manager to me, "was asked to sing for a certain club for nothing, and they tried to bribe me by saying that members of thirty-three other clubs would be present who would be certain to want to engage Madame later."

"That," said I, "constitutes just thirty-three reasons for my decided refusal; for, if there is anything certain under the sun it is that the ladies of your club, having secured my singer for nothing, will glory in telling all the others of the fact and, no matter how well she may sing or how much she may be liked, the afternoon will result in nothing else than the fact that she will have thirty-three other offers of a free appearance."

"No," he continued, "I prefer to wait for the chance of one pay engagement rather than to make sure of the offer of thirty-three free ones. At present your own club really wishes my singer; you must, therefore, pay her price and that money, in hand, is worth more than all the prospects in kingdom come."

It is one of the most regrettable facts in the social world of America today that musicians are considered so lacking in self-appreciation, their work is held so cheaply, that every sort of individual or organization feels perfectly privileged to ask for their services without considering at all the financial side of the question.

A musician has a lawyer friend and goes and asks him a very simple question—later, but quite promptly, he receives a bill for twenty dollars.

A death occurs in the lawyer's family and he pays for every necessary service, saving only the music, which he asks his friend whom he charged for advice, to furnish free because of his friendship.

Clubs all over the country glory in the fact that they can get American musicians, week after week, for nothing.

In Chicago there is an association of business men who meet for an expensive hotel luncheon once a month where they discuss art, war, business and ethics—and, to their own satisfaction, settle many questions.

For years they have had on the program committee a persuasive doctor who would not dream of giving his own professional services free to anyone and yet who goes about from studio to studio and from one young artist to another asking them to appear before his club (at noon day) without any fee whatever, "because" forsooth they thus have "opportunity to make themselves known to the public in a very direct as well as refined way, and will get a good luncheon besides."

And neither this man nor any of the others of his kind ever make any distinction whatever as between the professional and the talented amateur.

One month he will present before his club a talented young student provided by some master teacher and the next month he will induce a singer to appear who has been before the public for ten years.

And, amateur and professional alike receive the same applause, the same perfunctory encore, the same stereotyped "thank you," and, alike they are promptly dismissed from the club mind, excepting for the one fact that their names are well enough remembered that the club always wants some one "different" the next time.

* * * * * *

Consider for one moment the possibility—If all musicians—real musicians, I mean—were firmly fixed in the idea that they would not appear except for money, what would all the woman's clubs and the various societies do?

At first they might say, "Very well, we will do without." But how long would that last? Only until the hunger for really artistic work was made keen through the fact that they could get no one but students and amateurs for nothing.

And when that time came they would buy the real music, just as they now buy the flowers, the refreshments and pay for the places in which their functions are held.

It will require unanimity of purpose. All must work together; but, it can be done and if the idea be but consistently and persistently enough kept in mind the change will be made.

At present, as we said at first, the war is everything, and if a musician can serve in no other way he can and must give his artistic services, but even so, he must do it for "the boys" only, for if he appear in too many free concerts, even in war times, he will have no commercial value after the war is over.

* * * * * *

But, carrying out the idea already stated, that in time of war is the proper time to prepare for peace, musicians should even now be thinking of the commercial aspects of their work more than they ever did before, and when the country again begins to be at normal, musicians, as individuals and as a mass, should institute a sweeping reform. They should say, tacitly—"Music is my only living. I will no longer give any of my ability away. I must have an adequate return for every bit of my art which I give to the public." In other words, there must be adopted a very plebeian sounding, but a very definite, a very practical and an altogether sensible slogan, and that slogan is, NOTHING FOR NOTHING."

CONSERVATION OF FORCE

(Contributed)

Two singers recently appeared at a local affair, and in the work of one of the two was exemplified the great need of conservation.

On the one hand was the mature artist who, though singing in a small hall, sang her numbers with such an outpouring of needless volume that much, if not all, of the quality of her voice was destroyed. The other singer, perhaps not over twenty-three at the limit, having at her command all the wealth of a pure and truly great soprano voice, conserved her resources in a way which, if continued in, will eventually save her voice to a good old age.

As this is an era of conservation along all lines of endeavor, we hope our really big voices will take the hint and profit thereby. A word to the wise should be sufficient.

GEORGE LIPSCHULTZ

The management of the Butterfly Theatre, in Milwaukee, announces in the public press that George Lipschultz will continue to play solos at each performance and that the status of the orchestra under his direction will be kept up to the fine standard which has made it so popular with Milwaukeeans.

This announcement was made necessary through the fact that salaries to the musicians in the other theatres of the city have been reduced through some scheming and underhand means—the "Butterfly" nevertheless declining to join in any such movement, believing that the keeping up of the music to a high standard is just as important as it is to present good pictures.

APOLLO CLUB SEASON

The Apollo Club, back on its old-time smooth-running basis, will fill a distinguished place in Chicago's season. Its season opens December 29 with the annual presentation of "The Messiah" at the Auditorium. The soloists are Orpha Kendall Holtsmann, soprano; Frederica Gerhardt Downing, contralto; Robert Loren Quait, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, basso.

At Orchestra Hall on February 10 Cowen's "The Veil" will be given; also Schmitt's setting of the Forty-seventh Psalm. The soloists announced are Cora Libberton, soprano; Frances Ingram, contralto; Warren Proctor, tenor, and Louis Kreidler, baritone.

The third appearance will also be in Orchestra Hall, April 16, when Verdi's "Requiem" and the "Hallelujah" chorus in Beethoven's "Mount of Olives" will be the principal offerings. Soloists thus far announced are Louise Harrison Slade, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Charles E. Gallagher, basso.

VIRNA HARMAN WALKER STUDIO

"Pandora," a new Greek ballet, in which twenty pupils of the Virna Harman Walker Studio of Dancing will take part, will be an interesting feature of the Fall opening of the Walker Studio on September 28. The ballet was composed by Miss Walker especially for this occasion and will be enjoyed by musicians, as it is danced to many beautiful strains of the music of Chopin, Grieg, Wagner, Rubinstein and Schumann.

The Virna Harman Walker Studio of Dancing announces the opening of the 1918-1919 season Monday, September 23. Day and evening classes in ballet, interpretative and ballroom dancing and professional courses for exceptionally talented pupils are offered.

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE

The Moody Bible Institute has arranged to extend to students in its evening classes the full curriculum of the courses given the day classes. This change, which is to go into effect with the fall term, is in the interest of worthy young men and women working during the day, who desire to train for Christian service. They may be accommodated also with board and room in the Institute. On the opening evening, September 17, Dr. James M. Gray, will deliver his widely known lecture on "How to Master the English Bible."

Warren Avenue Congregational Church—The quartet at this church last Sunday morning was made up of Lillian Landwer, Sadye Holland, Arthur Youngberg and Thomas A. Remington, these comprising a thoroughly fine ensemble as well as excellent solo material. Edith Baughman was at the organ. The larger quartet number was a Jubilate of Tours, and it was presented with great spirit and style, while the offertory, a simple arrangement of the Twenty-third Psalm, was very beautifully sung by Miss Landwer.

BRISCOE-JOHNSTON STUDIOS

Piano pupils of Addison Harmon Briscoe appeared in a joint recital with voice and piano pupils of Lillian Thomas Johnston at the Briscoe-Johnston studios, Kimball Hall Building, Sunday afternoon. A large number of interested friends and patrons were present, who pronounced the event a most successful and enjoyable one.

Among the numbers rendered were piano selections by Frothingham, Grant-Schaeffer, Adams, Schmoll, Bechter, Behr and Sinding; songs by Gaynor, Cowen, Denza, D'Hardelot, Bemberg and others. Fine support was rendered by Mrs. Johnston's accompaniment.

In addition to the numbers so creditably performed by pupils, Mrs. Johnston's sweet voice displayed a large range when she rendered two beautiful songs—the ever popular and rhythmical waltz song, "Carmena," by Wilson, and the intensely dramatic recitative soprano aria from L. Lehman's "Persian Garden," with Mr. Briscoe accompanying in a most artistic manner.

A rather unexpected but most pleasant diversion was a reading, "The Piccaninny," most cleverly rendered in negro dialect by Mr. Briscoe, who is a southerner.

Mr. Briscoe and Mrs. Johnston have appeared in concert at many of the prominent hotels and music halls, and the coming season, for them, will be a busy one.

BLANCHE SLOCUM

After spending much of the Summer in New York, where she sang repeatedly for the soldiers and sailors, Miss Slocum has returned to Chicago and is busy in preparation for her debut concert at Orchestra Hall on the evening of October 8.

Miss Slocum has been besieged with offers of appearances in Chicago and the suburbs, but has firmly declined to accept any of them until after the Orchestra Hall event, which naturally will be a very important function.

A great many reservations have already been made, and it is easy to predict that the big hall will be sold out.

Meantime, however, Miss Slocum has been making a few appearances in Illinois and Indiana towns, as well as at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, and in every case she has made a most pronounced success.

For she has a really wonderful voice, and this fact, coupled with the extraordinary interest which has been aroused by her newspaper articles on Germany, has created an intense desire to hear her everywhere.

REED MILLER PRAISED BY COMPOSER

When David Stanley Smith's remarkable oratorio, "The Rhapsody of St. Bernard," was given its premiere at the Evanston Festival last June, Reed Miller and Nevada Van der Veer created the tenor and contralto roles and won unstinted praise for their finished interpretations. It just so happened that exactly one month later the same work was given at St. Thomas' Church in New York, where Mr. Miller is soloist, and he sent a copy of the program to the composer, noting the coincidence. To this came the following complimentary reply:

Petersham, Mass., July 7, 1918.

Dear Mr. Miller: I am very glad to receive the program showing the Rhapsody tenor solo at St. Thomas'. You certainly made splendid work of your part at Evanston. Not only your beautiful voice but your intellectual grasp of the music as well had much to do with the success with which you carried it through. Your wife too made a great impression and was perfectly adapted to her part.

It was a pleasure for me to work with you two and to become acquainted with you.

With kindest regards to you and Mrs. Miller, believe me, Sincerely yours,

DAVID STANLEY SMITH.

LEMUEL KILBY

After being a leading teacher in the Lyceum Arts Conservatory for five years, Lemuel Kilby has severed his connection with that school and has opened his own studio at 613 Lyon & Healy Building.

This move has called especial attention to Mr. Kilby at the present time and has served to emphasize his constantly growing success as a Chicago singing artist and teacher.

In the first named work he tells us that he has a far better outlook for the coming season than for several years, and in the latter he simply repeats the experience of the past, for Mr. Kilby has for a long time been teaching a class which taxes his ingenuity in the matter of arranging hours, so numerous is it.

And the complexion of this class is also as fine as its size.

Mr. Kilby is known everywhere as a very fine young singer and equally as a thorough student of vocal art.

No trouble has been too great for him to undertake in the development of a satisfactory technical equipment for singing and teaching, and in the matter of repertoire he has been indefatigable also.

In the many recitals he has given in Chicago his programs have been noted for scope and contrast, and in their interpretation he has shown himself master of mood, color and song story.

He has appeared as assisting artist in so many Chicago concerts with clubs and societies that it would be difficult to list them, and his acquaintance throughout the country has also grown steadily.

It is easy to predict that the Kilby Studio will very shortly become one of the best known and most popular in the city.

THE THOMPSONS, MERE ET FILS

Mrs. Nance D. Thompson has returned to Chicago from a vacation spent in the west and has accepted the position as head of the new department at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory, devoted to the training of choir boys.

That Mrs. Thompson is signally fitted for this work is proven in the case of her son, Sam Thompson.

She began his instruction in music when he was three years old and kept it up to such good effect that when they came to Chicago two years ago Sam was at once engaged as soprano soloist at St. James church.

This very remarkable boy has, during the past two seasons been constantly growing in concert values and popularity and has sung with great success at the Rennaisance club, at the Community Hall Concerts in Oak Park, the Edgewater Beach Hotel Musicales, the Grill Room at Marshall Field's in the series of concerts for Soldiers and Sailors, the Lonesome Club, at the Old Folks Home (Episcopal), and a private musicale at Gary, Ind., besides in numerous other important functions.

He is now the soprano soloist at Trinity Episcopal church and will be heard in the special music services there throughout the season.

Mrs. Thompson will begin her classes at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory on September 21.

AN INTERESTING CLASS DEMONSTRATION

During the Summer Session of the Effa Ellis Perfield School of Music in Chicago there was a demonstration of her method by Miss Alice B. Camper of Kankakee, Ill., who brought six young pupils from that city to show what the method can do when carefully and enthusiastically employed.

There were three "pairs" of children—two at about five or six years of age, two at eight or nine, and two at twelve or thirteen—and the demonstration was "progressive," from the youngest to the oldest; but it must be said that the work of the very smallest was on a par with that of the largest, varying only in degree of advancement and not at all in accuracy, certainty and that effectiveness which is apparent whenever Mrs. Perfield or any of her assistants "demonstrate."

Miss Camper is an enthusiast, and naturally her six pupils had the same characteristic; for be it said in passing, enthusiasm is the one big thing which the real teacher must have, and lacking which no teacher can be a success.

The enthusiasm of the teacher in this case was reflected not only in the work of the pupils but also in the fact of their presence on a hot Summer morning, so far from home; and, en passant, Miss Camper in her introduction paid one little boy the compliment of telling that in order to be present in Chicago at this time he had willingly given up a long overland auto ride which he might have taken instead with his father.

What the Effa Ellis Perfield method is and what it does has been so often exploited in Music News that it need scarcely be detailed again in connection with the work of this particular class. Suffice it to say, perhaps, that modulations, dictation, rhythmic dictation, the proof of fine eye, ear and touch training and an absolute exemplification of what may be accomplished by "inner-feeling, reasoning and drills"—all these were again in evidence and so markedly so as to prove a great credit to Miss Camper.

Watching this lady at work, one was impressed with her great intelligence, her poise, her positive knowledge of her subject, her skill in treating the child mind and her absolute and unfailing enthusiasm for her subject.

Miss Camper, who is a well-known teacher of voice at Kankakee, is there associated with Miss Beatrice Camper, her niece, who specializes in teaching children.

Miss Alice Camper studied the Perfield methods at first merely for the sake of her niece, but so fascinated did she become with the work that she took it up with classes herself, and ever since has vied with her niece in the practical teaching of the children.

The result is that the Perfield system has become very popular in Kankakee, and the work of both Miss Alice Camper and her niece has grown vastly.

Miss Camper, besides her own solo singing and her teaching of voice production and artistic repertoire, does a great deal of ensemble, class and choral work, and she is at present head of community singing in Kankakee, this being a branch of work in which she is vitally interested also.

Books and Music

BY HERBERT J. WRIGHTSON

A Method for Pipe Organ, in two volumes, by Clarence Eddy. Price, $3 each, net. (The John Church Company.)

A treatise on the organ by one of the most famous organ virtuosi of modern times will necessarily take its place as a standard work. The plan is in the form of one hundred lessons, beginning with "Preparatory Training," "Position at the Organ," illustrations of different kinds of pedal keyboards, how to hold the feet for the long and short keys, etc. These illustrations, taken from photographs, are quite numerous, as are the exercises for finding the pedal keys without looking. Lessons 6 and 7 have reached broken chords on triads and seventh chords. Lesson 8, the Twelve Major Scales. The next lesson applies what has been already learned in short studies of musical interest, many being original, but some reprints. The minor scales are introduced in the same way, with more half-tone illustrations of foot positions, and many good studies selected from the pedagogical literature of the organ. Registration begins in Lesson 16 and Manual Technique is taken up more specifically, "Varieties of Touch," with short passages explained, soon leads to entire pieces, painstakingly edited and annotated.

The broad subjects of Phrasing and Interpretation are treated with a thoroughness and authority that render the work of value not merely to students, but to every organist, and in fact, as these matters are applicable to all branches of music, to musicians who are not organists. An understanding of phrasing is comparatively rare, yet the very soul of music depends upon it. Of course, many musicians phrase well by instinct, but a knowledge of the subject is of more all-round utility than instinct alone, and here we have it handled from A to Z with the grasp of a practical expert. The subject runs from about Lesson 49 to Lesson 68, the remainder of the course being devoted to "Trio Playing," "Hymn-tune Playing" (giving lists of well known hymns), and general repertoire, with concert numbers printed out in full. The music printing is some of the best we have ever seen—large and clear.

Poems of 1917, a series of ten compositions for piano, by Leo Ornstein. Opus 41. Price, $1.50, net. (Carl Fischer.)

It can easily be imagined what an opportunity the present world struggle gives to a composer like Ornstein. The collection before us fully realizes any imaginings there may have been on the subject. Some very clever program notes by Frederick M. Martens cast a light on the meanings of the ten pieces, and give them the following titles: I. No Man's Land. II. The Sower of Despair. III. The Orient in Flanders. IV. The Wrath of the Despoiled. V. Night Brooding Over the Battlefield. VI. A Dirge of the Trenches. VII. Song Behind the Lines. VIII. The Battle. IX. Army at Prayer. X. Dance of the Dead. The light cast by these notes is, in fact, about the only light the ordinary mortal would probably be able to find in the work, although it is of unique interest as the visible result of a juxtaposition of two remarkable phenomena of the times—The war in the material world, and Ornstein in music. These may be mysteriously related in some way, in the causal basis of things; in any case their outward association in a collection of piano "Poems" is bound to attract attention, and Mr. Martens' version serves as an indispensable guide and key. Of a passage on page 28, the Notes say the composer believes it to be "as close an approximation to tears as has ever been written." It is, indeed, a poignant motive, and one of the most lucid musically, although it seems to want to be in the key of D flat. Anything so commonplace as being in a key is not permitted by the notation, which is about half and half sharps and flats.

There is no doubt in the world that Mr. Ornstein has great emotion and inspiration in his conceptions, but the same may possibly be true of the cubist painters, even though, with them, it remains entirely subjective. One noticeable fact about some of the most outre of the ultra-modern music is that rhythmically it is quite simple and familiar. That applies here. We have the ordinary time signatures, and perfectly comprehensible rhythmical figures. It recalls Von Bulow's epigram, "In the beginning was the Rhythm." Perhaps when all is said and done, and all kinds of sounds and cataclysms have exhausted themselves, it will be possible to say, "In the end was the Rhythm."

These are little pieces with words of the nursery rhyme type, involving certain movements of hands, fingers and arms, and thus making a necessary training attractive to the young child. The book is very nicely printed and illustrated.

The Music Student's Spelling Book, by Mrs. Crosby Adams. Price, 50 cents. (Clayton F. Summy Co.)

The young student is taught the notes of the staff, treble and bass together, in a rather novel way, namely, by spelling words on a picture of the keyboard and a blank staff in many different ways, such words as "Adage," "Added," "Faded" and many others. They are also to be played on the piano.

Tone Plays, by Adelaide Trowbridge. Price, 40 cents.

Pedal Studies, by Mrs. Crosby Adams. Price, $1.

Four Little Etudes, by Clara L. Lucas. Price, 35 cents. (Clayton F. Summy Co.)

The first consists of very simple pieces, with motto verses. The second inculcates the use of the pedal by the ear, and understanding of its effect, not by pedal signs. The third is a set of little studies for children of the third grade.

Lessons in Rhythm, by John Mokrejs. Price, 75 cents, net. (Clayton F. Summy Co.)

A systematic method of learning time divisions and counting, to be applied both for reading music and for apprehending the measure and rhythm of heard music. The latter is a much less common accomplishment than the former, which every student learns, more or less. A count for every subdivision of the measure is quite advisable up to a certain point, but the counting for each sixty-fourth note seems carrying the system rather to extremes. The smaller subdivisions are to be omitted later, however. The division of a principal beat into four parts is done by using the arbitrary form "1. A. B. D.," "2. A. B. D.," etc., D being substituted for C on the grounds of euphony. Further division of one of these parts is indicated by "1. E. I. O.," "A. E. I. O.," etc. A number of exercises on many different rhythms will afford good drill.

Common Sense in the Art of Singing, by George W. Barnes. (George W. Barnes, Keokuk, Iowa).

In a brochure of eleven pages the author puts forth his convictions, derived from experience as well as study, on the Art of Singing. To the student of any subject new ideas and different viewpoints are always welcome. The present essay was originally given as a lecture, and is printed as "A Manual of Reference for Conservatories, Instructors and Students."

SUNDAY AFTERNOON AT WHITNEY TEW'S STUDIO

A goodly and well-contented audience stayed at the Whitney Tew studio on last Sunday afternoon through a long program in spite of the excitements various which pervaded Michigan avenue in front of the building and seethed and swayed as far as the eye could reach Grantparkwards.

The excitement was due to the war exposition and the throng of people mentioned comprised a goodly percentage of the entire population of Chicago; but still there were enough left who were glad to avail themselves of the artist treat provided by Mr. Tew and his devoted students.

So much has been said about the Tew methods and the special manifestations evolved in the Tew Studios that we will this time take the long range and the easy production for granted, and will talk merely about some of the young artists who appeared and the songs they presented.

Mrs. Thorelius is certainly the possessor of a lovely voice and the fine little "Lullaby" of Kreisler will have few more sincere or effective exponents than was she on Sunday.

Mlle. d'Oex, although still a year away from professional debut, according to a statement made by Mr. Tew, is wonderfully adept in the manipulation of coloratura values and the purity of her tone grows more and more remarkable.

Mrs. Melius has a control of full voice which made her singing of the bravoura Allitsen number a real pleasure, and she proved her capacities amply in other numbers as well.

Each of those scheduled as making "first appearance" did so well as to prove their utter sincerity of purpose, and Mr. Tew's talk on the subject of studio "tryouts" was certainly apropos and very helpful.

Mr. Alcott is rapidly growing into a routined and artistic singer of great range and possibility.

He did some very quiet, cantabile songs on Sunday extremely well and, just to show his versatility, presented with equal effect some thoroughly bravoura numbers.

This writer liked him best, in quiet songs, in "I Know of Two Bright Eyes" and in big songs, in "Marching Along," by Maude Valerie White.

This last named is one which can appropriately be called "stunning," in spite of any squeamishness one may have in using so plebeian a word, and it is a wonder that in these war days it is not used very extensively.

The program in full was as follows:

Nymphs and Shepherds ..... Purcell
Miss Emma Berg

Lullaby ..... Kreisler
Mrs. Thorelius (first appearance)

Misses Cartwright and Levy conductors.

Miss d'Oex sang extra numbers, "Shadow Song" and "Comin' Through the Rye."

Miss Wood, Mrs. Melius and Mr. and Mrs. Alcott, in response to special requests, sang "It Is I" (Tosti), Henschel's "Morning Hymn," "The Rosary" (Nevin), "Marching Song" (Maude White), respectively, and Mrs. Thorelius was called upon to repeat the Kreisler Lullaby.

SINGING TO HELP BOOM THE FOURTH LIBERTY LOAN

Music News gladly reprints this circular letter, which is being sent out freely. Mr. Hyde, at 637 Fine Arts Building, will be pleased to receive the names of those who are willing to help and such other information as will help to expedite classification and assignment.

The Letter

During the Fourth Liberty Loan Campaign the musical organizations of Chicago are to be given an exceptional opportunity for patriotic service.

The great value of music in connection with all public undertakings is of course universally recognized. In no connection is it more valuable than in one in which the desire is to arouse enthusiasm and stir the emotions. These ends are almost essential to the success of the Liberty Loan Campaign, and to attain this the Civic Music Association, through its superintendent, has been asked to undertake the co-ordination of all musical organizations in Chicago to a hitherto unprecedented degree, and to employ this co-ordinated body in the following manner during the drive for the Fourth Liberty Loan:

1. Massed choruses of unlimited size, for great out-of-door meetings.

2. Massed choruses of definite size, for great indoor meetings.

3. Single choruses of varying size, suitable to the occasion and place of meeting.

4. Choirs and smaller organizations for smaller meetings.

5. Soloists and small groups, as Liberty Loan Troubadors, to appear in association with Four-minute Speakers and salesmen from the Flying Squadron wherever a special appeal is to be made, as in the dining rooms of hotels, restaurants, theaters, street assemblies, etc.

6. Small groups of instrumentalists, especially players of instruments easily carried from place to place, for the purpose of accompanying the Troubadors. Singers who can play their own accompaniments are especially desirable.

7. Orchestras and bands of all sizes, small organizations such as trios and quartets, to furnish music for special occasions in addition to the choruses.

The service to be given will be voluntary, but it must be reliable. Each individual and organization will be asked to state precisely the service offered, and will be relied upon to render the service pledged at the time agreed upon. Thus: Singers will pledge themselves for the out-of-door chorus, which will be used especially on the lake front at the noon hour. Societies will be asked to state the number of appearances they are willing to pledge during the period of the drive. The massed chorus for indoor meetings will not be called on for many meetings, but a few rehearsals will be necessary before the public appearance.

The singers will be asked to sing not only well-known popular and patriotic songs, but also to familiarize themselves with such Liberty Loan booster songs as the Campaign Committee may select. Each campaign brings forth a new crop of these songs and usually one or two have merit for the occasion. At meetings in the interest of the sale of bonds it will be arranged to have groups of singers in different parts of the hall, who, being familiar with the songs to be sung and accustomed to singing under a director, will be able to carry with them the rest of the audience whenever community singing is desired.

It will be readily seen that there is thus opened up before singers and singing societies an opportunity for unusually valuable service. There can be no doubt that this opportunity will be warmly welcomed.

As the work of perfecting so comprehensive an organization is necessarily considerable, promptness in co-operation is especially desirable. You are therefore invited to send to the undersigned at your earliest convenience the names and addresses of the members of your organization, in order that circulars of information may be mailed to them.

During the first week of September a meeting will be called for the purpose of forming a large committee to assist in the direction of musical activities during the Fourth Liberty Loan Campaign, and definite information as to the work to be done and the manner of doing it will then be forthcoming.

In the meantime your prompt and sympathetic co-operation will be deeply appreciated.

Very truly yours,

HERBERT E. HYDE,
Superintendent Chicago Civic Music Association,
Chairman Committee on Musical Activities,
Chicago Liberty Loan Committee.

JOSEPHINE AND EUGENE SULLIVAN

The management of the Great Northern Hippodrome again last week showed excellent judgment in the selection of a high grade music number, and presented Josephine and Eugene Sullivan, soprano and tenor of Milwaukee, in a short program of duets.

These charming young singers, pupils of Iva Bigelow Weaver in Milwaukee, sang for a number of years at St. John's Cathedral in that city, and became known to all music lovers there.

They have appeared in connection with most of the clubs of Milwaukee and have been for three years the chief entertainers at Spring Bank.

Their appearances in Chicago have also been frequent and, within the last few months they have given three programs at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station.

Their work at the Hippodrome was very delightful and through it they have added materially to their prestige in this city.

Both voices are of great purity and fine quality and the musicianship of each singer is excellent.

Their blending is perfect and it was pure delight to hear "Where My Caravan Has Rested," "Somewhere a Voice Is Calling" and other semi-popular numbers treated with such fine art and in so absolutely effective a way as was the case throughout their singing of last week.

Whether these fine young singers continue in vaudeville or devote themselves to other branches of singing, they are certain of continually growing success, for they have the finest of natural gifts and have also in their work a degree of artistry which proclaims the fact that they are intelligent and sincere workers.

That they are competent to accept any sort of concert engagement is shown in the following program, which is one that has been given often by them:

JOSEPHINE AND EUGENE SULLIVAN

ANNA GROFF-BRYANT

From the School of Three Arts, Lombard College, Galesburg

Mrs. Anna Groff-Bryant, director of the School of Three Arts, announces an auspicious opening of the new season. The enrollment far exceeds that of last season.

In spite of the fact that the newly remodeled and specially equipped building for the use of the School of Three Arts has been taken over by the government for a barracks, new headquarters have been secured, and the classes and lessons are meeting on scheduled time. Lombard College has a Unit Students' Army Training Corps, which brings added interest for the coming season.

In addition to the college activities, Mrs. Groff-Bryant is making preparation for several festivals in the Fifteenth District. She had the great honor of being appointed director of the Fifteenth District Festival Zone by the Illinois Federation of Music Clubs. She is also filling the position as music chairman of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs of the Fifteenth District. By virtue of these two positions she is also a member of Liberty Chorus and Community Singing of the C. N. D. throughout the Fifteenth District. With the support of all these organizations Mrs. Groff-Bryant hopes to be able to give a festival in each county of the district and to have the counties join in a spring festival in Galesburg, the zone center of the district.

EDGEWATER BEACH HOTEL

Last Sunday there was held in the attractive colonial room of the Edgewater Beach Hotel, under the management of Jessie B. Hall, a musicale entitled, "Special Gasless Sunday Concert," and given by a corps of very popular and able soloists. Foremost among these may be mentioned Carl Craven, tenor, a great favorite in Chicago and especially at Edgewater Beach, where he has appeared four times within the year. He opened the program is a duet with Miss Beulah Hayes with Cadman's "Morning of the Year." This was a particularly fortunate number, for, while very short, it was thoroughly distinctive as a composition, and gave ample opportunity to both singers for vocal expression. Mr. Craven was in splendid singing condition and his voice gave the usual impression of refinement and power.

Miss Hayes made herself felt at once as a singer of superior merit, possessing an organ of crystalline calibre, coupled with beautiful enunciation from beginning to end. In "April Morn" (Batten) she demonstrated the very clean-cut and pliable possibilities of her voice and revealed mature sympathy in her rendition of the two old songs, "Bonnie Sweet Bessie" and "Love's Old Sweet Song," which she did with Mr. Craven in duet form. That she is a very adaptable singer was proved at the end of the program, when she did a patriotic vaudeville act with superior understanding and spirit.

Mr. Craven did his most outstanding work in the "Lament" from "Pagliacci." This he gave with a dramatic interpretation such as would be expected of a skilled opera singer, conveying a deep meaning in spite of the rather poor English translation of the text. In another group of songs by American composers he proved himself an artist of superb schooling and insight. He sang "O, My Laddie" (Thayer), which he infused with refined sentiment rather than sentimentality; "Come to the Garden, Love," the old Salter favorite; "Loneliness" (Sturkow-Ryder), which seemed least well fitted to his voice, and a splendid new song by Fay Foster, "The Americans Come," teeming with patriotism and breathless in dramatic power.

No matter how well these two artists may have appeared in themselves, their success could not have been what it was but for the able and sympathetic support of Miss Grace Grove at the piano. Miss Grove is an accompanist of long experience and fine perception, with whom any artist should be glad to work.

The two pianists who contributed to the program were Miss Marie Hartigan and Miss Mildred Waugh, both possessors of a splendid technique, who played a Liszt Hungarian Rhapsodie (duet) with great precision and finish. Miss Waugh also played the Moszkowski E Major Waltz with the pianistic equipment demanded in this brilliant composition.

THE PRESS AT LARGE

Comment on Rudolph Reuter

He showed his sterling qualities at their best in Schumann's Symphonic Etudes.—New York World.

Equal in popularity to Christine Miller was Rudolph Reuter. The program was enjoyable from every standpoint and will be remembered for its distinctiveness.—Emporia (Kan.) Gazette.

Mr. Reuter proved his gifts of sterling quality.—South Bend (Ind.) Tribune.

Blossom Wilcox in Milwaukee

Blossom Jean Wilcox proved herself some singer at the song recital given at the Hanover Street Church last Saturday evening. Her program included English, French, German, Scotch and Irish selections, each given with a sweetness and time and tune that delighted the audience. By request she rendered "Never Alone" with such pathos and simplicity that was alone worth the price of admission. "Wisconsin, Land of Beauty," was another attractive song, that held the audience. Both Blossom Jean Wilcox and her accompanist, Elizabeth Tucker Burdick, have a great musical career before them, both being young, unaffected and with charming personalities.—Milwaukee Journal.

Ida Geer Weller

Her voice is of velvety smoothness, rich and resonant, and her range is quite unusual. Brilliant in the upper voice and of mellow richness in the lower notes, she brings to her work a concert and recital program equipment of rare balance.—Musical Courier.

Mrs. Weller has a gorgeous middle register and her upper notes are of rare beauty. Her diction is clean and her manner ingratiating. As a singer of ballads, i e., songs with a story, she is probably at her best. Her songs displayed her dramatic ability and loveliness of register.—Musical America.

The program was splendidly sung and gave much variety in the matter of choice of compositions. Mrs Weller has artistic poise and finish and the quality of her voice is even and pleasing. She also showed keen dramatic sense and a vocal grasp both sure and musical.—Pittsburgh Index.

Ethel Brenk

The last concert at the Auditorium of the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra was given before an audience which for size and enthusiasm was alike remarkable.

Miss Ethel Brenk, soprano, sang Puccini's aria, "They Call Me Mimi," from "La Boheme." Her singing of this delightful number was most creditable. Miss Brenk possesses a pleasing, well trained voice, which she uses to best advantage. Her delivery is unaffected and discloses a good musical talent.—Milwaukee Free Press.

Miss Ethel Brenk, having previously figured in a delightful manner, sang "Holy Night" with a depth of feeling and a beauty of tone which stirred the crowd to one of its wildest bursts of applause.

Anna Case

She is, indeed, without a peer on our concert platform today.—S. Morgan-Powell in the Montreal Daily Star, June 9, 1917.

It is one of the most beautiful (voices) possessed today by any public singer.—New York Tribune, March 10, 1917.

She stands today in the front rank of the world's great singers.—Daily Eastern Argus, Portland, Me., March 23, 1917.

She established a new standard by which comparison will be made in the future.—Canton (Ohio) Daily News, March 27, 1917.

Never from the lips of any artist of either sex has one heard more satisfying or more beautiful singing than that of Miss Anna Case in this particular number.—Saturday Night, Toronto, Canada, March 3, 1917.

Lillian Ammalee

Lillian Ammalee's is a genuine piano talent, for she combines a marvelous technique with elegance, charm and temperament. Her beautiful touch and tone are as remarkable as is her technique, which is veritable jeu perle. Fine tone nuances and virility make her a very interesting pianist.—Staats-Zeitung, New York.

Lillian Ammalee has an extremely facile talent. Over a brilliant Weber Rondo, or a negligible dance by Beethoven, she can spin with unbelievable speed and lightness. Her finger work is amazingly deft and her bravura passages unusually neat in execution. Her playing is like a delicate piece of china; it is pianism that delights.—The Vogue, New York.

In Chopin her work was marked by tonal richness and a valuation of inner meanings commensurate with dignity and decision of delivery.—The Daily News, Chicago.

Lillian Ammalee, a pianist, disclosed gifts that were of interesting worth. There is a certain masculinity in her touch and about the breadth of tone which she draws from the instrument, for her tone is round as well as big. Technically the performer showed herself to be excellently equipped. Her execution was often glitteringly brilliant, and her runs and passages left nothing to the imagination. Nor did she fail to play musically; the melodic line was always well to the fore.—The Chicago Herald.

Saba Doak at Fort Oglethorpe

The concert given by Miss Doak was thoroughly enjoyed by all present and her work proved to be far above the average. It is easy to see why she has made such a success as a concert singer. Her voice is clear and strong and carried to all parts of the large auditorium and won the applause of all present.—The Chattanooga Times.

Amelia Conti

Press comment:

And then came Madame Conti. Never before have we heard such ravishing and colorful beauty of brilliant arpeggio, even on the harp.—Boston Herald.

It would be a blessing if we could keep Madame Conti with us in Chicago. She is to the harp what Kreisler is to the violin—absolute master.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Madame Conti is a talented harpist. She played her selections with fine interpretation and warm tone and aroused more enthusiasm than any other number on the program.—Denver Press.

Oscar Wagner.

"Both artists were accompanied by Oscar Wagner, who is one of the most masterly accompanists heard here."—Wilmington, N. C.

"She was accompanied by Oscar Wagner, who shared the honor of the afternoon. He played with the greatest ease and versatility."—Fort Wayne, Ind.

"Oscar Wagner, a clever pianist, gave able support at both recitals."—Cedar Rayids, Ia.

"Mr. Oscar Wagner was at the piano and to him is due much of the credit of the performance. He is an artist to his fingertips."—Clinton, Iowa, Advertiser.

"His accompaniments are of an unusually sympathetic and upholding sort."—Moline, (Ill.) Dispatch.

"His readings are musical and intelligent, and he plays with ease and authority. His tone possesses nuance and his rhythm is vital."—Joplin, (Mo.) Globe.

"Played with fine tone and abundant technical facility."—Mo. State Tchrs. Assn., June 26, Carthage, Mo.

"An adept pianist—with technic, temperament and finish."—Music News.

SAIDA BALLANTINE ANNOUNCEMENTS

Last week at the Great Northern Hippodrome a thoroughly artistic and unusually successful number on the program was the Artists' String Trio, made up of members of the Chicago Grand Opera Orchestra, comprising Mme. Amelia Conti, harp; Romain Verney, violinist, and Silvio Lavatelle, cello.

These artists played with great beauty of tone and remarkable finesse of style the "Badinage" (Herbert), "Extase" (Ganne) and "Serenade" (Drdla), scoring a pronounced success at every performance.

At the Central Park Theater last week a successful appearance was made by a vocal quartet, the personnel of which was Lillian Stelle, Miss Hinckey, Stuart Dykema and Hugh Anderson.

Fannell—Thomas Fannell, tenor, who has been on the road in chautauqua work for the past ten weeks, has returned to Chicago and has resumed his church work and his teaching.

EASTLAKE-KEIRNAN AT THE WAR EXPOSITION

Eleanor Eastlake and Kathryn Keirnan, duet singers, were the entertainers at the Y Hut at the War Exposition last Friday evening and made so great a success that they were kept singing continuously throughout the evening.

As a result of this they were immediately invited to entertain the boys at the Y. M. C. A. at Fort Sheridan on September 18 and next week at the Aviator School at Rantoul.

Chicago Chamber Music Trio—The newly formed Chicago Chamber Music Trio, consisting of Ernest Toy, Frederick Morley and Hans Hess, will give a series of concerts at the church at 16 West Jackson boulevard, beginning on Sunday, September 22, at 3 o'clock, and continuing on succeeding Sundays at the same hour up to and including October 20.

Zygman—Flora Zygman will present pupils of her piano class in recital at her Kimball Hall studio this (Friday) evening.

QUESTIONS OF LOYALTY ARISE IN CONNECTION WITH THE ILLINOIS CENTENNIAL PAGEANT

A great Centennial Pageant (Illinois) is being planned in Chicago, probably at the Auditorium, and the two schedules of music proposed are said to be so diametrically opposed as to have caused much discussion.

The Chicago Tribune of last Tuesday morning is authority for the statement that the version made by Edward Moore of Chicago has been considered by a certain faction as "containing so much pro-Americanism and war fervor as to hurt the feelings of stanch Americans of German lineage."

It is stated further that the music arranged by Arthur Hercz has been considered favorably by the commission.

Music News has been told on good authority that the Hercz music is not original, but is made up of selections from various sources and that it contains several selections from the Bruch "Cross of Fire," a work which caused such commotion when it was sung in German at Orchestra Hall last year, under the direction of William Boeppler, that it was the direct cause for the suppression of further German text concerts in Chicago.

Incidentally, Mr. Boeppler is to be director of the Illinois Centennial Pageant.

Knowlton—Jean Knowlton, soprano, will specialize this season in two costume recitals, which promise to be both novel and artistic. In one of them she wears an Eighteenth Century shepherdess costume and sings old English and old French pastorales; in the other she wears a genuine Spanish costume, brought by herself from Spain, and gives a number of folk songs which she obtained in that country and which have never been used in public in America.

Cole—Mr. and Mrs. Rossitter Cole are back in Chicago again after a busy and interesting summer in New York City, where Mr. Cole has had charge of the department of music in the Columbia University summer session for the past two years, and where Mrs. Cole has illustrated at the piano her illustrious husband's courses in the history and appreciation of music. Over 6,000 students were in attendance during the summer session.

Hadley—Grant Hadley has returned to Chicago after fulfilling 160 concert engagements throughout the Middle West at the head of the Hadley Concert Company, which scored unusual success everywhere. He has reopened his vocal studio in Kimball Hall.

———♯♯♯———

Craven—Miss Corinne Simpson, pupil of Carl Craven, has been engaged as low alto and pianist of the Four American Girls' Quartet, touring under the Radcliffe Lyceum and Chautauqua Bureau, for a long tour.

———♯♯♯———

Pyre Players—The Pyre Popular Players at the Warrington Theater in Oak Park will present "A Pair of Queens" throughout next week.

Klebba—Louis Klebba, teacher of singing at 418 Fine Arts Building, has gone into war service.

AT THE WARRINGTON THEATER, OAK PARK

Walton Pyre and his Popular Players at he Warrington Theater in Oak Park have earned a vote of thanks in this busy, hurly-burly and materialistic time for their faithful and altogether sympathetic presentation of the very poetic and spiritual play, "Sweet Lavender."

Of about the same vintage as "Hazel Kirke," this play is now, of course, a bit old-fashioned, and it takes more finesse than he usual present day actors possess to present it properly.

But at the Warrington there is good, terling direction, and there is fine, intelligent co-operation all along the line, with he result that the proper atmosphere is maintained and the exactly definite picture of "Sweet Lavender" fully attained in the presentations of the current week.

The play is excellently staged, it is well dressed and the correct mood is maintained n every way.

Even the small orchestra makes a very definite and thoroughly appropriate appeal with the old-fashioned "Spring Song" (Mendelssohn) and other much-loved music (in place of the usual noisy interludes provided nowadays), while the use of "Love's Old, Sweet Song" as the introduction to each act is apropos and thoroughly effective.

Mr. Pyre as Richard Phenyl is ideally cast and he plays ideally. In the long list of parts in which he has been seen his intelligence and skill have never been better shown. His reading of the Cinderella speech s beautiful.

Mrs. Pyre, as Lavender, shows remarkable self-control in the matter of presentation and still more particularly in dressing the part.

The natural temptation would be to dress in a way to make a pretty stage picture, regardless of the text fact that Lavender has no money and is a sublimated housemaid.

But Mrs. Pyre does not forget these basic facts for a moment, and in dress and action is absolutely and logically "Sweet Lavender."

Robert Valentine, as Horace Brehm, is not quite so happily cast as he was last week, but is, nevertheless, breezy and convincing.

Harry B. Castle, distinctly of the old school, knows the business of the stage thoroughly and plays every part convincingly.

He was, therefore, excellent as Geoffrey Wedderburn, another of the blustery old men he so loves to depict, and would have been even more so could he bluster just a little less.

Karl L. Way, as Clement Hale, was well cast and, as usual, he played with skill and style.

Allen York, who plays this week his second character with the Pyre Players, has certainly disclosed marked versatility. He made a big reputation in intensely dramatic roles at the Community Hall series last winter, and he is typically a juvenile in manner and appearance. Yet last week he played with great skill a middle-aged Frenchman, and in "Sweet Lavender" he is equally successful as an old Irish doctor—brogue and everything. In makeup and speech he was definite and thoroughly efficient, and in the matter of characterization he excelled signally.

Mr. York knows how to give each character a definite picture and a positive meaning, and as the lovable but whimsical old doctor he held close attention and won great approval by holding consistently to the picture he had set for himself and which was both logical and convincing.

Jean De Perrior played Mr. Maw, an old lawyer, and in doing so proved that he is far better as a flip young bellboy, such as the one he depicted last week.

Avis Wynne, as Minnie Gilfillian, was splendidly cast and did a very charming and convincing piece of work, while Cora King as Mrs. Gilfillian again proved her great adaptability to roles of the grande dame variety.

Jean Cooper, experienced and resourceful, made a fine part in every picture as Ruth Rolt, a very appealing and sympathetic character.

"Sweet Lavender" abounds in beautiful lines, which, unless deftly handled, might seem at times stilted.

This pitfall was skillfully avoided, however, and there was naturalness and sincerity throughout the play.

Hoping to be pardoned for the seeming lack of gallantry, this writer must yet go on record as saying that the women of the Pyre company could learn a lot by studying the enunciation of the men.

Lowell Mabie Welles

BARITONE

LOCKPORT AMERICAN FESTIVAL SUCCESSES, TWO SEASONS

PRESS COMMENT

LOCKPORT UNION SUN

The work of Lowell Mabie Welles, baritone, received a tremendous ovation and was classed with the best things heard during the week.

NIAGARA DAILY PRESS

Mr. Welles possesses a rich and well-schooled voice. He gave his songs with the most commendable regard for phrasing, shading and style and was very warmly received by the audience. Chadwick's "Northern Days" and Grant Schaefer's "The Wind Speaks" were beautiful songs on his list in which his power to paint various moods was well illustrated.

LOCKPORT UNION SUN

First honors went to Lowell Mabie Welles in the evening. Mr. Welles presented two groups of songs which very much excelled his numbers at the last convention. His voice, a beautiful baritone, is more sonorous and evenly developed and the high tones easily produced.

NIAGARA DAILY PRESS

Lowell Mabie Welles, a prime favorite here, sang two groups of songs. His rich baritone voice, command of varied styles and good diction won hearty recognition and he was compelled to add to his official list of songs.

Protheroe's "Pilot" was notably effective by reason of its interpretation and Mr. Welles scored again in "Her Rose," by Coombs. He was ably supported at the piano by Mabel Dennison, accompanist.

MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ONE HUNDRED PER CENT AMERICAN

Following is the introduction to a pamphlet which is being sent out by the management of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra:

"The sixteenth season of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra will open on the evening of Friday, Oct. 25, 1918. Music in war time has come to be so universally recognized as "essential" that the leading Orchestral Associations in the United States are not only planning to "carry on," us usual, but are in several notable instances enlarging and improving their organizations in order to more adequately meet the situation. In harmony with this idea, the Orchestral Association of Minneapolis expects to maintain the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra at the high level of efficiency it has heretofore attained and even ventures to indulge in hopes, which are shared by Conductor Oberhoffer, that the season of 1918 may be made notable by the quality of the Orchestral performance. There will be a number of new faces in the orchestra, due to death, resignation and service with the colors by members of the orchestra within military age. The new members, including the concert master and solo cellist, have been selected with great care, and will, the conductor and director confidently predict, maintain with ability and enthusiasm the traditions of the important places they have been called upon to fill. In selecting new members for the orchestra, the management have made loyalty to the United States of America the supreme and final test. No applicant who could not qualify in this particular has been or in the future ever will be considered for membership. Carrying this idea still further and with a view of building up a Symphony organization which shall unquestionably be one hundred per cent American, all the members of the orchestra, as well as all the employes of the Orchestral Association, have been required to sign the following affirmation:

"I, the undersigned, member of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, do hereby pledge unswerving loyalty to the United States of America and do solemnly promise to support the United States in the war against Germany and Austria and to do everything in my power to aid the government in conducting the war to a final victory. I pledge myself to observe all government rules and regulations of every nature and, to the extent of my financial ability, to support the government loans as well as the government agencies of relief and mercy, notably the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A. and Knights of Columbus. I agree that this pledge shall be attached to and become a part of the contract existing between the Orchestral Association of Minneapolis and myself and that failure on my part to carry out in good faith and to the satisfaction of the Orchestral Association, the obligation here assumed, shall constitute a violation of said contract."

Mable Corlew-Smith, who made so great a success at Lockport, N. Y., last week, is sending out a very attractive little circular from which we quote the following:

CONCERNING THE AMERICAN SOPRANO

"One who has American music at heart:

"One who advocates its education, its composition, and its production—

With the American teachers,
By the American artists,
For the American people;

"One who advertised these ideals before the great war, as well as now.

Catskill Mountains, where they went on August 1 after closing the most successful season yet experienced in New York.

During the entire season and extending up to August, Yeatman Griffith gave an average of 100 lessons a week, and his class throughout was one of remarkable caliber. It included artists, teachers and students from all parts of the globe.

Many of the notable successes of the last season in opera and concert were achieved by Yeatman Griffith pupils.

On September 16 the New York studios were reopened.

Mrs. Yeatman Griffith will spend more time this season in teaching in addition to coaching and accompanying. Miss Euphemia Blunt and Harry C. Thorpe will be assistant teachers, and Mrs. Thorpe assistant accompanist.

Jacques Coini will again conduct the dramatic classes.

EASTLAKE-KEIRNAN

Eleanor Eastlake and Kathryn Keirnan, duet singers, were hostesses at the Y. M. C. A. Hut at the War Exposition on last Friday evening.

They will have the honor, in conjunction with Helen Campbell, pianist, of presenting the first Saturday afternoon Musicale of the American Conservatory series, some time early in October.

They have been elected active members of the Chicago Woman's Musical Club and will give a program before that organization during this season and will also give the opening program of the Glencoe Woman's Club.

RUDOLPH REUTER

Rudolph Reuter has returned to Chicago from his vacation at Fish Creek, Wis. While there he gave two concerts, one for the Red Cross and another to establish a fund to buy a piano for the town for use in future charity concerts. His Chicago recital takes place in November under the management of Carl Kinsey.

WARREN PROCTOR IN ROLE OF WRITER

Warren Proctor, the favorite tenor of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, has not left his boyhood so far behind him but he remembers his childish dreams and imaginings of himself and his sister as they wandered among the hills, woods and rivers of their rural Iowa home.

One day he recounted some of these fancies to his friend, Clara Louise Burnham, the novelist, and she at once was interested. She proposed to elaborate his themes, weaving a bit of a plot about them and publishing a little series of these tales. He agreed, and the result is a volume that will be published by the Harmony Shop, Boston, the last of September, entitled "Wenonah's Stories for Children." Thus two of the arts have touched hands and the friends of the co-authors, as well as the general public, are sure to await the volume with interest.

Durno—The Durno Piano Studios in the Lyon & Healy building report a large enrollment for the opening season. Jeannette Durno will interview prospective pupils by appointment, either at her residence studio, 4140 Lake Park av., or at the city studio, 907-908 Lyon & Healy building.

HOLY CITY

The united choirs of the New First Congregational Church, Ashland and Washington boulevards, are back from a month's outing at Camp Gray, Saugatuck, Mich., where boating, fishing, bathing, baseball and hiking were done "up to the minute." It was a fine recreation after a strenuous year's work.

Director George Lee Tenney and Mrs. Tenney are home from Colorado, where they have spent a month on their ranch, and Miss Lucy J. Hartman has just returned from Lockport, N. Y., where she made six appearances at the National Musical Festival.

"At home" means "at work" with the New First choirs and their soloists, and so on Sunday evening, September 22, at 7:45, Gaul's "Holy City" will be given. This fine work has been given many times by the united choirs, and many will welcome this opportunity of hearing it again.

ALBERT E. FOX

The Chicago Concert Artists, under the direction of Albert E. Fox, pianist, completed a twelve weeks' Chautauqua engagement under the management of the National Lincoln Chautauqua System, Sept. 18, 1918.

Wally Heymar George, violinist; Leonore Wright Cass, soprano.

Mr. Fox has joined the faculty of the Dearborn School of Lyceum Arts, and after Sept. 23 can be found at the studios of the school, tenth floor Auditorium, Chicago.

MAGNUSON

On Sunday, September 15, Miss Lillian Magnuson, pianist, and Miss Lorean Donner, soprano, of the Cosmopolitan School, and Miss Mary Hanson, violinist, of the Calumet Conservatory, entertained for the Y. M. C. A. at the War Exposition in Grant Park. They were engaged for the afternoon, but such was their success that they were persuaded to remain through the evening session. "Keep the Home Fires Burning" proved to be the greatest attraction to the passing crowds.

JOHN RANKEL

John Rankel, the baritone, sang at a Red Cross concert at Rhinelander, Wis., on Tuesday evening, September 17, using songs by Bemberg, Branscombe, Flegier, Logan, Sanderson, Ferrata, Fay Foster, Vanderpool, Lohr, Homer and Moss.

Last Saturday evening Mr. Rankel sang "La Marseillaise" and "Gypsy Love Song" at the War Exposition booths.

Simpson—Corinne Simpson, pianist as well as a musician of such versatility as to allow her to do singing in ensemble and to play a small instrument as well, is on tour with the "Four American Girls" Concert Company which is scoring fine success throughout the Circuit No. 4 of the Radcliff Chautauqua Bureau. Miss Simpson is also a well known teacher in Chicago.

Hyde—Herbert E. Hyde, well-known Chicago musician and composer, has composed special incidental and entr'acte music for Stuart Walker's new play, "Jonathan Makes a Wish," which will be presented at the Princess Theater commencing September 10. Mr. Hyde spent a week in Indianapolis, where the play was first produced, working out musical themes in harmony with the youthful spirit of Mr. Walker's play.

VARIOUS VOCAL VAGARIES

The general belief that a singer may be in good voice today and not tomorrow, is a logical outgrowth of the reversed law of breath-emission now universally employed.

In the renascence of the art of singing about to come there is an awakening, either through objective observation or subjective perception, the new adjustment of spiritual values. This aroused desire will not rest in a disquieted aloofness from the true nature of art, but will probe to the depths of principles and reach that source of beauty within us where "broods a radiance vast, to be elicited ray by ray."

HERBERT WHITNEY TEW

The three essential attributes to success in art processes may be named, Wisdom, Courage and Loyalty.

Wisdom to see the inevitable fruit of a true law; courage to maintain its truth, though the whole world to a man should arise to oppose it, and loyalty to the law which knows neither modification nor change.

An absolute law of nature, call it what you will; the act of God, a spiritual and immutable activity, an impartation from the source of the dynamic irradiation of order, a process of the first great cause, a mode of truth's manifestation; by whatsoever name we choose to call a principle of being, we exercise it well or otherwise, exactly in proportion to the obedience and loyalty we yield to it.

The perennial decree of wisdom in the cohesion of universal forces is co-ordination; no machine, be it mental or material, can successfully function unless all parts co-ordinate or work in unity and harmony.

The modern processes of tone-emission are, without exception, the antithesis to this all-essential central domination. Years of study with the most eminent of the world's vocal teachers, and long experience before the public in the practice of the theories advanced by them, enable me to state, with indisputable authority, that the entire vocal training of today is an advocacy of a studied conflict of mechanisms.

The whole imbroglio of error, resulting in a perpetual struggle, results from the loss of the Voce di Mista or one position scale. How to produce this scale, no one knows; many are seeking it; they are balked at the outset by the deep-seated mistake as to what appogiata is, and how the breath is controlled.

This loss has resulted in the usual processes attendant upon decay. The art of singing being, as Francesco Lamperti said, "in a terrible state of decadence," the body of the idea exudes the excrescences which have fastened upon it to glut in their work of destruction. The spirit of co-ordination departed—art withdrawn—and behind the grinning mask a mental, protoplasmic pulp alone writhes and recoils in its sickening famine of the heart, the hope of beauty dead, the star extinct.

But even in the rotting leaf there still remains the germ or instinct of life; otherwise it could not rot; Co-ordination Is.

Co-ordination lives! Neither physical decay nor mental dissolution can interfere with or alter this eternal fact. The accumulated vagaries, theories, speculations, and experiments of the complacent highbrow, simmering in his own juice, cannot long barnacle the true idea which is stirring and awakening to life. Why? Because the dyed-in-the-wool Zoilus, the critic in his Attic fur ("asinus portat mysteria"), a Midas, even though Apollo was constrained to confer upon him the accolade of the ears of an ass, the wayfaring man, the child of the Ghetto, all thrill instinctively at "the touch of nature which makes the whole world akin." The striking on the cords of the heart by the harmonies of music takes him out of the realm of the grinding day-life, and "arches over this existence with Another and a divinier."

To say that the singing of today does this would be a flagrant effrontery to the true facts. The tears which fall unbidden from the eye, impelled by the exquisite grace and soft beauty of the tone of Patti, is that tribute of joy and responsive gratitude with which the soul embraces its beloved fellows.

Can we recall an instance when we have been moved thus by the singing of, for example, a Melba or a Caruso?

Tears can only spring at the call of some emotion inspired by truth. St. Lawrence wept that others had not the same spirit to suffer for truth's sake as did he.

Co-ordination of the mechanisms results in a use of the vocal instrument by which it emits simulacra of the purest emotions of the soul; without this nice adjustment these may not be uttered. All modern processes defeat this adjustment at the attack; for this reason the heart remains untouched. The jugglery and practiced trickery of some of our highly paid operatic acrobats sometimes excites a species of admiration, but this is so tinctured with sadness at the wasted time and energy, and the crippling of a fearfully and wonderfully fashioned instrument, that one who thinks leaves the theater dejected and cast down. The deft and normal adjustment of the instrument through appogiata places it in a position in which a scale of three or four octaves naturally and spontaneously flows.

It is impossible to have one beautiful tone above the E first line treble clef without the command of this scale; that is to say, without the position of the instrument which is the counterfoil to this breath mastery.

The bacilli which have corroded and eaten away the flesh of the old art may be summed under the modern vagaries known as "head voice," "chest voice," "open," "closed" or "covered" tones; "registers," "breaks," "nasal resonance," "up over," "forward," "in the masque," "clavicular," "lateral," "abdominal," or "diaphragmatic" breathing, etc., etc., etc.

All terms utterly meaningless, and without the faintest excuse for being.

Not one of these could exist without completely upsetting the normal position and right activity of the vocal instrument.

What these clogs in the vocal mental gearing of today have sprung from, I shall endeavor shortly to explain; space now prevents.

That one who possesses, or, to those who understand, is possessed by an art, could be in good voice today and not tomorrow, is sublimated inanity. The mastery of an art is in itself a perpetually normal state of the vocal mechanism.

Until these facts become recognized, modern singing must remain a pitiable thing, lacking in every element of power, beauty or conviction.

HERBERT WHITNEY TEW.

EFFA ELLIS PERFIELD MUSIC SCHOOL

The Perfields and Miss Turner, Mrs. Perfield's assistant teacher, returned last week from an extensive southern trip, where they had been holding Summer school, pedagogical talks, etc. Their work in the Chicago school has already started. A new teachers' class will begin Tuesday, September 24. Children's classes are now forming, and as the Effa Ellis Perfield Music School is more of a teachers' training school, it takes only a limited number of children; and as attendance at these classes enables children to get better grades in their school work, enrollment is highly desirable.

There is to be only one class in the Nature Music Course this season. This is a course designed for children under seven years of age.

Musical Courier—Through an error of the printer, Leonard Liebling was referred to editorially in Music News last week as "of the Musical Course." Correction is scarcely necessary, for everyone knows that Mr. Liebling is editor-in-chief of the Musical Courier of New York.

Thus Spake Mr. Gatti-Casaza — Plans for 1918-19 Season of the Metropolitan Opera

With two months ahead of us, the Metropolitan Opera makes the following announcements for the next season, which is to open on November 11th. Besides the old members of the company, the American contingent will be reinforced with the following: Alice Gentle, soprano; Helen Marsh, contralto; Carlo Hackett, tenor; Reinold Werrenrath, baritone; Miss Flora Eaton, soprano, formerly of the San Carlo Opera of Naples. The French contingent will be strengthened with the engagement of M. Robert Couzinou. The Italian cast will comprise the names of Giulio Crimi and Giordano Paltrinieri, tenors, while the baritones will be increased with the appearance of Signor Montesanto, formerly of the Scala, Milan. We note also the engagement of Mlle. Margaret Romaine, said to hail from the Opera Comique. John McCormack will appear in special performances and the old favorites are re-engaged. There were announced in our last issue five novelties. In addition to which the management intends to perform the following: "La Forza del Destino" (Verdi), with Caruso and Scotti; "Crispino e la Comare," opera buffo, by the Crothers Ricci; "Petroushkha," a ballet by Stravinsky; "La Reine Fiammette," by Xavier Leroux; "Oberon," in English, by Carl Maria von Weber; "Mireille," by Charles Gounod. The standard operas will be given as usual. No Wagnerian operas are to be given. The old conductors will again lead the orchestra. We note among the re-engaged Frieda Hempel, Arthur Bodansky and Matzenauer.

The Sudden Death of Oscar Spirescu

Musical circles were much shocked by the sudden death of Oscar Spirescu, the leader of the Strand Orchestra. The conductor died on Saturday evening, September 7th. He was 44 years old and his unexpected death is a loss to musical circles. In 1916 he conducted concerts at the Manhattan Opera House and during the summer of 1917 he led the "pops" at Cincinnati. He was born in Roumania and was once the leader of the Bukarest National Opera. He leaves a widow. The funeral took place on September 12th. The Strand Symphony Orchestra played at the interment.

Third Children's Twilight Concert of the Y. M. C. A.

The third twilight children's concert under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. took place at the Columbia University on September 5th. The community music was under the leadership of Robert Lawrence. Ellmer Zoller was at the piano. The soloists were: Neira Riegger, soprano; Dan Beddoe, tenor, and August Rada, boy soprano.

The Coming Season of the Humanitarian Cult

The Humanitarian Cult will pursue its regular course of musical entertainments at Carnegie Hall. Its first concert of a long series will be given on October 1st. From this date up to May, 1919, the concerts will be semi-monthly. Those who have been engaged to provide the musical program are: Sophie Braslau, Mme. Matzenauer, Max Rosen, Leopold Godowsky, Ethel Leginska, Rudolph Ganz, John Powell, and others to be announced.

Mischa Levitzki and Elias Breeskin

The genial Russian pianist has been engaged to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the month of December. The excellent Russian violinist has just been engaged as assisting artist to Enrico Caruso, by arrangements of Daniel Mayer with the Metropolitan Musical Bureau. Mr. Breeskin will appear with Caruso in the following cities on the dates named: Buffalo, October 11th; Ann Arbor, Mich., October 19th; Chicago, at the Auditorium, on October 27th, and at Milwaukee, October 29th.

The Rialto

With the abatement of the torrid wave this movie house draws large audiences from noon to 11 p. m. For the week ending September 15th the musical program consisted of Overture 1812, by Tschaikowsky, played by the orchestra under the direction of Hugo Riesenfeld. Annie Rosner, soprano, sang "Mine," by Fred Sohnan, and Desire Defrere of the Chicago Apera sang the Prologue from Pagliacci. The Rialto orchestra played also "Irish Tune from County Derry" and "Shepherd's Hey," by Percy Grainger. The organist rendered Marche Religieuse, by Alexandre Guilmant.

Walter Damrosch Returns from France

The leader of the Symphony Society of New York went to France in June and returned September 9th to New York. While in France he entertained the soldiers with orchestral concerts, musicians being gathered from the French orchestral organizations. While at the front he conferred with General Pershing concerning the standard of the American Navy and Military bands. For the improvement of our bands a school was established, with the aid of the French Government, which will be opened on October 15th near the American headquarters in France. The conductors will be instructed for a period of three months, also the players are to receive a musical training. Andre Caplet, formerly conductor of the Boston Opera Company, under Henry Russell, and now a sergeant in the French Army, will be at the head of the school. Francis Casadesus will teach orchestration. Mr. Casadesus is a brother of Henri, the leader of the organization, "Societe des Anciens Instruments," which is to tour next fall with the French Military Band.

The Strand

With the return of vacationists to the metropolis the management revived the operatic bits. The week ending September 15th excerpts from "Rigoletto" were played by the orchestra, with a quartet of soloists. The famous La Donna e mobile and the quartet of the last act were interpreted by Ernest Davis, tenor; Mme. Alys Michot, coloratura soprano; M. Yon Collignon, baritone, and Mme. Ada Poli, contralto. Mr. Davis' singing of the drinking song was excellent, in fact above the average tenor of the popular priced opera. Such a voice should find shelter in some operatic organization. Mme. Michot's singing in the quartet blended beautifully with the tenor's timbre and she herself would be a valuable asset to a respectable organization. The balance of the cast was satisfactory. Mr. Edouarde conducted. Other numbers consisted of "March Slav," by Tschaikowsky; horn solo of the "Meditation" from "Thais," by A. Geithe, who did not satisfy the writer, and organ solo, the "Grand March" from "Queen of Sheba," by Gounod.

The Opening of the Metropolitan

November 11th the Metropolitan Opera House will throw its doors open for a twenty-three weeks' season with a performance of "Samson and Delila." In the cast are Caruso, Louise Homer, Couzinou, Leon Rothier, and Pierre Monteux at the baton.

The American Society of Singers

Some new names have been added to the cast: Craig Campbell, tenor; Helen Buchanan, soprano, and Mary Kent, formerly Marie von Essen, formerly of Detroit. The artistic director is Jacques Coini; musical directors, Sam Franko, Henry Hadley, Richard Hageman and William H. Humiston; chorus master, William Tyroler. Others of the cast we note: Inez Barbour, Blanche De Costa, Dora De Phillippe, Sue Harvard, Ruth Miller, Mabel Rieggelman and Greta Torpadie, sopranos; mezzo sopranos and contraltos, Josephine Jacoby, Florence Mulford; tenors, Orville Harold, Harvey Wilson, John Barnes Wells and Franklin Riker; baritones and bassos, Orrin Bastedo, Arthur Middleton, John Quine, Hartridge Whipp, Clarence Whitehill, Walter Greene and Carl Formes. I have announced in a previous issue the other members. The chorus consists of forty voices, the orchestra of thirty-six musicians. The season begins September 23d at the Park Theater.

Giorgio Pollaco and Tenor Sullivan with Campanini

I am informed from very reliable sources that Giorgio Pollaco, formerly conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House, has been engaged by Maestro Campanini for the season of 1918-19. It is a good acquisition. Also Mr. Sullivan, principal tenor of the Grand Opera of Paris, has been engaged. The tenor is of Irish extraction, but is a French citizen, and has been leading tenor at the opera for many years. Yvonne Gall of the Paris Opera is also engaged.

The San Carlo Opera Company—Second Week

The popular organization of Fortune Gallo drew larger houses on its second week and the bills were varied in interest. New artists appeared in different roles and all seemed to have satisfied the opera lovers. On Monday, September 9th, "Carmen" was repeated with the previous cast, save for Manuel Salazar's first appearance in the part of Don Jose. Tuesday, September 10th, "The Jewels of Madonna" was given for the benefit of the women's stage relief and more than $1,100 was realized. Cartoons drawn by Enrico Caruso were auctioned and over a thousand dollars was cashed in. The tenor was in the audience. Burr McIntosh, the comedian, was the auctioneer. The cast consisted of Amsden, Agostini and Royer. On Wednesday matinee, September 11th, "Rigoletto" was repeated with the first appearance of Mme. Loretta Del Valle as Gilda. Evening, "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci," with the previous cast. On September 12th Marcella Craft appeared as Violetta in "Traviata" and Romeo Boscacci as Alfredo. September 13, "La Gioconda" with Elisabeth Amsden, Manuel Salazar, Joseph Royer and others. Saturday matinee Marcella Craft repeated her impersonation of Marguerite in a repetition of "Faust," with Agostini, De Biasi and Antola.

"Aida"

When the writer reached the opera house, alias Shubert Theater, a vast throng was still clamoring for tickets, but unfortunately for the music lovers every seat was taken. What a splendid business for a municipal opera house. I wonder if our city fathers ever went to a popular priced opera. It would stimulate some of them for the erection of a municipal opera house. The bill was "Aida," always popular and destined to be for decades. For the singers there is an opportunity to display their voices and their histrionical powers. No opera of Verdi is so well provided with tunes for four principals. Each and every one has ample opportunities to demonstrate his abilities. Estelle Wentworth was cast for the principal name part and it may be said without reserve and without fear of contradiction that she is a better equipped soprano than Elisabeth Amsden, who opened the season in the same part. By the way, both are Americans, but Estelle is the best of the two. She controls her voice with excellent knowledge; her mezzo voce is good and musical; her phrasing is correct, and she possesses taste for interpretation. As an actress she uses an intelligence which few singers possess. Her performance was a good one and deserves praise for a correct picture of the Ethiopian slave. "Muni Pieta" and "O, Patria mia" were rewarded with spontaneous applause. Leone Zinovieff made his second appearance as Radames. Restraint of voice was fully justified for the mediocre acoustics, but his voice is of unsurpassed beauty and more voluminous than one would suspect. He combines the timbre of the lyric and dramatic tenor. He acts with discrimination and in the proper spirit of the libretto. There is no doubt that his is the best voice of the company, and he is only a guest artist. His Italian diction, his phrasing and his style are superior to many a Latin tenor. The public had ample justification for the ovation accorded to him with just and deserved appreciation. Joseph Royer, in appropriate costume, gave a vivid interpretation of Amonosro. Stella Demette looked handsome as Amneris and satisfied the listeners through excellent vocalization and splendid acting. Enzo Bozzano again displayed his beautiful sonorous voice and his Ramfis was above the popular priced operas. The guiding spirit of the performance was Gaetano Merola, who at the baton led the musicians, in the meanwhile never neglecting the soloists and the legions of the stage. Effective was his conducting and pleasurable his results. Under the circumstances of a limited stage, no elaborate scenery could have been possible.

THE THEATERS

"Jonathan Makes a Wish" at the Princess

After "Seventeen," Stuart Walker presents the above play in three acts by an author unnamed on the program. So if there is some criticism to be sprinkled it will have to be anonymous. The theme of the play is based on the query as to whether a boy should follow his own inclinations in life, or must he abide by the vocation chosen by the head of the family? The idea is good; it is, in fact, novel for our stage. But the dialogue lacks the power and the pep. The conversations are almost childlike. The play is not a manly one—not for grown-up people—because it runs on a "baby" gamut. The conclusion is that the boy chooses his vocation of a writer and actor.

The incidental music is by Herbert Hyde of Chicago.

Other scenes of the play are melodramatic without the use of concealed weapons. It is a harmless play which could be reworked to better results. Of the interpreters Gregory Kelly (Jonathan), Margaret Mower (Mlle. Perrault), Edgar Stehli (Hank) and George Gaul (Nathaniel) can be mentioned for their work. A fairly good orchestra played the incidental music.

M. T. N. A.

The Hotel Statler at St. Louis will be the headquarters and meeting place for the coming Music Teachers' National Association convention, Dec. 30-31 and Jan. 1. The facilities and arrangements are such that all the meetings can be held in the hotel. Recent additions to the program are an address by Mrs. David Allen Campbell, editor of The Musical Monitor, or "New Citizen's Work in Music," and a special paper on "Voice Teaching," by Mr. J. C. Wilcox of Denver. This paper will be a part of the voice conference which is under the direction of Mr. D. A. Clippinger of Chicago. The program of the Public School Music Section, in charge of Prof. Karl W. Gehrkens of Oberlin College, will be concerned with the general topic of "Theory Teaching in the Public Schools."

The introduction will be by Osbourne McConathy of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., and John Ross Frampton of Iowa State Teachers' College will speak on "A Normal School Harmony Class." Other speakers will be announced later.

Full particulars regarding the coming meeting and membership in the association may be had from the secretary, Mr. William Benbow, 825 Elmwood av., Buffalo, N. Y.

Mr. Proctor will also tour Kansas during the first two weeks of October in joint recital with Mme. Sturkow-Ryder.

The Elderly Person

"How did you ever do it, Elderly? I never could get anyone to fall for my picture, and here you've gotten into two periodicals. Good space, too. Did you work 'em?"

Thus the Organist.

"Be merciful," pleaded the Parson. "He is a modest chap and blushes easily at undue publicity. Don't hurt his feelings."

"Well," said the Credit Man, "I've been chairman of lots of committees and chased around town and through villages, but no one ever blew a horn about me or printed my picture. And I rather think my good, straight profile would show up well in a halftone."

"Don't be sulky, Elderly. You've got to tell us some time. Daguerre, too. You must have been getting money from home to be able to blow it there where all the artistic fraternity hangs out. I'll say it's a stunning picture, though. But come on! How did you get it over?"

Very poised, the Elderly Person:

"I take it all this rigamarole is as to that picture of mine where I don't take off my hat to anyone. Of course it was a pleasant episode. I feel fully honored and equally modest and simple. I like to believe that real worth and modesty can go together, and any courtesy to a simple man surprises him when it singles him out. Incidentally, it answers quite naturally the various wonders of you fellows as to why the plate of compliments is never passed your way. Work 'em, indeed! You haven't much discernment if you cannot tell that there was no working in on that job.

"I really think Mr. Daguerre is at the bottom of it, although in an innocent way. You see, he sent me a request for a sitting to include among a comprehensive and selected group of artistic Chicago people"——

"Never sent for me," said the Organist.

"Nor me," added the others.

"Be that as it may. I thought that remark would get you. I can't help it. He'll never know that what interested me chiefly was a bit of reminiscence aroused. This, I figured, would be probably the last photograph I would be shot for. Restrain your crocodile tears. I'm not leaving soon. And it was fitting that Mr. Daguerre should take the last picture, because his forefathers took my first one, so many, many years ago. Before we had photographs the form of self-preservation was called ambrotype and daguerreotype. You find them, occasionally, regarded as heirloom treasures. They were trying to take—and trying to look at afterward. Always the light had to fall a certain way on the metal plate, else a part of the portrait was black. Something about the hair and collar usually went black, and we could see only eyes and mouth and nostril point. I thought about this as I let the artist work his sweet will with me the other day. He shoved canvas frames this way and that, switched on and off lights, put the machine close or far off, shut me into little corners or gave me all out of doors. And talked all the time about sundry things and answered all my questions. He used up so many plates I was troubled until he said they could be washed off and used again. I noticed him trying to do something which implied that the bare top of my head wasn't helping the picture. I asked him if he couldn't provide some hairs and be a public benefactor. If Jefferson said that such a man was he who made two blades of grass to grow where one grew before what wouldn't we do for the man who made two blades of hair where none grew before?

"He said he couldn't do that but the next best thing was to cover up the bald spot with my hat. I demurred some. Said Mr. Eddy might run across it, by chance, and he had just sent me his picture, hatted. Of course, in every way he does not need to take off his hat to any one and has not for these many years, organistically. But the artist insisted and it proved to be the crowning incident.

"How different all this from my first picture, which, by the way, was never really taken. I've the vaguest sort of a remembrance of myself and sister, both in skirts, in the gallery. Of our great interest in the head rest and supports. Of how father sat in a chair with an infant standing either side. Of how I would laugh at his head in those prongs. Of how I was repeatedly placed in position and the velvet, loose jacket above the yellow plaid skirt was smoothed out again and again. Of how I was told to keep my feet quiet and insisted on putting one of them on the bottom rung of the chairs and upsetting things. Of how I was scolded, cajoled, petted, ordered and begged to be still. I think I must have tried to obey, but exposures were lengthy and I gave way every time. And at last I was given up for a bad job by the shirt-sleeved operator who had gone from patient deference to concentrated fury. He fairly danced around with his mixed emotions and I can believe that he told his wife that night that if he had such a child he would put him away. They didn't speak of us as kids in those days. My sister was well behaved, of course, and so had the reward of being in with my father, while I looked on.

"Next time I had better luck. I knew I had reached the dignity of pants and a jacket with brass buttons and some one had given me some money or I had earned it. I really wanted the picture, however, because I wished to see how I looked with a ring on my first finger. It was a carnelian ring, shiny and breakable. And I sat up sturdily and let the hand droop over the table's edge in just the way to give the ring all the display possible. But when I got the case and opened it the disappointment was keen, for the ring didn't loom up at all. To comfort me Mr. Daguerre's forefather put a line of gilt where it should be and I was satisfied—even if it was a fraud.

"The cases were quite the expensive part of the picture. Daguerreotypes faded in the open, so elaborate, velvet-lined cases were made. These were fastened with little humps of clasps that children particularly delighted to fool with. The cases were mostly of a sort of earthly substance like malachite. They lasted forever, but they needed to. Some were of stamped leather. There was a picture of my mother that fascinated me. I was allowed to have it when I was 'a good boy.' It was taken when in London and had crossed the sea with her. She was young and pretty, with quaint bands of hair around her smooth oval face. I remember being fond of the wide lace collar about her throat and the big brooch in the center. And the silk dress had fringe about the sleeves and there were lace undersleeves falling over her hands. It was quite the custom for husband and wife to be enclosed in opposite sides of these cases. And I remember that I used to wonder why all men were so severe looking. My mother looked as if she could laugh easily. My father as if he never laughed. Those men certainly took themselves seriously. Quick as there were any children in the house the mothers seemed to expand into loveliness and affection and the man to take on a severe attitude toward life in general and children in particular. We were always afraid of father—of mother never. Very different from the comradery of father and children in well regulated families today."

"Hold on," cried the Organist. "What's all this dissertation, bringing us down to the bed rock of rearing children, got to do with how you put it over on Mr. Gruenstein of the 'Diapason' and Mr. Watt of 'Music News,' so that your picture was in each paper with allusions of a kindly nature printed underneath."

"I'm afraid you're crawfishing, as usual, Elderly," said the Parson, "It's not a nice trait, this of yours, of talking all around a subject and dodging the real issue."

"I think the old chap's been studying the meaning of 'camouflage' and 'barrage,' and using us as an experimental station," echoed the Credit Man. "We didn't ask you for your early history, although I had a ring picture once myself. We didn't ask for the connection between your first and last picture or a moving picture of your bad behavior. Now, did we? But that's all we've got."

"I refer you to the famous bass solo in 'Elijah,'" answered

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

"DARKY SPIRITUALS"

This is the title of a little booklet which has come into Music News office and which, in content, is an announcement of the songs of David W. Guion, a young Southern composer whose work is being brought to the attention of the American public by M. Witmark & Sons of New York.

Several of these unique Spirituals, founded on melodies taught Mr. Guion by his own colored "Mammy," were sung at the Lockport Festival with great success.

Editorial

"STRIKE NOW! STRIKE HARD! STRIKE TOGETHER!"

Under the above caption The Platform, a very live and thoroughly fearless paper, has in the current issue a most admirable article on Publicity, which we quote here, in part:

"This is no time for lyceum and chautauqua slackers. The lyceum movement was born out of the spiritual awakening that came through the war of the '60s. The new spiritual awakening of our nation as the result of this world-wide war will mark the revival time of moral earnestness in this great movement, but it is no time for weak efforts or day dreaming. It is a time for action and for strong, coherent efforts.

"The national needs for spiritual awakening forecast a period of advancement. The public was never as hungry for solutions as it is at this moment. It is a time for the individual who will 'think his message through' to a keynote of action and strike hard for attention. Mild-mannered 'gum-shoe' promotion will not avail. What chance has half-inch type in a window across the street to attract the attention of the youth of today? We need heroic publicity. The man speeding down the street in an automobile at twenty miles an hour will not stop to buy tickets for a lecture course that is heralded in type that you can't read while passing a store window.

"The need is for heroic publicity, about heroic themes. Perhaps 90 per cent of the subjects used five years ago will go into the waste-basket. There is need for new messages. Well and good if the old-line standard men are willing to prepare them. If not, then new men will come. The war is creating a new audience. You must feel this in every community. Your neighbor isn't the same man that he was a year ago. He isn't shocked at the same things. He doesn't laugh at the same things. Even his facial expression is changed. This new audience out in front demands new material. The thing to do is to 'strike hard' and to 'strike now.'"

* * * * * *

And—while The Platform appeals especially to lyceum and chautauqua workers, the principles laid down are equally applicable to musicians of all ranks and kinds.

If there are not now so many oratorio engagements as formerly, look for something else.

If the old type recital does not appeal, find a new type. Make music just as much alive as is today every other department of human life.

Study the times—study men and conditions and make music appeal to the new conditions.

> Germany's war debt has reached 37 per cent of its total wealth; that is to say, 37 per cent of $80,000,000,000. We have spent only 5 per cent of our national wealth of $250,000,000,000. We look over these figures with a sense of proper pride as we approach the fourth Liberty Loan. We are made conscious of having only scratched the surface of our wealth. Wherefore we should prepare to take liberally of the issue with the pleasurable knowledge that with the $6,000,000,000 subscribed we will not even yet have approached the expenditures of enemy countries. Our wheels are just starting to turn with the magnificence of our purposes, and to give them momentum let us make wide estimates of what we will do with our shares individually. We have made a good national start. Let us hit harder each time.—Editorial in Chicago Tribune.

And, above all, consider the slogan proposed by this paper of "Nothing for nothing." Commercialize your work absolutely. Dispense with everything that is for show only and come right down to business principles in whatever you do.

Music News is already pledged to the support of Americanism in music in every detail, and it wishes, further, to be the most helpful medium in America toward the upbuilding of the business interests of the American musicians.

Take up the fight with us for better business recognition for musicians. Refuse absolutely to be made the tool of any factor whatsoever that does not recognize the worth and the dignity of music as a profession.

Write articles and letters to us expressing your opinions and detailing your experiences. They will certainly find place in our columns, for we are in deadly earnest in the statement that henceforth we shall be devoted to the propaganda of American music and the absolute recognition of music as a business proposition.

PASSING COMMENT

The country has been flooded recently with the circulars of the Musical Alliance of the United States, and we are asked constantly to give our opinion of this association.

The platform of this alliance is for the greater part absolutely good, and most of the aims are the same as those expounded constantly the past few years by Music News and other papers. We shall work unreservedly for the success of the principles laid down by the Musical Alliance.

But we do not indorse the organization as it stands, for the one very simple but all-embracing reason that as now constituted and organized it is wide open to the implication that it is "one-man propaganda" and that the chief object of the alliance is to furnish advertisement for Musical America of New York.

John C. Freund, editor of Musical America, is also president of the Musical Alliance, and in his pilgrimages about the United States he advertises his paper just as much as he advertises the alliance.

Milton Weil is treasurer of both the alliance and of Musical America.

We do not claim that it would be impossible for Mr. Freund or Mr. Weil to give whole-hearted service to the alliance while at the same time booming Musical America, but we do think that the public at large will never accept as completely representative an alliance which, on the surface, is so absolutely the thought and the upbuilding of one paper.

What would be better?

We confess that we do not know. But, certainly, an alliance which really hopes to accomplish all the fine objects set down in the prospectus of the one under consideration should be directed by a board which included educators, artists, business men, publishers and managers, as well as editors, and until such an organization is announced Music News will prefer to advocate the principles of Americanism in music, commercialism in music and reciprocity among musicians in its own way, rather than to formally indorse the movement known as the Musical Alliance of the United States, which is fostered and promoted as well as officered by Musical America.

A young artist in Chicago has consulted us in regard to a program she will give this season and has asked our opinion as between using a big work of MacDowell (piano) or one by Schumann, and also whether or not her program should exclude German music altogether.

Our answer was: "Unquestionably there will be some of the German classics played in Chicago this season, and you would not be alone if you decided to present some of them; but if you are big enough, broad enough, original enough and courageous enough to present a program of works written entirely by Americans and Our Allies, with especial emphasis on the American works, then truly you are proving yourself to be a thinking and progressive young artist as well as a consistent patriot."

At Orchestra Hall there is on view a government picture which is very wonderful as well as intensely interesting and which should be seen by everyone who can get into the hall during its run. The music is furnished both by organ and orchestra, and it is appropriate and stirring.

At the Playhouse an old-fashioned melodrama, called "The Vigilantes," is on view, and it certainly furnishes some breathless moments for those who like "rough and tumble" fighting intermixed with good old-fashioned romance.

The music here is furnished by a small orchestra under the direction of Aristide Coccaro, and gains its chief significance from the fact that unusual intelligence is exhibited in the synchronization of story and music.

Mr. Coccaro is evidently a man of vast experience as well as abiding good taste, and his achievements are very much above the average.

Again has Carl D. Kinsey, manager of the Chicago Musical College, proven his judgment superior to that of the throng which is so fond of saying "It can't be done."

This time the chorus was almost unanimous in the refrain, "It will be impossible to book a class even for Auer at the rate of $40 a lesson," but the facts are that the master teacher began his work at the college last Monday with all his available time booked for his Chicago term, and "it was not a difficult task either," says Mr. Kinsey, who reports further that the entire enrollment of the college is 10 per cent in advance of what is was at the opening term last year.

A LETTER

Music News:

In view of your admirable advice on Commercialism I would remark that it is easier to earn the money than to hang onto it afterwards.

The musicians deposit their savings in the bank and that institution immediately loans it out to non musical enterprises, discriminating against musical needs, as usual, refusing to musicians a similar combination of their funds to which they are entitled as depositors.

I will therefore hold $100 for a musicians' building and loan association, with a musicians' country homestead in view, as the safest investment, for a starter. I believe there are many who would like a settled home for occasional resort, with musical facilities, etc. Why not?

This would serve as a "Preparedness" for other enterprises, insuring the musicians the enjoyment of their combined savings, instead of some one else, with the usual rate of interest and money back by transference of the shares, as customary. We can manage it.

Sincerely,

CONRAD BRYANT SCHAEFER.

AMERICA'S ANSWER TO FLANDERS FIELDS

As enacted at Veuilly La Poterie, France, June 6, 1918

From blood-stained Flanders Fields, where poppies grow,
A message came to you and me
From fallen dead: "Take up our quarrel with the foe."
In U. S. A. our khaki-clad who heard that call across the sea
Straightway, with measured tread, and spirits high,
Their answer gave, in battle line in bleeding France.
We come! We come! The millions come, with helmets poppy-decked!
We come in answer to your call, your blood has not been shed in vain,
Our blood shall mingle here with yours, till this shall be the world's refrain,
And this your lullaby:
Sleep, heroes, under poppies, sleep;
We keep the faith with you who died,
And poppy-decked, we "carry on,"
So sleep in peace, for peace is nigh.
—Sophia Swanstrom-Young.

SONG OF ILLINOIS

(From Press Bureau, Illinois War Savings Committee)

We'll put Illinois 'way over the top,
And Pershing across the Rhine;
The more stamps we buy, the more guns will pop,
And break down the German line.

We're sending to France our millions of men
To get Kaiser Wilhelm's goat,
But it takes many dollars, francs and yen,
So don't only give your note.

War Savings as well as the income tax
Are needed by Uncle Sam;
Each stamp helps to swing the big allied ax
On Wilhelm's neck at Potsdam.

While Foch and "Black Jack" are pushing ahead
We'll speed the drive over here;
This state must be first, she cannot be led,
So do something more than cheer.

Already the goat has a worried look
And Kaiser Bill's mustache droops;
His "plans" don't work out according to book,
He quails before Yankee troops.

But till the war's won we'll never say stop.
Each patriot stands in line;
We'll put Illinois 'way over the top,
And Pershing across the Rhine.

AMERICA'S MUSIC

Primeval forests whispered it;
The birds took up the song,—
The winds blew o'er the prairie lands,
And carried it along.
The mountains, from their lofty heights,
Flung upward to the sky
The mighty chant of Freedom, like
Great rivers rushing by.

Across the sea, the nations heard,
And answered to the call.
From ev'ry land they hurried fast,
Escaping from the thrall
Of masters hard, or circumstance
That bound them in its chain,
And finding, in the Western World,
The joy of hope again.

The settlers on the mountains, or
The dwellers on the shore,
The Red Men in the forest lands
The miners' golden ore—
The right of equal justice shown,
With all it means to men,
Strikes clear the note of Freedom's cry,
Through ev'ry crag and glen.

Ring out, O music of the soul!
Since first the world began,
It voices all the hopes and fears
Within the heart of man.
Where sound the mighty floodgates, from
The hilltops to the sea,
America's great music rings,
The chant of Liberty!

LAZAR S. SAMOILOFF

What Lazar S. Samoiloff has achieved by his intense energy, artistic enthusiasm and ideals, rare magnetism and unremitting study is made manifest in the exceptionally interesting testimonials given him by the world's greatest artists, and also by his professional pupils. No one at all acquainted with musical conditions needs any reminder of the high artistic position which he holds among the ablest singers and teachers of vocal culture.

Samoiloff's success as an operatic and concert singer, also as a teacher of high reputation, was first established in the old world. The famous Everardi discovered Samoiloff's unusual talent for the operatic stage, and gave him his first vocal training in Kieff, Russia, in 1895.

Later in Vienna, while a student of medicine at the university, Samoiloff was also a pupil of the Imperial Conservatory of Musical Arts, where he held an earned free scholarship, and was granted a monthly allowance from the Emperor of Austria, from Baron de Hirsch, from Baron de Rothschild and from Baron von Goodman. As a leading baritone in the grand opera houses of Charkoff, Odessa, Moscow and other Russian cities he sang all the Italian and Russian operas for four years. Following this came a concert tour with the celebrated soprano Esther Adaberto (late with the Metropolitan Opera House), which lasted eight months.

Then Samoiloff determined to go to Milan, Italy, where he studied the art of teaching, singing under the Chevalier Augusto Brodgi, the greatest singer and teacher of his time.

Success with and interest in his pupil led Augusto Brodgi to recommend him as a teacher and to refer many pupils to him for instruction.

Returning to Russia, Samoiloff became a teacher of vocal art in the Imperial School of Music and Drama of Odessa, where he stayed for two years. Leaving Odessa, where his farewell concert was hailed as one of the greatest musical events of the season, he went to Paris, whence, in company with his friend, Th. Chaliapin, the greatest living basso, he came to New York.

In 1908 Samoiloff opened a school for singing in Carnegie Hall, New York, and since that time has produced a number of professional pupils. In addition to this, he has shown marked ability to restore voices impaired by wrong teaching.

During each season he has given monthly musicals and three or more concerts to show what his pupils have accomplished under his instruction.

Some Letters to Samoiloff

The Peace Society of the City of New York
Andrew Carnegie, President
507 Fifth Avenue, New York, March 30, 1909.
Mr. Lazar S. Samoiloff.

My Dear Mr. Samoiloff: . . . . Only words of praise have been spoken of the singing of yourself and chorus. It was a real pleasure to have the Russion nation represented by so fine a group of its own people, and to receive such co-operation as you gave. Thanking you once more, I am,

Yours very sincerely,
W. H. SHORT,
Executive Secretary.

Dear Mr. Samoiloff: After hearing you and your pupils sing I am convinced that you are a real master of the Bel Canto Method of Singing and I am not at all surprised that the musical world is so kind to you and you are so successful.

Good luck to you.

Yours,
GEORGE BAKLANOFF.

HELENA BINGHAM NOTES

Mrs. Helena Bingham Burton was soloist at the Church of the Ascension, Salida, Colo., the evening of September 15 and sang her setting of "The Beatitudes." At the same service the organist, Mrs. Lester Smith, played "Ewa-Yea" for voluntary.

Miss Isabel Hodding, soprano, sang "Remember Now Thy Creator" at the Christian Science service in Salida on September 1.

Miss Bingham sang her "Hail, Starry Flag" at the last session of the Hundred Per Cent American Club of Salida, in which she is an enthusiastic worker.

Miss Flora Farrington sang at a recent concert in Denver the two songs from "Hiawatha," which are two of the recent publications of the Bingham songs.

AN ATTRACTIVE STUDIO RECITAL

Following out the announced plan of a bi-monthly studio recital of their pupils, Flora Zygman, Mr. Huelster and Mr. Zygman, piano, voice and violin teachers, respectively, presented a fine program last Friday evening at the studios at 827 Kimball Hall and, much to their credit, sent the audience away clamoring for more. "And," said Mr. Huelster at the close of the program, "we intend always to make these programs less than an hour and a half long, and we want you always to go away feeling refreshed and happy, instead of having been detained so long that you have grown weary of music in general and of us in particular."

This is an attitude which could be copied with advantage by other studios.

In the absence of Harry Wills, a tenor of fine voice and training who was to have represented the teaching of Mr. Huelster, the latter himself appeared and to the adroit accompaniment of Mrs. Zygman gave Cornelius' wonderful little song, "Monotone," and the exquisite "The Quest" of Eleanor Smith with fine understanding.

Mildred Hatch also appeared, singing two of the Browning texts as set to music by Protheroe, and songs of Lieurance and Woodman with much intelligence.

Samuel Katzin and George Jasinski, pupils of Mr. Zygman, showed proofs of his skill and style in their deft handling of a Bach Concerto for two violins and piano, the last named instrument being played skillfully by Dorothy Friedlander, who also made a success of the Mendelssohn Rondo Capriccioso, which she played earlier in the program.

Mrs. Zygman, an earnest, enthusiastic teacher, was excellently represented further in the work of Paula Salamson, who played Variations of Beethoven, and Sarah Waldman, who was heard in the Grieg Sonata for piano.

Elias Moll, a youth who looks to be about 16, played (with Mrs. Zygman at the second piano) the scintillant Hungarian Fantasy of Liszt, and did it in a way to reflect very great credit upon both his teacher and himself. He has spirit and refinement of style and will go far in pianistic work if he perseveres.

A special treat was provided at the end of the program in the work of Mrs. Zygman herself, who played the First Movement of the Grieg Pianoforte Concerto, with the sympathetic accompaniment at the second piano of Mrs. Huelster.

Mrs. Zygman, who is a brilliant young player with personality and great intelligence, as well as remarkably developed pianistic powers, has been engaged to give the Grieg Sonata as soloist with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra next January.

She will certainly score a big success, for she has immense technic and an unusual skill in tone color and mood painting.

McGranahan — Thomas McGranahan, tenor, is in war service at Camp Mills and has, during the past few weeks, been singing a great deal in the hospital wards at that camp and in others in the east.

MILDRED BROWN

Miss Mildred Brown, violinist, has just returned from a decidedly successful concert tour through the east. Her itinerary took her through the states of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont and the Canadian provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. The tour lasted fourteen weeks.

After a short stay in Chicago Miss Brown will leave on October 1 for a tour of the middle West lasting twenty-four weeks. This compels Miss Brown to abandon her teaching and also the numerous concert engagements which were to have identified her with the active musical life of Chicago throughout the Winter.

RECEPTION TO LEOPOLD AUER

Mr. and Mrs. Carl D. Kinsey entertained the members of the faculty of the Chicago Musical College at their home last Saturday evening, the guests of honor being Leopold Auer and Mme. Stein.

Mr. Auer was, of course, the center of attraction and proved himself a remarkably good conversationalist and a man who has an opinion worth hearing on every possible musical subject.

During the evening there were some delightful songs by Gustaf Holmquist and some extremely fine piano playing by Rudolph Reuter.

KENWOOD EVANGELICAL CHURCH

It is impossible to hear the beautiful organ at the Kenwood Evangelical Church without thinking at once of Palmer Christian, for it is the child of his imaginations and plannings, and it is easy to recall several occasions when his recitals on this fine instrument have been pure and undefiled joy.

tell of the fact that he is almost at normal again.

moments was that when his excellent response, "Lord, Let Thy Mercy Be Upon Us," was sung with great sympathy and complete artistry by the famous Kenwood Evangelical Quartet.

The personnel of this body is the same as last season, and includes Marie Sidenius Zendt, Barbara Wait, William Clare Hall and Dr. William Carver Williams, an ensemble which has no superior and the individual members of which are artists, each and every one.

Besides the aforementioned response and several other service numbers, well presented, the quartet sang on last Sunday two anthems which, while diametrically opposed to each other in style, were yet both done with remarkable regard for content and with such a nice sense of musical and intellectual finish as to make them notable examples of church singing at its best estate, such, indeed, as is always expected at the Kenwood Church when this quartet is in evidence.

The first of these numbers was "O, Praise the Lord," by Tschaikowsky, which opened with a bit of well knit harmony, showing the musical qualities of the four admirably, and this passage was ended and climaxed by a resounding top note in which the lovely high quality of Mrs. Zendt's voice was shown to great advantage.

The following development was in the form of an elaborate Fugue on the word "Alleluia," led off with great tone and style by Miss Wait and followed up and maintained by the others in a way to prove such musicianship in all the singers as to place them entirely outside the usual plane, both as regards voices and collective musicianship.

The other anthem, "Behold, What Manner of Love" (Andrews), was simpler of content and in form, but it, too, gave ample opportunity for the display of individual voice beauties and a rather quiet quartet blend which was altogether beautiful.

The hymns are wonderfully well sung at this church, and everything about the music is at such a point of refinement and good style as to unquestionably place it among the three or four best of the city in so far as music is concerned.

DR. WILLIAM CARVER WILLIAMS

During the absence of Mr. Christian the organ is played with much musical finish, as well as adequate technical display, by Gavin Williamson, who has returned to Chicago after a year spent in Pittsburgh in very successful teaching and church work.

Mr. Williamson was particularly deft in his accompanying of the anthems, and at no moment of the service did he fail to observe excellent taste and very often, indeed, the little touches he introduced were of striking effectiveness.

His set numbers, all well played, were a "Prayer" and "Melodie" (Salome) and the Postlude in F by Guilmant.

The service under consideration was a union of the Kenwood Evangelical congregation with that of Plymouth Congregational Church and was attended by a very large number of people, a goodly per cent being soldiers who were present as guests for the day of the members of the church.

The rapt attention accorded an explanation of the new military course at the University of Chicago, given by the speaker of the morning, proved that this church is vitally concerned in the big question of the day.

AN INTERESTING LECTURE

There was held this past week at 3358 South Michigan avenue an entertainment which could not help being interesting, because of its unique character. The lecture was given by Clement B. Shaw, formerly of Chicago, and was the narrative of an old Norse legend, Frithiof's Saga, written by the great poet Tegner and translated by Mr. Shaw. The tale was accompanied by quaint, fabulous lantern slides and Norse folk songs played to the reading of chosen parts of the translation, read with fine expression by Sophie Swanstrom Young, assisting the lecturer. The program, though interesting throughout, was somewhat magnanimous in proportions, considering the seriousness of the subject, for the translation, in book form (containing twenty-four cantos), constitutes a volume of considerable size, reminding one singularly of dusty Aeneids and Iliads on college library shelves. And, indeed, we are told in the foreword that the age-old romance of Frithiof and Ingeborg is one of the great classic myths of the far north, and that Esaias Tegner is the Homer of Scandinavia, who took the legend and made of it the greatest epic in the Swedish language.

When one hears this charming story and learns that it is only one of the many which exist in the hearts and minds of the Scandinavian people, one realizes that it is indeed time to defer for a time our worship of Donner and Wotan and become more intimately acquainted with the Thor and Oden of the north.

OPENING OF SKINNER ORGAN AT FIRST CONGREGATIONAL AT OAK PARK

A long-heralded and eagerly anticipated unfolding of the merits of the large organ to complete the stately interior of the reconstructed First Congregational Church at Oak Park came to fruition on last Friday. The event attracted musical people from all parts of the city and notables abounded. For example, Charles E. Stebbins, the composer of "In Summer," turned leaves for Mr. Zeuch, the giver of the recital. And Mr. Ernest Skinner, its builder, came on from Boston. He made a little impromptu speech, as likeable as his own agreeable personality.

The instrument has been advertised as the largest church organ in this vicinity, and the truth of the statement is not called into question, particularly as the matter of quantity is so completely swamped in its quality. This is so supreme that the organ may be regarded as something apart, something requiring adjustment to fully embrace its manifold excellencies.

In its entirety it is the acme, the last word, for polish, exquisite finish of detail and good taste carried to its ultimate. In its freedom from any grossness it stands as an esthetic delight. It almost seems as if every pipe had been made and voiced with a minute subjection of its value to every other pipe. From the smallest of the dissolving tones of the Vox Humana and the elfin notes from the marvelous French horn in the echo organ, to the heaviest utterance from the Bombarde in the pedal, there is no jarring sound. The stunning Tuba Mirabiles, which usually runs away with and covers up any organ which adopts it, is well in leash and held to the rigorous exercise of a demand for blending and harmony. There are so many adjuncts and individual excellencies that it were trite to enumerate them. And they are so numerous that the man who plays it regularly will have only himself to blame if he ever grows stale in his registration. It is a concert organ of rare facilities. Orchestral effects of studied efficacy are incorporated for voicing almost anything which can be adapted. And the things to tickle the devotee's ear, who only knows music through that means, have not been overlooked. Chimes and harps and celestas and carillons are there to satisfy the tender emotions and quiet the spirit. And there is measured power and authority and a truly admirable dignity in the whole to command respect and exercise charm and excite gratification.

From what is written above it will be gathered that the instrument is choicely satisfactory and its presence to be regarded as something to be grateful for and enjoy with returning pleasure.

It would be a captious spirit which studied this organ as a type and magnified its limitations in the presence of its supercharm. But just because it is so perfect along certain lines, the temptation to study it for a minute or so is irresistible. If aught but the recorded influence of honest impression is read into the comment it will be deliberate misinterpretation.

Riding home with a musical couple, this remark expressed a certain sentiment: "I missed the majesty, the mastery of power, the compelling emotion which overwhelming sonority produces. I was pleased and delighted, but never once touched. I wanted it to break loose in waves and rushes of sound and it didn't do it."

The modern organ repeatedly lacks this. Old-fashioned people like myself become bores when they maintain that the ability to make sonorous diapasons is either a lost art or the need of them put into the discard. In the search and demand for orchestral effects the foundation diapason tone is either nullified by the adjunct or purposely treated with indifference. And we grow accustomed and accept the facts as they are. But we miss what the organ has usually stood for—bigness and breadth of powerful, awe-inspiring tone. In a church service nothing seems to quite compensate for that majestic body of sound which fills the space and thunders to go beyond the roof and carry the devotion it inspires upward. And supers and subs won't do it. This organ has splendid dignity, but not majesty. As a type of taste refined to its last degree, it is like a "perfect gentleman." His manners are beyond question and he has dignity, but a perfect gentleman is not majestic. A certain ruggedness goes with majesty. And the types bespeak localities. The studied restraint of New England as is voiced in its center at Boston speaks in this organ. It is admirable in the extreme, but to the western pulse it lacks the good red blood we prize. Boston people never "break loose," and this is the anwer to my young friends who wanted the organ to!

And if one adds that our own William E. Zeuch, whom we have loved all these years as facile princeps, fitted himself to the make and mood of the instrument, it carries no kind of lack of appreciation of his eminent attainment. The recital was almost a listing of the organ's rare specialties. Such absolute poise and sureness in his intentions and the technical and interpretative skill to reveal them are not better found in any player in these parts. To enumerate the numbers would be but to praise them all, for he met each mood with its definite color and infused everything with a wealth of detail which made the minutes speed along happily. When organists want to praise one another they say: "He played beautifully," and that settles it. And that was what Mr. Zeuch did on Friday.

Columns could be written of William H. Shuey, who looked after the church's interests, but what need? The organ is his monument—his and Mr. Skinner's! And it's a fine one.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

There are signs aplenty that the coming musical season will be a good one in the United States.

The larger Colleges have had a wonderful registration of pupils throughout the Summer and the Fall.

The big Managers of the country are planning extensive operations for the coming season—much greater than last year.

These are straws which show, distinctly, which way the wind is blowing.

There is much money in circulation in the country and there is also a feeling of stability and security.

Everyone has now decided that music is a necessity—one of the big factors in maintaining the morale of the people in war times, and therefore it will be more patronized than it was last year.

In Canada there was a great decrease in music at the beginning of the war. But last year there was a big recovery from this condition, with the result that all good musical enterprises had a year of unprecedented prosperity.

It will be the same in the United States, and those artists and teachers who have been most courageous and have kept their names before the public through discreet Publicity will be the first to reap the benefits.

AT THE WARRINGTON

The bill for the week is "A Pair of Queens," a farce-comedy most truly. The piece is well put on, as is the usual thing with Walton Pyre, and the parts were well cast in most cases. Allen York, new to the company this fall, and Karl L. Way take the leading men parts as Peter Cranby and John Shelly, both young men putting themselves with much abandon into the respective characters and therefore making much success.

Miss Cora King as Martha, the conscientious maid, was clever in the part and very funny. Miss Bess Bennett seemed the favorite of the audience and was attractive in the part of Polly Webb. Miss Avis Wynne was good in the part of Mrs. Cranby. Harry Castle as Joe Doak and Robert Valentine as Steve Haines were very funny.

It is very entertaining, and Oak Parkers are showing their appreciation of Mr. Pyre's efforts.

Next week the pronounced success "The Other Wife" will be played.

ST. JAMES M. E. CHURCH

A visit to St. James last Sunday morning disclosed the fact, first of all, that Tina Mae Haines, organist and choir director, is still, as she has always been, a fine program-maker, and that she is one of the most skillful and effective church organists in Chicago, as well.

And also, in spite of the fact that she is struggling with unsettled conditions and has, at present, substitutes instead of regularly seasoned and acclimated singers, she was able on Sunday to present a very attractive and well-finished program.

Her quartet at this time was composed of Marjory Dodge Warner, soprano; Florence Hallberg, contralto; Stuart Dykema, tenor; and G. Magnus Schutz, bass, seasoned musicians all of them, and each one the possessor of good voice and correct church style.

The anthems of the morning were Zeckwer's rather profuse "Burst Forth, My Soul" and Williams' "Harvest Song," in which occurs a soprano solo of bucolic simplicity and charm which provided Mrs. Warner a fine moment in which to display her skill and good style.

The Zeckwer piece also had considerable soprano solo activity and a particularly grateful moment for bass, which, it goes without saying, was well conserved by Mr. Schutz.

The hymns, as always at St. James, were done with much impressiveness, and the various service bits (including a Response "Mizpah") by Miss Haines, were well presented.

Miss Haines has at St. James an organ of remarkable power, beauty and variety, and she is its complete mistress. Not alone in accompaniment did she excel, but also in her set numbers displayed the greatest of good judgment and style.

The organ numbers of the day were "Sunrise" (Demarest), Sortie in D minor (Rogers), Choral and Fugue, Excerpt from "Piece Symphonique" and "March Religieuse" (Guilmant).

MORGAN KINGSTON'S BUSY RAVINIA SEASON

Twenty-seven performances in nine weeks is the remarkable record of Morgan Kingston, the Metropolitan's Welsh tenor, is Ravinia Park, Chicago, this summer. In the closing ten days of the season he sang seven times. Mr. Kingston appeared in nine Italian and one French opera, as follows: "Aida," "Trovatore," "Jewels of the Madonna," "Pagliacci," "Tosca," "Cavalleria," "Amor dei Tre Re," "Butterfly," "Boheme" and "Carmen." The tenor has returned to New York, where he is making preparations for his second season as leading tenor with the Metropolitan Opera Company. Mr. Kingston has already arranged to find time to help make the fourth Liberty Loan a rousing success. Two of his sons are now fighting on the Ypres front.

Boston Symphony

The orchestra is too wide-horizoned yet. Although it has been for long (with other similar organizations in New York, Chicago, San Francisco et al.) one of the most active sources of Hun propaganda, loyal Americas still urge that its personnel be undisturbed unless flagrant cause for change be evident.

Guesswork about its future conductor is a pleasant pastime for some news gatherers, and such dailies as the Boston Herald and Journal sometimes err in facts, as when publishing an item that Sir Henry Wood has been chosen.

The most interesting statement about the matter would be that an American would direct an all-American orchestra and that the future Boston Symphony shall be of this country in spirit, fealty and nationality—U. S. A. citizens.

Worcester's Need

"We need an auditorium that will seat 3,000 or 3,500," said Charles L. Averill, manager of Hotel Bancroft, the other day, "and it need not be expensive, but should be architecturally correct in design for its site, and that should be on the corner of Portland and Franklin streets, facing the Common, and opposite Hotel Bancroft."

"What about a combination—stores on the ground floor, auditorium above?" was asked.

"No such thing should be built. One story. That would give entrances—if the site extended as it might from Portland to Salem street—on three sides, the main one being on Franklin street."

Worcester's principal hall for large gatherings is Mechanics' Hall, but with a city of 150,000 the seating capacity is inadequate. Hotel Bancroft has a hall of 700 or 800 capacity, and many sorts of gatherings are held there during the year. With an auditorium adjacent to the Hotel Bancroft, overflows, as in political campaigns, could readily find accommodation in the smaller hall. And many other advantages are apparent when one considers the varied needs of meetings of people in considerable numbers. Food, hotel service, hospitality, just across the street, are among these.

"The site mentioned would not be expensive," said Mr. Averill, "and the auditorium would add another factor toward making the Common the civic center of Worcester, as it logically should be."

"An auditorium the first thing after the war" is a good slogan.

Briefs

The Worcester Musical Festival, September 30-October 4—the all-American festival—has its forces in training. Dr. Arthur Mees is conductor; Thaddeus Rich of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which plays at the festival, is associate conductor. Music-lovers anticipate one of the best festivals ever held. Arthur J. Bassett, president of the Worcester County Musical Association, has worked unceasingly and with well-directed effort in the cause, and the advance sale of seats makes financial success practically assured.

R. S. Stoughton, composer, is at the organ console of the First Universalist Church during the absence of J. E. Bouvier, song leader at one of our military camps.

The Symphony Concerts

The thirty-eighth season of Boston symphony concerts will have twenty-four Friday afternoons and twenty-four Saturday nights, beginning October 11-12.

Pierre Monteux, French, from the Metropolitan Opera Company, will serve as conductor for the first month, October. The permanent leader has not been named at this writing, but it is a safe guess that it will not be an American. Boston—or rather the management of her orchestra—is afraid that the German standard of musical excellence will not be maintained if a real, full-blooded American is chosen. Loyalty to art serves strange purposes.

It is said, however, that the management, determined to have an orchestra of Americans or aliens of allied countries, has released nearly a third of its personnel—some twenty-five men—who have been replaced by equally capable musicians of French and American nativity. This action is encouraging, especially when it is declared that, "despite its losses, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be the finest band in the world."

The visiting solo artists so far announced are Harold Bauer, Joseph Bonnet, Sophie Braslau, Florence Easton, Fredric Fradkin, Mabel Garrison, Emilio De Gogorza, Jascha Heifetz, Josef Hofmann, Mischa Levitzki, Josef Malkin, Arthur Rubinstein, Olga Samaroff and Jacques Thibaud.

RAYMOND WILSON

Raymond Wilson, the pianist, is still uncertain as to what effect war conditions will have on his concert tour this season, but the indications are that he will have an unusually large number of appearances. Mr. Wilson returned early in September from his Summer stay in Oxford, Pa., where he divided his time between working in his war garden and preparing his program for his second Aeolian Hall recital, October 31.

On his way back to Syracuse from Pennsylvania Mr. Wilson stopped in New York and made several records for the Ampico reproducing piano. It is expected that these will be completed and offered to the public early this Fall, and it is probable that Mr. Wilson will be called upon to prepare more records later. The clarity, sincerity and full, round tone of his playing should make his art interpretations very successful.

Whether the war will have much effect upon the attendance at the College of Fine Arts of Syracuse University, with which Mr. Wilson is connected, remains to be seen. However, as the large majority of piano students are young ladies, the prospects are that he will have all the work he can do in view of the extensive concert work which he will have. The draft will probably have more effect upon the choral work than upon the instrumental sections, as it will be almost impossible to get young men enough for the work of the University Chorus, the Glee Club and other choral organizations.

MORA MURDOCK AT STREATOR

Miss Mora Murdock, pianist and organist, has returned from Streator, Ill., where she has filled an engagement as organist for the Central Illinois M. E. conference. Friday evening, September 13, she gave an organ recital of which the Streator Independent Times makes comment in part:

"The organ recital given last evening by Miss Mora Murdock prior to the masterly oration by Bishop Quayle was well calculated to exhibit her virtuosity and the possibilities of the big organ, eliciting also the hearty acclaim of the audience, which, after the 'William Tell' overture, demanded an encore.

"The overture was beautifully phrased and the little encore had an appeal all its own. The program, as a whole, demonstrated to Streator audiences that Miss Murdock is broad in her powers of interpretation, in her breadth of musical comprehension and in her versatility as an artist."

Stein—Ruth Helena Dahly, contralto, artist pupil of Karl Buren Stein, sang at the Edgewater Country Club September 6; for the jackies at the Daughters of the Republic September 14, and at the benefit for the Norwegian Orphans' Home September 18. Grover Haislip, baritone, also a pupil of Dr. Stein, was the soloist with the band at the Mayfair Patriotic Community meeting September 7.

Orchard—Mrs. Charles Orchard was the accompanist for Ora Padget-Langer, contralto, and Charles Mitchell Mixer, violinist, in Lincoln, Ill., recently and will accompany them at the opening meeting of the Daughters of Indiana at the Congress Hotel October 1 and at the Austin Woman's Club October 7.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Mr. J. Carl Breil, another Los Angeles composer, will be honored with a presentation of his opera, "The Legend," by the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York City. Mr. Charles W. Cadman will also have a representation of his "Shanewis," in fourteen performances. We rejoice in the recognition of our Pacific coast composers.

The war tax, upon concerts, as well as instruments, is surely a very great drawback upon the artists and managers of musical enterprises. These concerts, of the better order, have not been paying ventures, and to make up for the tax by increase of rates would lessen the attendance. The spirit of the musician and the artist is in full keeping with the government's interest, as they have extensively manifested by the donating of their talent for the many enterprises for the benefit of the organizations for war benefits. No class has been so liberal as the musical profession, even at a loss to their actual needs, in these critical times that confront the teacher and entertainer. The Gamut Club gave a wholesouled support to affiliation with the needs of the hour to win the war.

The September banquet of the Gamut Club was an inspiring occasion. Judge H. N. Wells gave a thrilling speech on "The Harmony of Democracy," encouraging music for the people. The great opportunity is now open to make the work effective for America and American composition and with it the great potency of the power of the music charm. The meeting opened by the singing of Schoenefeld's setting of "American Hymn." Mr. Charles C. Draa, in the absence of President Behymer, acted as chairman. Mr. Cyril Dwight Edwards sang the text of Charles Simonis' "Sons of the Sea," with Will Garroway's musical setting, and gave a telling expression to the strong words and strong piano accompaniment. Composer at the piano. The song is intensely dramatic, and vocally Mr. Edwards gave an effective rendition. Also sang an Italian aria, "Bennvento," for baritone. The surprise of the evening was the violin playing of little Miss Elsa Cherniavsky, perhaps under 10 years of age, in playing the great works, "Hejre Kati," by Hubuy, and "Kuiawiak," by Wieniawsky, with the most skillful technique and mastery. She was accompanied by Alice E. Harrison, in effective application. Mme. Paula Dorhmann gave entertainingly several soprano solos of patriotic order. Miss Shirly and Ruth Irvine, in piano, with whistling fancies. Mr. H. W. Adams, in piano variations; Mrs. Norman Robinson, in charming readings of clever verse, to the delight of all, by her art.

"Lafayette Day," Sept. 6, gave a fine program of music (French) and fine addresses by Frenchmen and patriotic Americans, Los Angeles Oratorio Society, Director Lebegott, and a marine band. "La Marseillaise" was sung in French by Marguerite Sigonde, in colors, under the tricolor flag, the audience joining in the chorus. The great speech of the day was by Judge Benjamin F. Bledsoe. "America" and "Star Spangled Banner" were enthusiastically rendered. General Charles Henry Whipple, U. S. A., was director of program.

The Zoellner String quartet are active in practice and have presented several programs with great success at the Bryson apartments at the Naval Base, San Pedro, and they are giving some teaching besides their preparation for the open road tour of the states.

The Woman's Lyric Club is planning a special work for the season in the enlargement of their chorus to 120 or more trained voices. They will give "The Mystic Hour," by Clough-Leighter.

Mme. Mae MacDonald Hope will present her chamber course of choice programs the coming season. Her charming artistry (pianist-virtuoso), will attract a good following.

Miss Katherine Fiske will spend the winter with her teacher, Sigmund Beel, in San Francisco.

The Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, under F. W. Blanchard's management, will continue the next season.

Strong desire for seats promises no decline in interest, though many barriers must be set aside to keep up the educational work of the symphony musical culture.

Impressario Behymer is busy in the east in securing stars for the La Scala Opera Company's season here.

Woman's Symphony Orchestra, Director Schoenefeld, plans for a season without German music, by order of the program committee.

The Sixty-eighth California Admission Day, celebrated in patriotic excellence for the benefit of the soldiers and sailors and war camps near by, gave a great variety program for "Field Day," of the wild west color, which was inaugurated with thrilling effects. The aggregation of some 300 players in army, sailor and local bands was of much musical interest, the evening winding up with a grand military ball. Fifteen thousand people were within the gates and enjoyed it as only the westerner knows how.

A lively activity is being put forth in the expansion of music influence by Mr. Charles C. Draa, vice president of the Gamut Club, who has been appointed chairman of the war concert bureau of southern California, for the cantonment of southern California, with a federation of musicians. He has such able assistants as Mrs. Cecil Frankel of Hollywood; Mrs. Jamison, of the Federation of Woman's Clubs reputation and president of Music Teachers' Association, and many of telling influence to aid in the organization. Programs of popular music will be rendered by choral organizations in the larger auditoriums, and very able and attractive soloists, in which there will be a participation with the masses of the people in community song, as well as interesting programs for the camps. The work is under the War Savings Concert Bureau. This will call out much gratuitous effort, but it will count for much good to causes that must be supported and also the dissemination of musical enthusiasm.

Clarke—Edward Clarke, baritone, and Rachel Steinman Clarke, violinist, have returned to the city and resumed their classes at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory, Lyon & Healy building. These artists spent the summer on a chautauqua trip. They appeared in the eastern states and Canada, covering 6,500 miles, and making the entire journey in their car. Assisted by Earl Victor Prahl, who accompanied them on their tour, they opened their concert season in Chicago Sept. 17, when they gave a recital before the convention of the International Lyceum Association at the LaSalle hotel. On Oct. 3 they will appear at Jackson, Mich., Oct. 4 at Pontiac, Mich., and Oct. 7, for the Brownson Club in Chicago, where Mr. Clarke will give his now well-known lecture recital, "Home and Patriotic Songs of the United States." On Oct. 29, Mr. and Mrs. Clarke, together with Jeanne Boyd, will appear in recital at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory, Chicago.

AMBITION

Embodied in every normal individual is the desire and the ability for self-expression. From observation, if not from experience, we know that the happiest people are those who are satisfying this desire and this ability in the joy of their work.

It is my contention that the mainspring of all unhappiness and discontent lies in one's failure to tap his individual reservoir of self-expression. More often than otherwise this failure is due to restrictions forced on children by too ambitious parents, who. having failed in their attainment, would have their expression find its blossom in the life of the child. But we have failed to recognize the individuality of each individual. As parents, our greatest value lies in our ability to assist the child to discover its own particular phase of expression. More often than otherwise this assistance, this inspiration, this incentive, or what it may be, is furnished by the teacher. And, it might be added, the teachers who are thus capacitated are far too few in number. Who cannot recall a period in their life when the soul cried out for a helping hand to point the way when, because of the warring soul-stirrings within and lack of expression without, life seemed an impenetrable prison-house. Ambition is an overwhelming soul-stirring that will not be quelled, but must find its outlet. Most of us are expressionless for lack of the strength of our convictions—confidence in self—while this confidence in the very uniqueness and originality of its individuality is the one thing that will command attention and satisfy the ambitious soul. Emerson convincingly puts it thus, "To believe your own thought, to believe what is true for you in your private heart, is true for all men—that is genius." But most of us must pass thru a period of devouring books along our favorite line of thought to gain self-confidence and approval, only to see finally that we have lost time is a useless preamble. The fact that we feel the soul-stirrings of ambition is sufficient guarantee of latent power within. And the sooner one begins to give expression to his dream-life, the sooner one comes into the truth of his own self-expression. By the exercise of self-trust, new powers shall appear. What is the worth of one's ambition if he has not the courage to give expression to the truth as it has come to him in the silent communion with his own soul—to do that one thing which is his to do as no other can do it?

One's ambition lies in the extent to which he feels these soul-stirrings and puts forth the effort to bring them into expression. And one feels for a long period before true expression begins to manifest itself. I say, true self-expression, for the soul of man is satisfied with nothing short of truth and its revelation. Such is the condition of the human mind, imaged as it is in the likeness of its Maker.

Truth is no formidable thing. Indeed, 'tis truth that makes us free. Certainly there is no more laudable ambition than to seek truth, if, indeed, it is not the only real ambition, which, when attained, metes out its own approval and reward. Within and without there is harmony; a content, a peace which is beyond the understanding of all those who have not attained.

That still small voice speaks and we stand boldly before the world, girt about by the principles of right thinking and right living, daring to be and to give expression to the soul-stirrings of a righteous ambition, for which we are ready to live and, if need be, die.

The seeking mind and the searching heart have the promise of reward. "Seek and ye shall find." It is the working out of the law; the psychology of development. Heart-hunger shall be satisfied. Unconsciously there is a laying up of treasures in the daily life of the hungry soul, and when the fountain of life has once received its initial tap the very face of nature takes on a new and more radiant aspect. All those smoldering forces of our being begin to manifest themselves. We wonder at the new-found beauty in everything; we marvel at the love in the hearts of our fellowmen; we get a glimpse of the Infinite and feel an at-one-ment with all life. We find self to be a very storehouse of riches, ready to be transformed into radiant expression of truth and beauty. Oh, the marvel of it. The joy, the rapture of reflecting His light, which we soon recognize as being our own God-given gift. And ours the joy to serve some other soul in penetrating the darkness and gloom out of which we have come.

One thing being done in the camps today which gladdens the heart of the far-seeing man is the application of psychology to the individual man, that his true self may come into its own expression. No one effort can possibly be so productive of good as this. But because each individual is unique, each person a new quality in nature, the response to influence, the expression of each soul must be peculiar to itself. Not is man satisfied with anything short of giving expression to truth in his own individual way.

Count that man blessed who, early in life, realizes he must stand alone—he is alone—but this very condition of harmony with self is the prerequisite to that larger harmony of at-one-ment with God and all that is.

Every true man is a cause within himself, a source, a fountain; nay, he is a God in the making. Do you not feel it so then you are robbing yourself of your birthright, you are starving your own soul. Fear not for past errors. Look today in the face and in the high conceit of your manhood dare to give expression to truth as you know it to be. Let the errors of yesterday be transmuted into truth of today. Do not postpone, but live your life today! Seek no man's approval, but the integrity of your own being. Know that peace comes only thru the triumph of principle!

Thomas Hilton-Turvey Was Noted Composer

Thomas Hilton-Turvey, voice master, composer and violinist, who gained an international reputation through his songs sung all over the world by David Bispham, Rheinhold Werrenrath and Mme. Gatti Casazza, died Friday night at his home, 10 South Eighteenth Street. He would have been sixty years old October 5.

He was born in Birkenhead, England, the only son of Thomas Turvey, organist at Worlsop Abbey, England, and a teacher of note. He was educated at Great Crosby, England, and the Modern School, Toronto, Can., taking his musical B. A. under Dr. Hugh A. Clarke, of the University of Pennsylvania.

His work in voice production was extraordinarily fundamental and original, and ranged all the way from the building of tone in the deaf and dumb to voice training for opera. Probably few had gone deeper into the subject than he. He was known in a modest circle of friends as a singer and violinist of transcending beauty and artistry. He was a member of the Overseas Club of England and the United States.

He leaves a wife, Carol Hilton-Turvey, daughter of Captain Schetky, U. S. Navy, retired.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Chicagoans Present When Mrs. Coolidge Opens Music Temple

Chicago, in its social and musical aspects, was well represented at the dedication of the music temple which Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge, now of New York City, has built in the Berkshires, on South Mountain, near Pittsfield, Mass., her summer home. The temple is another manifestation of Mrs. Coolidge's interest in the form of composition colloquially called "chamber music," and is the artistic "home" of the Berkshire quartet, which she organized last year, with Hugo Kortschak, formerly of Chicago, as conductor.

The dedication of the temple was in the form of a three days' festival on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of the present week. The Berkshire quartet gave all of Monday's program and shared Wednesday's with the Letz quartet, under Hans Letz, also well known in Chicago. Tuesday's was divided between the new Elschuco trio, under Samuel Gardner, once a member of the Chicago Symphony, and the Longy Club, made up for the performance of chamber music not involving stringed instruments.

A feature of Wednesday's bill was the first performance of the quartet whose author, Tadeusz Iarecki, took the $1,000 prize offered for 1918 by Mrs. Coolidge for the best composition in kind submitted in contest.—Chicago Tribune.

Lazar Samoiloff

Miss Vivian Holt, soprano, and Ben Reuben, basso, lately with the Century Opera Company, both pupils of Lazar S. Samoiloff, whose studio is in Carnegie Hall, are making a tour in the West with the National Grand Opera Company. Miss Holt is singing the leading soprano parts as the Gilda in "Rigoletto," by Verdi, and the Lucia in the opera "Lucia." Mr. Reuben is singing the leading basso parts, the Sparafucile in the opera "Rigoletto" and the Mephisto in "Faust." They both possess beautiful voices, and the especially fine schooling and excellent method in their voice placement are receiving high praise from the critics. They have also shown great dramatic ability. Many singers this winter have been unable to sing on account of colds. That Miss Holt and Mr. Reuben have not been prevented from singing when they had colds is due, they believe, to Mr. Samoiloff's method—the old Italian school bel canto.—New York Press.

Richard Knotts

Richard Knotts, who has been summering at Wilson, N. Y., has returned to Pittsburgh and is again busily engaged in the musical activities of the city. During the first week in September Mr. Knotts appeared twice at the National American Musical Festival at Lockport, N. Y. His work met with the approval of the critics, as the following press comments will testify:

Richard Knotts, bass-baritone, one of last season's successes at the festival, made his reappearance in two song groups. Mr. Knotts has such a satisfying wealth of mellow tone, poured out without effort and discreetly controlled, that his singing affords constant pleasure. He has, moreover, the assets of good enunciation and intelligent musical conception. His singing was most cordially received and encored.—Miss Mary Howard, critic on the Buffalo Enquirer, writing for Niagara Press.

Mr. Knotts, the baritone, presented the next group of songs. Mr. Knotts' voice was clear and vibrant and he did justice to the many opportunities offered him in the several songs. Many times an opulence of tone, delightful in quality, stirred the interest of the audience.—Robert A. Bartholomew, critic for the Union Sun and Journal, Lockport, N. Y.

Mr. Knotts, the possesser of striking personality, proved that he has grown vocally in the last year, for his singing had an added musical value over last year. Of his two groups of songs, the two Chadwick songs were best, closely seconded in popular favor by the two of Burleigh.—Charles E. Watt, Chicago Music News.

Richard Knotts, bass-baritone, repeated the strong impression he created last year and sang with polish and finish. His singing meant much to the audience.—Leonard Liebling, Editor in Chief of the Musical Courier, New York City.

Press Comments on Grace Brune-Marcusson at Lockport Festival

Grace Brune-Marcusson, soprano, gave songs by Spross, Burleigh, Foster, Mason and Seiler with authority and intelligence, and the brilliancy of her last number, "A Burst of Melody," made an encore imperative.—Niagara Daily Press.

Grace Brune-Marcusson, soprano, sang a group of songs with style and intelligence.—Lockport Union Sun and Journal.

A group by the late Ed. Horsman, who had expected to be present at the festival, was sung by Mme. Marcusson with tonal purity and sweetness. English text given as this soprano utters it is no longer open to the charge of being "unsingable," so admirable and musical is her enunciation.—Niagara Daily Press.

A group of songs by Ed. Horsman and sung by Grace Brune-Marcusson concluded the afternoon program. Mrs. Marcusson displayed a lovely voice, full of dramatic power.—Lockport Union Sun and Journal.

Feeling and musical intelligence.—Chicago Examiner.

Voice clear and bell-like.—Chicago American.

Carefully trained, florid voice of surpassing sweetness.—Toledo Daily Blade.

Notes from Abroad

It is the aim of this correspondent to briefly relate to our readers the musical activities in Europe. At the beginning of the hostilities music received a deadly blow abroad and the periodicals ceased for a while. Today the conditions have changed somewhat and weekly magazines have made their reappearance. From the La Rampe of Paris (a weekly) I will from time to time translate brief notes without personal comment. In doing so we revive my notes from abroad, which, following the unusual events, have been temporarily out of the question. At present only news from France will be translated.

Paris

At the Opera Comique a presentation of the "Barber of Seville," by Rossini, enlisted the services of Mlle. Nivette as Rosina.

Marseilles

At the "Beach" Opera, "La Tosca" and "Werther" were given with Mlle. Brunet, Vezzani and Figarella. "Manson," by Massenet, with Edmond Clement as Des Grieux, was revived.

Aix Les Bains

In August a gala performance was tendered to honor the Yankees. Besides the theatrical stars, those on the musical program were Mme. Felia Litvinne of the Paris Opera and Mr. Rousseau of the Opera Comique.

Benefit for the Tank Corps; Anna Fitziu Sings

The New Century Theater was taxed to its capacity on Sunday evening, September 8, when a monster benefit for the Yanks' corps was given and brought in over $10,000. On the musical program we noted Anna Fitziu, soprano, in a rendition of the "Star Spangled Banner." Enrico Caruso was another star.

Raoul Vidas' Debut

What promises to eclipse everything else the coming season is the debut of Raoul Vidas, violinist, a pupil of the famous French master, Berthellier. We had an influx of Russian violinists last season, and, curiously, all emanating from one teacher, Professor Auer, whose heralded publicity placed him in the front ranks of teachers. Those acquainted with the great teachers will not forget that Marsik, the famous expert, was Jacques Thibaud's teacher, and that the French violinist also studied with Ysaye. Thibaud's father was the first inspiration to his son. Fritz Kreisler was Massart's pupil. Pablo Sarasate studied with Allard. Massart, Allard and Marsik are a trio of teachers recognized by the whole world as the greatest violinist experts of modern times. We know them not only by names, but from the various famous pupils they gave to the world—Thibaud, Kreisler, Sarasate and Ysaye—and now comes the 17 year old Raoul Vidas, a pupil of Berthellier, whose reputation is indisputable. On November 10 Carnegie Hall will have the first opportunity to listen to this boy. His program is novel, and I am in a position to be the first one to print it:

The Pittsfield Festival a Success

A friend musician who attended the Pittsfield Festival communicates to me the following: "The three days' festival arranged by Mrs. F. S. Coolidge at the Music Temple of South Mountain concluded on September 18 with a prolonged ovation for her. Five concerts have been given for over seven hundred guests. The Berkshire Quartet, headed by Hugo Kortschak, violinist, formerly concert master of the Chicago Symphony, played a composition by Tadeusz Yarecki, a composer who is now with the Polish Legion in France. For his unusual composition he received a prize of $1,000. Among the eighty-two aspirants this young Polish composer was presented with the prize by Mrs. Coolidge. Others who appeared were the Letz Quartet of New York. The festival was a boom for chamber music.

Pierre Monteux Now Temporary Conductor of the Boston Symphony

By permission of Mr. Gatti-Casaza, manager of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Pierre Monteux, his capable French conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra for three weeks, when the newly appointed leader is to take the rein of the organization of the Hub.

It is rumored that Camille Chevillard of the Lamoureux-Colorme of Paris is to be the leader of the Boston orchestra. Announcement will perhaps be made by the time this appears in print.

No conductor in America has risen so rapidly in a short period of time to great heights as has Pierre Monteux. From a humble violinist he has risen to the post of conductor. He has been in America since 1916. He first came into the public eye as the leader of the Diaghileff Ballet Russe. On this occasion he refused to direct Richard Strauss' music, which elicited opprobrium from our sanguine neutrals and pacifists. In the Summer of 1917 he led the forces of the Civic Orchestral organization. In the Fall of 1917 he was appointed conductor for the French repertoire at the Metropolitan Opera House. Now he is to inaugurate the season of the Boston Symphony.

The Symphony Society of New York

Immediately after the arrival of Walter Damrosch from France the plans for the next season have been outlined. There will be eight Thursday afternoons and eight Saturday evenings at Carnegie Hall, sixteen Sunday afternoons in Aeolian Hall, six symphony concerts for young folks on Saturday afternoons at Carnegie Hall, four children's concerts on Saturday mornings in Aeolian Hall and five Saturday afternoon orchestral concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Mr. Damrosch inaugurates his thirty-fourth year with the organization. While in France he acquired the rights to present "Faust and Helena," by Lili Boulanger, who died some time ago at a tender age. In France this composer is considered to be the greatest woman composer the world has yet seen.

Those who are to appear as soloists are the following: Alfred Cortot, French pianist; Henri Casadesus of the Societe des Anciens Instruments, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Josef Hofmann, Harold Bauer, Mischa Levitzki, Jascha Heifetz, Toscha Seidel, Mabel Garrison, Schumann-Heink, Lucy Gates,

Pablo Casals on the Way to United States

Owing to difficulties in procuring passports Mr. Casals' arrival in America has been somewhat delayed, but all is well that ends well. The celebrated cellist has cabled that he effected a sailing from Spain and expects to be on these shores within three weeks. About the middle of October he will begin his transcontinental tour. Over sixty bookings are recorded and more are expected by his management.

During the recent registrations on September 12th the able conductor of the Russian Symphony Society acted as interpreter for the Russian population from early morning up to a late hour in the evening.

Third Week of the San Carlo

Fortune Gallo's forces drew capacity houses on its third week's run. Owing to the great demand of operas at popular prices, the San Carlo has extended its New York season to another week, thus changing the itinerary of the company and canceling the week's engagement at Boston. On September 16th "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci" were repeated. This was a benefit performance. On September 17th "Carmen;" with the previous cast save for Miss Follis' appearance in the part of Micaela, Wednesday matinee "Romeo and Juliet"; evening, "Aida," with Antola as Amonasro.

Lucia

On September 19th Donizetta's florid opera was given before a large audience with Queen Mario (an American soprano) in the title role. Hampered by a cold, which is the more noticeable in a small house like the Shubert Theater, she could not employ the technic which the part requires. As a whole the heroine was well depicted in song, but the mad scene nearly effected a breakdown of the singer. Under these circumstances clemency is essential. This pupil of Sembrich, through hard studies, will have a career before her. The acting left much to be desired, but in profile she has a great resemblance to Galli-Curci. Signor Boscacci is a good acquisition for the San Carlo, whose tenors this year number five, for the capital parts. The tenor gave a satisfactory vocal interpretation of Edoardo. Antola shared in the success, as Henry Ashton. Rossini, Cervi, Alice Homer and De Biasi concluded the cast. Maestro Amedes Barbieri conducted on September 20th. "La Gioconda" was repeated, with the same cast.

The "Secret of Suzanne," "Pagliacci"

The first English performance of the San Carlo was given on Saturday matinee before a large audience. Wolf-Ferrari's "Secret of Suzanne," in English, would be a delight if the translation were adequate. Opera in the vernacular is desirable, but expert and literary translators are needed. With the present English text of the "Secret of Suzanne" we could easily dispense. Marcella Craft was the Countess and acted charmingly. Joseph Royer as the Count would need more study of the part, and Cervi as the dumb valet indulged more in burlesque acting than real comedy. The sparkle of the performance was Gaetano Merola, whose conducting was pleasurable. The musicians under his excellent leadership played better than on any other occasions. The other opera was "Pagliacci." Marcella Craft's characterization of Nedda was an artistic exposition of the unfortunate lover. Agostini, Royer, Rossini and Dellemolle completed the cast. Mr. Merola again directed the destinies of the performance and with excellent results. The third week was concluded with a repetition of "Trovatore" on Saturday evening, September 21st.

Salmaggi Song Contest

Maestro Alfredo Salmaggi announces a prize contest for songs in the Neopolitan dialect, which will take place at Carnegie Hall on Sunday evening, November 3rd. Many Italian composers will take part in the contest. Prizes will be awarded to winners by Enrico Caruso, Antonio Scotti and Pasquale Amato. The contest takes its name "Piediorotto" from an ancient custom of the city of Naples. This event promises to attract a large audience.

THE HADLEY CONCERT COMPANY

The Hadley Concert Company, of which Grant Hadley is manager, returned to Chicago last week from an extended Chautauqua tour through the middle and northern states. There were eighty-one towns on the circuit and the Hadleys gave two performances in each. The many fine press comments bespeak the success of this splendid company. The following names comprise the personnel:

Florence Caro Lindley, soprano.
May Pfeiffer, contralto.
Thomas Fannell, tenor.
Grant Hadley, baritone.
Lela Lowe-Pierson, violiniste.
Bernatine Dimond, cellist.
Carlton Coleman, pianist.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Concert courses of the same magnitude as usual seem to be in store for music lovers the coming season. Municipal orchestra concerts will be given as heretofore in even greater numbers, with Herman Zeitz, director. Just what inroads will be made by the new draft remains to be seen. Richard Koebner, who has been a local impresario for several seasons and instrumental in bringing the Chicago Symphony in a series each year, is offering the following artists in a special course at the Pabst Theater: Pavley Oukrainsky Ballet, Riccardo Stracciari, Arthur Shattuck, Eddy Brown, Fonzaley Quartet, Harold Bauer, Leo Ornstein, Lucy Gates and Olive Nevin. As usual, Mr. Koebner announces the Chicago Orchestra for ten concerts, with Mabel Garrison and Mischa Levitzki as soloists, and others to be announced later.

Miss Margaret Rice, personal manager of Arthur Shattuck last season, inaugurated the Twilight Series, which made so much of a place for itself. She will again give us the opportunity of hearing an excellent array of artists.

MacDowell Club opens its season October 29th. Programs of unusual interest are planned.

Miss Josephine and Eugene Sullivan, artist pupils of Iva Bigelow Weaver, were heard last week in a musical act at the Great Northern Hippodrome, Chicago. Miss Ethel Brenk, another pupil, has been heard frequently at the Great Lakes during the Summer, as well as at the dedication of the new Athletic Club, and will be soloist with the MacDowell Club November 1st.

Community singing seems to be the order of the day, from moving pictures to department stores, as well as many of the parks. Harry Meurer, Clementine Malek, Mabel Harney and Frederick Carberry are among the leaders.

The Wisconsin College, Wisconsin Conservatory, Marquette Conservatory and a new musical institution known as "The Progressive Studios," as well as most private teachers, have resumed studio work. Mrs. Marie Yahr announces her teaching in connection with the new school.

The Arion Club, with Daniel Protheroe directing as usual, is constantly enlarging its activities and announces an extension series as usual.

ISN'T IT TRUE?

This is the title of a fine little song which has just been put on the market and which is the joint work of two Gary women writers.

Alice Geer-Ferguson wrote the words and has struck a peculiarly individualistic and happy strain with her story of different "folks," whom you remember for one reason or another, but in the last verse she tells of those folks that you remember "and smile with lashes wet, to know you just remember them, because you can't forget."

Lida Browning-White, another talented Gary woman whose musical composition covers many phases of the subject, both vocal and instrumental, has set this appealing poem to music and has caught its sentiment very deftly, very succinctly and very fully.

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK AND JOHN McCORMACK THE MOST RECENT OF BIG ARTISTS TO SING "THE AMERICANS COME!"

J. Fischer & Bro., publishers of Fay Foster's 1917-18 list of songs, feel highly elated over the results they are achieving, more especially with this famous composer's "The Americans Come" and her "Love in Absence."

Unsolicited compliments coming from the most prominent artists are being sent to the publishers daily. "The Americans Come" is certainly living up to expectations and the song is proving to be one of the greatest successes of the year. What is more, indications are that this spirited and patriotic song will retain its popularity long after the war is over.

John McCormack, while cruising aboard the yacht "Surf," sang "The Americans Come" recently to a party of convalescent soldiers and marines. As we were informed by an invited guest, several of the boys heard the number sung while in Chateau Thierry, France, and it was at their request that John McCormack added it to his afternoon's program.

Mme. Schumann-Heink likewise promises to sing "The Americans Come" on every possible occasion.

Sunday, September 15th, Theodore Van Yorx rendered "The Americans Come" in Central Park, New York City, at a Community Festival Sing, under the direction of Harry Barnhart, at a gathering of approximately 10,000 people. A repetition of the song was demanded.

DAVID BISPHAM

David Bispham's activities in war service keep going at a high pitch, as they have since America entered the lists along with those who are championing the right.

In the week just past, besides teaching in his studio in New York and rehearsing for the season of Opera Comique about to open at the Park Theater by the Society of American Singers, of which Mr. Bispham is one of the founders, he has sung five times for various activities of a patriotic nature. In Ridgefield, Conn., before a distinguished gathering in the cause of Woman Suffrage, in which Mr. Bispham is much interested, and the following day in the same place at a great celebration upon the presentation of the colors and of a service flag to the Town of Ridgefield. Mr. Bispham was the principal singer upon this occasion when the troops were reviewed, addresses delivered by dignitaries of the locality and patriotic songs of the Allies were sung.

Later in the week Mr. Bispham appeared twice in the same evening at a hospital in Brooklyn, singing for American sailors who had been incapacitated. The following night in New York City at one of the great canteens he sang for soldiers, and for the fifth time in the week at Governor's Island in the "Mother Division" Y. M. C. A. hut for enlisted men, later in the evening being received by the army heads in command of Governor's Island at the Officers' Club, when the program was repeated. On this occasion, as previously during the week, Mr. Bispham had the valuable assistance of two of his artist pupils, Mrs. Jackson, alto, of Toronto, and Miss May Bradley, American soprano. Both of these ladies, by their great natural gifts as vocalists and musicians, a combination all too rare, immediately won the admiration, attention and respect of their audiences.

On Monday, September 23d, at the Park Theater, Columbus Circle, New York, the Society of American Singers, of which Mr. Bispham is vice president, opened a season of light opera, that is "Opera Comique," the smaller artistic operas of the great composers whose grand operas hold the Metropolitan stage. It will be remembered that last year the Society of American Singers was founded and two short seasons of opera were given, including such masterpieces as Mozart's "Impresario," Pergolesi's "The Maid as Mistress," Gounod's "Mock Doctor" and Donizetti's "Night Bell." That season was unfortunately interrupted by America's entry into the war. Now, however, the Society of American Singers has been reconstructed, under the presidency of Wade Hinshaw. The directors of the society are about to give an eight weeks' season at the Park Theater on Columbus Circle, the most accessible house in all New York. The first week opened Monday, September 23d, with Bizet's "Carmen," Thomas' "Mignon" and "The Daughter of the Regiment," by Donizetti, in which Mr. Bispham will have an admirable medium in the fine character part of Sergeant Sulpice.

Other operas to be performed by the Society of American Singers are "The Tales of Hoffman," by Offenbach; "The Chimes of Normandy," by Planquette, and the prize opera, "Bianca," by Henry Hadley, with revivals of pieces from the repertoire of last year.

PASSING COMMENT

Here is something which might be worth the consideration of the Public School Board of Oak Park, which has lately come into prominent notice through the fact that it has voted to retain the study of the German language in the Oak Park schools:

A Chicago traveling man who has just returned from a trip through the West reports that in the railroad station at Colorado Springs, Colo., and in various other points he saw prominently posted the following placard:

THE GERMAN LANGUAGE
Should Be Spoken in Two Places Only
These Are
GERMANY AND HELL
If you want to speak it, GO THERE. Do not use it around Here. We are 100% American.

In a review of the musicale at the studio of Flora Zygman, Music News inadvertently referred to her playing (with second piano) of the Grieg Sonata. The item should have read Concerto, of course.

Mrs. Zygman is to play with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra in January and has submitted a list of concertos from which a choice can be made for that appearance, the probability being that Mr. Ysaye will prefer the Grieg Concerto.

The wonderful collection of war trophies shown recently at the War Exposition at Grant Park, where they were viewed by almost two million people, were taken on tour and shown in many towns, a few hours in each place.

The Illinois itinerary began at Burlington on September 29 and continues until October 8, when it closes in Joliet.

John Wiederhirn, the fine young Chicago pianist who is now in war service, has succeeded John Norton in the direction of music for the Sunday morning services at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station.

Mr. Wiederhirn tells us that he wishes good singers to volunteer their services as soloists for these occasions and points out that the place and the time are ideal. Write to him about it, addressing him in care of Chaplain Thompson, Great Lakes, Illinois.

A second hearing of "Eyes of Youth," which is still being played at the Princess Theater by Margaret Illington, confirms the first impression that this is a remarkable play and that it is presented by this versatile actress in like manner.

No fewer than five distinct characterizations are required of the actress during the course of the evening, and she is not only true to each but is able also to draw each one sharply and convincingly.

No one could conceive, for instance, of two more diametrically opposed characters in looks, manner or temperament than the School Teacher and the Opera Singer, and yet Miss Illington is absolutely convincing in both.

The play itself is a visionary, occult thing which causes much speculation and comment as to plausibility, and it is presented at the Princess with such skill as to make it fascinating.

The music at this house is unique, to say the least. It is presented by only a small orchestra, placed in an upper box, but the individual members being of fine quality, the effect is penetrating as well as ingratiating.

During the Illington run the program is very apropos and it is given with much skill.

"A Hindoo Intermezzo" is exquisitely done and adds much to the atmosphere of the play, while the "Dance of the Sylphs," by the Chicago composer, Maurice Goldblatt, proves both beautiful and diverting as well as being, very patently, an excellently written piece of music.

The advertisement in Music News of last week announcing that F. Wight Neumann had taken the management of Kimball Hall and that he would present there a distinguished list of artists throughout the season has caused a great amount of comment in musical circles.

The new Kimball Hall is a beautiful place and its location could not be improved upon; and with Mr. Neumann presenting there such artists as Althouse, Leginska, Bonnet, Bauer, Carolyn Willard, De Lima, Middleton, Gabrilowitsch, Craft, Scionti, Levy and others it is bound to become, very rapidly, a popular rendezvous for all musicians.

A CONVERSATION

It was at a social function on the West Side. The Editor was talking to a minister.

"I am so glad to see you," said the latter, "because I know you can help me out. Our church gives a constant succession of social events and we are always needing soloists to help fill out our programs. I am sure you can tell me of many musicians who will be glad to appear."

"I can, indeed," said the Editor. "What is the nature of the events and how much do you pay?"

"Oh, we do not pay anything," said the minister. "We find so many young musicians who are glad to do it FOR THE ADVERTISEMENT it affords."

"In that case," said the E., "all I have to suggest is that you apply to the music schools and colleges and ask them to send you advanced pupils and amateurs who need the practice."

"Yes, but we do not want amateurs," replied the other. "We want young professionals."

"Then," replied the E., "you will have to ask some one else to recommend a list, because I personally do not believe in any professional, young or old, appearing anywhere without suitable remuneration."

"Yes, but," argued the minister, "this is for a church and they ought to be willing to help with their gifts and talents, just as other people do. In our next affair, for instance, which happens to be a dinner, all the young ladies of the church are giving their services as waitresses and a committee of women prepare the dinner. They ask no remuneration for that. Why should the assisting musician ask pay for his work."

"The cases are absolutely dissimilar," replied the E. "Your ladies, young and old, have other means of making a livelihood and their work for the church occupies only their spare hours. They do what they do merely to fill up their spare time and it costs them nothing; whereas the musician who comes to you is giving of his profession, of his only means of livelihood. He has no way of making his bread except out of his music and you have no more right to ask him to give that without pay than you would have to ask the ice cream man to furnish the dessert for nothing. If you cannot afford to pay for good music, then go without it entirely, for in my opinion you have no right whatever to expect it as a donation."

Concerning Peace

PEACE is not an ideal at all; it is a state attendant upon the achievement of an ideal. The ideal itself is human liberty, justice, and the honorable conduct of an orderly and humane society. Given this, a durable peace follows naturally as a matter of course. Without this, there is no peace, but only a rule of force until liberty and justice revolt against it in search of peace.

TELEPHONICS

A TELEPHONE JOKE

Irascible Old Gentleman (after trying vainly for some time to get the right number): "Is there a fool at the end of this line?"

Young Female Voice (at telephone exchange): "Not at this end, sir."

A DAILY EVENT

Scene: Music News office.

The telephone shrills insistently, prophetically, and is answered, when "Is this Brown, Anderson & Young?" floats over the wire.

"No," we reply, "this is not Wabash 4595 and you have THE WRONG NUMBER AS USUAL."

ANOTHER FREQUENT HAPPENING

The Editor at the phone: "Give me Austin 9300, please."

After a minute of wild ringing comes, "This is Austin 9400."

"Central," says the Editor, "you gave me the wrong number."

Bzzzzzzzzzzz (busy signal).

"Give me the manager's office," says the E., patiently.

Promptly comes connection with the manager's office, and also through this means a correct connection with Austin 9300.

"Now," says the E., signaling Central, "Give me Superior 1248, please."

Again a wrong number, again a protest and again the Bzzzzzzzzz, and also once more "The manager, please," and quite promptly through her Superior 1248.

Having finished the talk with Superior the Editor again calls up the manager and says: "Now, I have just called two numbers and was in each case given the wrong number, and in each case when I protested I was given the busy ha, ha; yet both times you were able to get my numbers without trouble. Do you still insist that the girl at Central CANNOT give me the busy signal unless the line is REALLY BUSY, and will you please try to get better service for this phone?"

"I will, indeed," she replies.

But SHE NEVER DOES IT.

A POEM

The Home Call

When Evening wraps an infant stillness round
The weary earth like Death's enwinding shroud,
And Darkness steals across the plain in proud,
Sad silence, shedding tears upon the ground;
When hushed is all disordered man-made sound,
And only Nature dares to speak aloud,
Man's hands are then at rest, his heart endowed
With new-born peace, for he is homeward bound.

So must it be when Night nears with her pall
Of final sleep, and sounds her noiseless call,
Through mothers' tears, across the battle-plain,
And lulls its deadly tumult once for all;
Then, hands at rest, men's hearts must live again,
Seek home, and there find comfort after pain.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

ANOTHER POEM

Are You a Soldier? Do you Want Liberty?

Are you a soldier? Do you want liberty?
Then buy a Liberty Bond.
Do you want our boys to win o'er the sea?
Then buy a Liberty Bond.
Dig into your jeans, clear down to the seams,
And help pave the way to where Liberty gleams
By buying a Liberty Bond.

Refrain:
Buy a bond, buy a bond, buy a bond for Uncle Sam,
It's the only way to win this fray,
And make the world a sane place to stay—
Buy a bond, a Liberty Bond;
Buy a bond for Uncle Sam.

Don't be a slacker, but do a "big bit."
Go buy a Liberty Bond.
Buy with a punch that will make a sure hit;
Buy more Liberty Bonds.
Buy two or three, then two or three more,
Then even it up by buying a score,
And Liberty will be won.

Nothing for Nothing

Music News: I am writing to tell you ow much I appreciated reading your arti-le on Commercialism in a recent issue of Iusic News, and I want you to know that heartily agree with the slogan "Nothing or Nothing," and am putting it into prac-ce.

An incident occurred last week in which am sure you will be interested.

The chairman of the social committee of certain church phoned me, and asked me I would give the musical program at the ception for the new pastor. I told her was free on that date and asked her how any numbers they would want, also stat-g my price. On hearing that I was going charge them, the chairman became very rprised. "But you belong to this church, nd what's more it would be such splendid dvertising. People here have not heard ou for so long, and it would mean other ngagements."

I told her it was my rule never to do oncert work of any kind without remu-eration, and for just that reason people ere had not heard me play for some time.

Mrs. Chairman argued to the point of rcasm, but I held my ground.

After hanging up the receiver I stood ear the phone, thinking that maybe I was elfish, and that it looked mercenary. As ese afterthoughts flashed through my head e phone rang again. Reluctantly I picked p the receiver wondering—what now?

This time it was a call from the chair-an of the program committee of a well nown north shore club, asking me if I ould appear on a certain date, which, by e way, was the same date asked for by e church committee. And without any ar-ing they were perfectly willing to pay e what I asked. This time I hung up e receiver with a much different feeling, nd more than ever determined that I was ght in sticking to my price.

Two days later I read your article on ommercialism, and now I am sure I was ght in refusing the non-pay engagement, nd from now on you can count me as one f the big "nothing for nothing" boosters.

Sincerely,
FLORENCE M. GRANDLAND.

TOR VAN PYK

Tor Van Pyk, a native of Sweden, received his musical education under such masters as Fritz Arlberg, Johann Ress, Gustave Scharfe and Alfred Thieneman.

He has concertized with great success as tenor soloist in Sweden and Denmark as well as from coast to coast in America.

Beginning with the fall term Mr. Van Pyk has become associated with the Lyceum Arts Conservatory in Chicago and already has a fine class of young vocalists under his care.

On Tuesday evening of this week he appeared in joint program with Frederik Frederiksen at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory and on next Sunday afternoon, October 6, at 3 o'clock, he will be joint soloist with Alice Sjoselius of New York in a concert for the benefit of the Swedish Old People's Home in Chicago, at Orchestra Hall, when he will sing the Cavatine from "Faust" and a group of Swedish songs.

CHICAGO CHAMBER MUSIC TRIO

On Sunday, September 22, at 16 West Jackson boulevard the first of a series of five concerts was given by the Chicago Chamber Music Trio, a new organization of its kind, composed of Ernest Toy, violinist; Frederick Morley, pianist, and Hans Hess, cellist. Made up of a group of such splendid artists, it is no wonder that the trio in its debut performance scored so signal a success. The program, if a trifle too long, was made up in a thoroughly varied and representative fashion, containing the Saint-Saens Trio in F at the beginning and the familiar Godard Trio in conclusion. The playing grew steadily more pleasing toward the end, the first number containing some spots suggestive of newness. The second group consisted of Gavotte-Aria, by Mr. Morley; Elegie, by Arensky, and the Brahms Scherzo from Opus 8. The Gavotte, written in conventional style yet full of modern temperament, revealed in the pianist a singular aptitude for composition. The Adagio and Theme and Variations from the Beethoven Trio in B flat were given with very scholarly interpretation. It is admissibly refreshing to hear a little Beethoven in the proper place after a summer of total abstinence at Ravinia. The beautifully picturesque Godard Trio (than which, to this writer, there is nothing more appealing in chamber music) was played with a rare degree of excellence.

Mr. Toy is a thorough musician of high reputation; Mr. Morley displays infallible technic and keen understanding of artistic values, and the playing of Mr. Hess is well known for its rich beauty of tone. It is to be hoped that under the guidance of these fine artists the appreciation of chamber music, so long dormant in Chicago, will be revived and fostered.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY NOTES

Miss Eleanor Eastlake and Miss Kathryn Keirnan will present a program of selected duets at Kimball Hall Saturday afternoon, October 5. Miss Helen Campbell, pianist, will assist.

Miss Mae Doelling, pianist, and Miss Jennie F. W. Johnson, contralto, will appear in joint recital Saturday afternoon, October 12, at Kimball Hall under the auspices of the American Conservatory.

The American Conservatory has been singularly successful in securing for its graduates engagements as teachers in colleges and conservatories or in Lyceum and Chautauqua. These engagements are published in the bulletins issued by the conservatory. In the public school music department every graduate of last season has been placed.

John R. Hattstaedt, secretary of the American Conservatory and son of the president, has been appointed sergeant in his company at Camp Hancock, Augusta, Ga.

THE KNUPFER STUDIOS

Walter Knupfer, director of the Knupfer Studios, has added to the vocal department of his school the eminent baritone and voice teacher, Sebastian Burnetti. Mr. Burnetti, a former pupil of Jean de Reszke, Isnardon and Lombardi, has long enjoyed the reputation of being one of the most efficient and successful voice builders of today. Half a dozen celebrities of the Chicago Opera Company, among them Charles Dalmores, the famous French tenor, and Dufranne, the favorite baritone, as well as a number of well known local teachers, have studied with him and proclaim him a pillar of strength in the art of voice perfection. His acquisition will add greatly to the efficiency of the vocal department of the Knupfer Studios, which numbers among its members artists like Frederick Carberry, Augusta Lenska (the well known contralto), Anna Griewisch-Kheiralla, Blanche Van Buren, Zerline Muehlmann and Mabel Rippe.

The first one of the weekly children's classes in ear training, elementary harmony, etc., under the supervision of Magdalene Massman, which are open to all students of the junior department of the school, will be held on Saturday, October 5, from 2 to 4 o'clock.

Later in the season Mr. Knupfer will deliver a series of lectures on music history, to which all students taking the regular course will be admitted free of charge.

The series of young artists' recitals, which were initiated last year with extraordinary success, will be continued this season.

A FINE PROGRAM AT THE VIRNA WALKER STUDIOS

Virna Harman Walker, a young artist who dances well enough to aspire to the premiere place in a grand opera company and who has been seen in many public functions in Chicago and vicinity, came into the loop district just one year ago and established herself in a fine, big studio in the old Lyon & Healy Building at the corner of Adams street and Wabash avenue, and has since that time done such admirable work and has progressed so rapidly that today her school is thronged with pupils and she is acknowledged on every side as a pronounced success.

Music News has frequently reported the fine public functions given at Miss Walker's studio, but this particular writer had never found it possible to attend any of them until last Saturday evening, at which time he had his first view of the place.

The rooms used by Miss Walker are of splendid size and appointments, as well as being so centrally located, and the atmosphere maintained through attractive furnishings and professional touches in the way of pictures, etc., is thoroughly in keeping.

There was a very large audience present on Saturday to see the program (detailed in Music News last week) and the enthusiasm was unbounded.

An innovation was the presentation of several dances to the music of the Victrola and this proved, indeed, very attractive. The pupils danced astonishingly well to this music, which is usually regarded as lacking considerably in forceful accent and the sound of the instrument was much more pleasant than that of the piano used for other dances, which, to be truthful, was not a good piano and was not played quite so well as it might have been excepting when Miss Walker herself found time in her multitudinous endeavor of the evening to play accompaniments for certain of her pupils.

To a layman the difficulty of the dance steps and the degree of acquired technic are merely incidentals, probably not sensed for anything like their real values.

But everyone can see in interpretative dances such items as exact synchronization with the music, graceful pose, pleasant and appropriate facial expression and beautiful, colorful and apropos dressing.

All these things were in evidence on Saturday night in such exhilarating degree as to prove Miss Walker unquestionably to be a very painstaking, intelligent and successful teacher, and to show also that she has a faithful, talented class of pupils.

The adherence of every one of the pupils to good rhythm and absolute correlation with the accompanying music proved conclusively that Miss Walker herself must have a very keen and thoroughly correct feeling for music.

The gracefulness of even the very young children was also a striking proof of Miss Walker's ability to lay the foundation for interpretative dancing and pantomime, and the wonderfully good taste as well as brilliant effects of the dressing gave eloquent proof, further, of artistic impulse in good working order (co-ordinately) with a correct sensing of every story or mood involved in the dances presented.

These were of wide scope and included the services of many children and young people, as well as of Miss Walker herself (incidentally and emphatically to be included in the last named classification).

There were flower imitations, nature studies, nationalistic dances, patriotic tableaux and many of the set forms of the classic and modern dances (not forgetting a very clever reading by Adelaide Burlingame) and the program closed with a very elaborate and wholly beautiful pantomime, "Pandora," arranged by Miss Walker and in which she appeared in the leading part.

Others who danced, posed and marched were Harriet Schwitzer, Charlotte Cohen, Alice Slotnikoff, Ruth Murphy, Lenore Schade, Katherine Skehan, Evelyn Lavezzorao, Anna Gladstone, Marie Ruff, Dorothy Schneider, Willa Barrett, Robert Pause and Adelaide Burlingame.

Besides appearing in "Pandora," Miss Walker gave three solo dances, two of which were seen by this writer, these being a brilliant, bounding and altogether exhilarating interpretation of the Rubinstein "Valse Caprice" and a dainty and very original reading of "Daisies."

In the last named not alone did Miss Walker present a beautiful appearance, but was also the very personification of grace and in intelligence of reading far surpassed many much older dancers.

The intermezzo portion of her dance, interposed between graceful swayings as of the nodding daisy plant, consisted of a pantomimic presentation of the "He loves me, he loves me not, he loves me" motif, and it was done skillfully and with complete conviction.

Announcement of the Chicago Opera Association

General Director Cleofonte Campanini of the Chicago Opera Association has completed his plans for the coming grand opera season, the fifth under his direction, and despite untold difficulties and unprecedented conditions the season promises to be one of the most interesting and most replete with novelties, both as to singers and to the operas of his repertoire.

"Louis XIV," by Homer Moore, is the American opera which Maestro Campanini, eager as ever to give opportunity to American composers, will present this season. It was first performed in St. Louis, where it was well received, and will form a valuable addition to the list of American operas already presented by the Chicago Opera Association. Since its initial presentation the composer has made many revisions and changes in his score.

Among the new works to be heard are: "Gismonda," Henry Fevrier's new opera, which will have its world premiere at the hands of the Chicago Opera Association. Its libretto is based upon the famous play of the same name by Sardou. The composer has arranged to come to this country to assist in the presentation of this work, the French government having granted him leave of absence in view of the importance of the premiere and because in M. Fevrier French music possesses one of its great representatives.

"Le Chemineau," by Xavier Leroux, the libretto of which is founded upon the drama in verse by Jean Richepin, "The Vagabond," and which comes with the enthusiastic endorsement of critics in France, where it is one of the favorite operas in the repertoire of the Paris Opera Comique.

"Le Cadeau de Noel," another of Xavier Leroux's recent successes, will also have its American premiere in the coming season. The story of this charming one-act opera is based upon an incident of the present war and its touching appeal, as well as the beauty of its music, has made the work one of the most popular on the French operatic stage.

"Aphrodite," by Camille Erlanger, is another opera new to America. Its plot is taken from Pierre Louy's celebrated novel. It was hailed as one of the great achievements of the Paris Opera Comique, where it was introduced in 1907 and where it has since remained one of the repertoire's main attractions.

"The Jewess" ("La Juive"), by Halevy, has held place in the European repertoire since 1835, with various presentations in America, but has not been given in Chicago, according to available records. The libretto by Scribe places the action in Constance in 1414.

"Le Maschere," by Pietro Mascagni, was first produced on January 17, 1901, creating quite a sensation by having its premiere simultaneously in seven cities — Milan, Venice, Verona, Naples, Turin, Genoa and Rome. With a libretto of great originality the opera has caused a great deal of discussion, but time has justified the composer's faith in his score, just as it did in the case of Puccini's "Madame Butterfly," which failed to gain public favor at its first performance at La Scala.

"Don Carlos," by Giuseppe Verdi, to the libretto by Mery and Du Locle, was enthusiastically received at the Paris Opera on March 11, 1867. In 1883 the composer made some changes in the score, considerably shortening the work. "Don Carlos" is the opera that immediately preceded "Aida."

Great variety is found in the list of operas which Maestro Campanini has selected for revival, ranging from modern works that were novelties in recent seasons to the lyric operas of the earliest form. They include "Cleopatre," "Don Quichotte," "Werther," "La Navarraise" by Massenet, "Samson and Delilah" by Saint-Saens, "The Tales of Hoffmann" by Offenbach, "William Tell" by Rossini, "Le Vieil Aigle" by Gunsbourg, "Falstaff" and "Otello" by Verdi, "Fedora" by Giordano, "L'Africaine" by Meyerbeer, "Hamlet" by Thomas, "Norma" by Bellini, "Linda da Chamounix" by Donizetti, "Crispino e la Comare" by the brothers Ricci.

The new artists for the coming season include a number of American singers, among whom are Miss Beryl Brown, soprano; Miss Dorothy Jardon, soprano; Mme. Margaret Namara, soprano, formerly of the Boston Opera Company; Miss Emma Noe, soprano, and William Rogerson, tenor.

Miss Sylvia Tell, an American dancer, will be the premiere danseuse.

The other new artists whose names have been added to the roster of the Chicago Opera Association are Mme. Vira Amazar, soprano of the Petrograd Opera; Mlle. Marthe Chenal, soprano of the Paris Opera and Opera Comique; Miss Dora Gibson, soprano of the Covent Garden Royal Opera, London; Mlle. Yvonne Gall, soprano of the Paris Opera; Guido Ciccolini, tenor of Costanzi, Rome; Alessandro Dolci, tenor of La Scala, Milan; Charles Fontaine, tenor of Paris Opera; Lodovioc Oliviero, tenor of Reggio, Turin; John F. O'Sullivan, tenor of the Paris Opera; Virgilio Lazzari, basso of San Carlo, Naples; Mario Valle, baritone of Communale, Bologna; Louis Hasselmans, conductor of Paris Opera Comique; Giorgio Polacco, formerly conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York.

Among the artists who are returning after an absence of several seasons are Vanni Marcoux, baritone of the Paris Opera at Paris and for the past four years a soldier in the armies of France, and Marcel Journet, basso of the Paris Grand Opera.

The following artists have been retained:

Sopranos—Anna Fitziu, Amelita Galli-Curci, Mary Garden, Florence Macbeth, Margery Maxwell, Miriam Mooney, Evelyn Parnell, Alma Peterson, Marie Pruzan and Rosa Raisa.

Mezzo-sopranos and contraltos—Louise Berat, Maria Claessens, Cyrena Van Gordon, Carolina Lazzari, Irene Pavloska and Marguerite Sylva.

Tenors—Octave Dua, Forrest Lamont, Lucien Muratore and Warren Proctor.

Baritones—Georges Baklanoff, Desire Defrere, Alfred Maguenat, Riccardo Stracciari and Giacomo Rimini.

Bassos—Vittorio Arimondi, Gustave Huberdeau, Constantin Nicolay and Vittorio Trevisan.

Messrs. Pavley and Oukrainsky, the talented Russian dancers whose art is well known to Chicago audiences, will take part in a number of special performances.

Marcel Charlier and Giuseppe Sturani will once more be found among the conductors.

Maestro Cleofonte Campanini will, if his duties in the administration permit, direct the orchestra on special occasions.

The balance of the personnel will be made up as follows: Emile Merle-Forest of La Monnaie, Brussels, stage director; Pietro Nepoti, chorusmaster; Francois Ambrosiny, balletmaster; Anton F. Carbonieri, Arnaldo Conti, Frank St. Leger, Giacomo Spadoni, Cesare Sturani and Ettore Titta Ruffo, assistant conductors.

The season's offerings, in addition to the novelties and revivals, will be selected from the following:

Bizet—Carmen.
Charpentier—Louise.
Debussy—Pelleas and Melisande.
Donizetti—Lucia di Lammermoor.
Fevrier—Monna Vanna.
Gounod—Faust, Romeo and Juliet.
Leoncavallo—Pagliacci.

Puccini—La Boheme, Madame Butterfly, La Tosca.
Rossini—The Barber of Seville.
Verdi—Aida, Il Trovatore, Rigoletto, La Traviata.

As last year, the regular Chicago season will be preceded by a tour of three weeks to a number of western and southern cities, and on January 27, 1919, the company will open its second New York season at the Lexington Theater.

FRANK DE LA FONT

coming popularity. Mr. and Miss De La Font, brother and sister, have had their entire training under Mrs. Derdiger and have only studied since January, so that a program of the foregoing proportions shows ably the results which Mrs. Derdiger is capable of getting in a few months. Both singers are open for professional engagements, proof of the fact that they possess vocal assurance and personal self-confidence.

The concert was attended by a large and enthusiastic audience, and friends were present in goodly numbers, if this can be judged by the lavish shower of beautiful bouquets.

Mr. and Miss De La Font's songs ranged over a goodly repertoire of operatic and recital numbers. That their teacher has not neglected their schooling in foreign languages was demonstrated by the rendition of the arias from "Favorita" and "Faust," and a sense of humor was cleverly inserted in the case of such songs as "The Naughty Little Clock" and "Locations."

The De La Fonts have every right to be proud of having delighted their friends on Wednesday night and we wish them continued success in their further study.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

BLANCHE SLOCUM

One of the most interesting announcements of this season is the song recital which will be given by Blanche Slocum at Orchestra Hall next Tuesday evening, October 8.

And, indeed, few events in any season have been more important or have attracted more attention.

Miss Slocum has been very much in the public mind and eye the past six months, for she was the last American singer to leave Germany after having studied there for four years and having been forcibly detained many months after our war with that country had begun.

Since her arrival in America she has written a series of very sensational articles for the American newspapers and has given a great many lectures on patriotic subjects, these activities having made her known to a wide circle of people.

Naturally, therefore, everyone wants to see her and, equally, everyone desires to hear the voice which has not been presented in Chicago since her return from Germany.

It is an open secret that Mary Garden has been Miss Slocum's inspiration and backer in her years of study, and it is thoroughly interesting to know what that famous singer has said about her in public print.

"I knew as soon as I heard the first note of her song that she had a phenomenal voice," said Miss Garden. "It is a dramatic soprano with wonderful range and possibilities. Blanche Slocum is a glory and is bound to become one of the world's greatest singers. Her voice is sweet and flexible and is suited to any part she wishes to sing. It is wonderful."

All this was said in an interview given the Associated Press, and it has been read by many thousands of people all over the country. And the result is such interest and enthusiasm as will result inevitably in a sold-out house for the Chicago recital.

Miss Slocum's home is in Oak Park, and that suburb, as well as the musicians of Chicago, is on tiptoe of excitement to hear her and to show appreciation for her achievements. Therefore a big committee of society women of the town has been made into a patroness list and has done everything in its power to cause advance knowledge of the coming Slocum recital. When the evening of October 8 rolls around it will witness such a contingent of Oak Park society at Orchestra Hall as has never been there before, in all probability.

Miss Slocum, whose voice is both powerful and of astonishing range, has prepared a program of unusual content and variety, and as her accompanist is to be Edgar Nelson, the musical delight of the occasion is a foregone conclusion.

Following her Chicago appearance Miss Slocum will fulfill engagements in all parts of the country, these being under the direction of Julius Daiber of New York and his Chicago associate, James Hawley.

Mr. Daiber has prepared an attractive circular for use in introducing Miss Slocum, and from this source we quote the following biographical sketch:

"Miss Blanche Slocum, a native of Michigan, at an early age showed considerable talent and musical ability. Professor of Music T. P. Giddings of the Oak Park schools, which she attended, declared that she had an unusual and rare voice, and after consulting with her parents it was decided that she should study with a view of entering on a professional career. Professor Giddings offered her a free scholarship and she began her studies under his direction. At the Chicago Musical College, at the age of seventeen, she won a medal. Later on she studied with the eminent vocal teacher, Maurice Devries of Chicago. It was in the spring of 1911 when Mary Garden's attention was called to Miss Slocum's voice, and after hearing her declared that she had a most beautiful voice and was bound to become a great singer. Miss Garden immediately made arrangements for this young American to go abroad to Paris and study with her former teacher, Trabadello. After two years of study she went to Berlin and remained there a year after the outbreak of hostilities between the United States and Germany and was the last American singer to leave Germany."

HEIZER SCHOOL OF MUSIC

The Heizer Music School, Sioux City, Iowa, under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Heizer and son, Frederick Heizer Jr., at present in the service of the United States Navy, is beginning the season's work in its beautiful new school building with a very encouraging enrollment. During the past few months Mrs. Heizer has presented three gifted young boy pianists. Gilbert Kramer, a fifteen-year-old lad who enters high school this fall, gave a program of classics, showing unusual talent. Dick McGraw, thirteen years old, still in the grades, showed great musical ability, playing a difficult Beethoven Sonata with much finish. Harry Thatcher, another thirteen-year-old lad, of Ruthven, who has been studying through the summer with Mrs. Heizer, gave an all-American program, using works by MacDowell, Nevin and Cadman and a two-piano concert Caprice by Charles Gilbert Spross. Mrs. Heizer takes a special delight in her boy students and has had unusual success with them.

The MacDowell Club, under the direction of Mrs. Frederick Heizer, gave its first program of the season Tuesday afternoon, October 1, at the Heizer Music School, at which time the new high school students were admitted as associate members of the club. The program was given by Miss Mabel Barclay, Miss Gertrude Trowl, Miss Frances Fribourg, Miss Irma Ratliff and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Heizer, and consisted of violin solos, two-piano numbers, string quartet and piano quartet.

STUDIO OF HANNA BUTLER

Last Saturday afternoon Roena Mulford, a young pupil of Mrs. Hanna Butler, sang a short recital of songs in Mrs. Butler's studio before a small audience of guests. She sang "Ouvre les yeux bleues" (Massenet), the Waltz Song from "Romeo and Juliet," the "Vilinelle" of Dell'Acqua and "I Send My Heart Up to Thee" (Branscombe). In all these she revealed a high lyric voice, young in quality yet more mature in interpretative power. Miss Mulford has significant possibilities to work for, and everything is in her favor, for there is not an unpleasant note either in her voice or in her stage appearance.

One of the most interesting experiences of Paul Althouse's career was his recent concert at the United States Ordnance Plant at Perth Amboy, N. J., when he sang before an audience of 10,000 and was received with the greatest enthusiasm.

On his forthcoming western and southern concert tour Mr. Althouse has volunteered his services for the fourth Liberty Loan and will also give extra concerts at every cantonment near the cities of his itinerary. On Wednesday, September 18, the popular all-American tenor sang at the De Witt Clinton High School, New York, at one of the well known Globe concerts, given under the direction of Charles D. Isaacson. Here he introduced several new songs by American composers that met with great favor.

A CHARACTERISTIC SCHUMANN-HEINK ACT—ONE OF MANY

The following from the New York Herald tells of just another of "Mother" Schumann-Heink's little acts of kindness to "our boys" whom she calls "her boys."

"Mme. Schumann-Heink was at the height of her glory last night. She just gathered in ten young seamen from an armored cruiser that happened to be in New York waters and 'God bless their souls,' she said, as she gave a dinner for them at the Waldorf Astoria hotel such as they will never forget. There was a bit of sentiment connected with the dinner, for this cruiser in peace times often plies from San Diego, Mme. Schumann-Heink's home city, up the Pacific coast to the northern boundary. She had been on the lookout for several weeks for the craft, and when she learned that the warship had returned from across the ocean, she sent word down to the captain that she wanted to do a little for his seamen. Last night's dinner was the result. There in a beautifully decorated room at the Waldorf, set aside for her and 'her boys from the Pacific coast,' with roses climbing around over the table and with the Stars and Stripes all about, she laughed in that characteristic way of hers until her big blue eyes fairly wrinkled themselves out of view, and told them stories and patted them on the shoulder and said to each and every one of them, 'Bless your hearts, you're the dearest boys on earth.'"

Grandland, concert pianist and accompanist, who played with such great success in the student-artist series at Ravinia Park, appeared this week as soloist and accompanist in joint recital with Amy Emerson Niell, violinist, and Mina Hager, contralto, at the opening program of the Evanston Woman's Club. Miss Grandland gave for her numbers a Chopin group.

The Elderly Person

A fine, powdery snow was falling at noontime of a February day when two gentlemen alighted from a train at Chestnut Hill, just out from Philadelphia. One was tall, alert and vigorous under his long box overcoat. The stylish top coat of the other shielded a short, compact frame, but did not hide a laughing mouth and merry eyes. As the two strode away from the station there was nothing to indicate that they were other than ordinary men, father and son.

But under those overcoats, and invisible to any but the sharpest eyes, were the spirits of another creator and his offspring. For just one-half day "Hugh Wynne" and Dr. S. Weir Mitchell came from the far away Elysium fields and roamed once more about the haunts they loved and made famous to all book lovers.

The younger led the way. Down the wide lane and on into a road it went, bordered and brooded over by widespread arching limbs of mighty trees. And to make the returned spirits feel at home at once, a sign board stated that here was one place where automobiles were forbidden entrance. The snow fell with a soft, insistent spell, coating the figures with a crust of rime to place them back the hundred years or more where they belonged. The whiteness settled on the chains between posts which made a barricade along the depths of that thick woods lining heavily both sides of the twining and turning roadway. The forest was not like a western one where oak, ash, hickory and maple chiefly strive for precedence. They were all there, but in between, and successfully seizing every vantage were the many varieties of evergreen—pine, tamarack, spruce, fir, hemlock and juniper. And the thick underbrush held sassafras, elder, cherry, dogwood and all the company of shrubs which thrive beneath thick meshed tree tops. As the footsteps went deeper into these silences heavy shadows enveloped and surrounded the pilgrims. For a time their footsteps sent echoes and the voices had their sounds tossed back. The older man threw back his chest and gloried aloud in the splendid hush when the young man's laugh came back in a hundred happy cadences.

As the way led down the hill the pilgrims noticed that nature had deeply laid her plans for a big snowstorm. The powdery rime, being really tiny balls of the hardest ice, like shot of the most delicate calibre, had fallen on the warm earth, congealed and made a foundation for the coming invaders. They were the engineers. Much of the powder had lodged in the green of the resinous trees and given them an outline of lacy filigree. Now came the larger flakes, whirling lazily at first but increasing in number and power so fast that they soon blurred the outlook. They quickly silhouetted the fences and put topknots on every post. They blew into pockets and hid dead leaves; they ran into crevices of earth and by their whiteness accented the blackness of the fissures; they perched merrily on jutting spurs of the granite cropping from the hillside and called to comrades to join them when, topheavy, they fell over in a heap, laughing; they searched out every limb, every bough, every twig and made encampment; they dashed at the rough bark of the big trees, found vulnerable places for foothold and plastered the whole shaft with their endless hordes; platoons and divisions took the road away for their portion and sat down sturdily on the icy foundation to make a further substrata for the phalanxes yet to come. This roadway had been free from travel many days. The alternate thaws of day and frosts of night had unloosed the waters in the towering hills on either side. On warm days these ran down the open road. Not all the flow succeeded in reaching the little river below. Much was caught in the locking arms of the ice king. In his glee he had made this a long coating of ice—brilliant and beautiful for observation, but uncommonly slippery for feet. The light covering of snow completed the difficulties of serene progress.

"The heels of O'Sullivan do be a comfort," began the older man—but he did not complete the sentence. The heels were treacherous. Both feet flew into the air and down he went. The smooth overcoat made an ideal toboggan, and a spacious rear view of cleaned ice followed his impromptu ride until a friendly rough spot intervened.

"Zounds!" said the young man as he slid and teetered to keep a balance and come to the aid of his rueful comrade.

"By my halidame, these be parlous, troublous ways," quoth the older as he strove to regain a perpendicular of dignity.

"You are in for trouble," shouted some lads busy about a fire where cooking was in progress. "It's slippier 'n anything all the way."

And so it proved until a curving bridge over the frozen stream below brought opportunity to secure breath and readjustment. Untouched by footsteps or vehicle track the snow lay a thick mantle everywhere. Its dead whiteness and the hush intensified the heavy hoods of the surrounding forest. Save for the lads they had passed the travelers had met no living creature, while the snow had slowly become a carpet of many inches.

"There do be a hostelry in these parts," asseverated the younger man, "and a likely serving maid to brew us a portion. Methinks 'twere well to seek it out and refresh the inner man. What say you?"

"Even so, it is very seemly," affirms the other. "An' the portion be goodly, I care not if the maid be comely or no. Thou mayest chuck her under the chin an' it be thy pleasure. I will be discreet and dry my boots the while thou dalliest."

"Here be the inn," shouted the younger a few minutes later, as he pounded the knocker vigorously. "What ho, landlord! Mine host! Here be two hungry travelers.

Gadzooks! Look about thee! Art deaf, man?"

But no answer came and they fain made entrance unattended. Many tokens were there that the inn had stood on its foundations over the hundred years. A high rack behind the bar was weighted with pewter tankards and platters and glasses of colonial shapes. Sporting pictures of the British type, wherein is glorified the red coated rider and the long flanked horse, were on the walls. And settles and chairs of ancient date were at the walls. In another room which seemed the tavern proper was a wide throated fireplace with crane and hob and a blazing fire of big logs. Also two most reserved and proper of twentieth century young people, male and female. These eyed their bread and butter and jam with a decorum that was more frigid than the ice-bound river outside. They hastily finished their meal and vanished.

"Egad, but this do be strange," roared the young man. "What ho! Waiter! Garcon! Fetch us a pipe and a bowl!"

Therewith appeared a person no longer young, no longer comely, yet undeniably plump. The older one noticed this and nudged the young man. "Thou mayest have her for all of me," he remarked, sententiously.

"Two long pipes and frothy tankards of ale, and be quick about it," ordered the young man; "and a fair round of beef and potatoes and bread and butter to go therewith, and mayhap a goodly pastry also."

But she shook her head. "We serve only tea and sandwiches," she said dictatorially, as she swept off the crumbs from the table with her hand and arranged the salt, pepper and mustard just so. "As for long pipes, I don't know what you mean. We have Robert Burns cigars or Omar cigarettes."

It took her many moons to evolve the sandwiches, afterward enlivened with a jar of blackberry jam which was in sad state of depletion when the feast was ended.

Then began the great adventure for the spirits of Hugh Wynne and Dr. Mitchell—a walk of two hours or more along a bridle path on the side of the mountain with only the solitude of the forest and the chatter of the little river for company whenever its current burst through the fettering ice and gave the pent-up water freedom. They were absolutely alone in the splendor.

All the time the snow fell smoothly, steadily. It loaded the evergreens till the limbs bent to the ground. The slightest touch to a laden bough created a miniature avalanche. Above and below the trees were burdened. At times the path was a hundred sheer feet above the stream and the sight went over the tops of mighty veterans of the forest. There were no clearings and no sort of conservation that tokened man's care. It looked as if nature was left unmolested in these miles and miles of timber. The fallen trees lay where their graves had been chosen for them by some stormy upheaval. Dead branches and litter were undisturbed. Under the snow, in pockets, the tread felt the spring of rotting leaves. In the far-off ages volcanic eruption had brought to the surface enormous masses of rock, the strata nearly always diagonal or bias from the earth's surface. In and out among these silent utterances of a violent past wound the path. From every fissure the frozen water confessed its enforced obedience. Again and again the travelers slipped on these hidden glaciers. All sense of dignity or ease was lost. The toes were clenched, inside the shoes, in an endeavor to get a firm hold, but of little avail. To tell the number of times each man tumbled would be tiresome. There were all kinds of falls, too. And flounderings which threatened to land them in the little river but for friendly stoppage by tree trunks. No part of either body but got its bump; no article of outside apparel but served as a sled or skate or ski during the sprawling progress. The shoes and trousers were soaked. Everything was wrecked except the spirits of the men. They shouted at and jeered one another. Their laughter rang and echoed. They bandied the expletives of another period unceasingly. "Zounds" and "Gadzooks" caught the echoes again. They floundered and plunged through the snow under the heavy, far-reaching shadows of the woods with an exhilaration which never slackened, never felt strain and which even weathered the storm itself. . . . When they regretfully emerged from the shades they had grown to love anew it was late afternoon, and the long range of the Wissahickon Hills in Fairmount Park were behind them.

"Fine, wasn't it?" said the young man.

"Glorious," asserted

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

LELA LOWE-PIERSON

Lela Lowe-Pierson, violinist, has returned to Chicago after fulfilling a twelve weeks' successful Chautauqua tour, and announces that she is in the field for concert engagements, as well as teaching.

The following biographical matter has been contributed by one who knows her abilities and achievements intimately:

"Deep love for music, exceptional talent, and great ambition prompted Lela Lowe-Pierson to take up the study of the violin at a very early age. From the first her teachers predicted a career for her and after studying several years at the Institute of Musical Art, New York, she was engaged by the Redpath Musical Bureau of Chicago, and for the past three years has toured the United States and Canada under this management, apearing everywhere with great success.

"Her playing is characterized by much individuality, splendid technic and a broad, sympathetic tone. Her personality possesses all the charm of the distinctive southerner, and her youthful enthusiasm, absolute poise and unaffectedness win for her new admirers at each appearance."

JENNETTE LOUDON'S STUDIO

By way of opening the season, Jennette Loudon gave an informal "tea musicale" in her attractive studio rooms in the Fine Arts Building last Sunday afternoon. Miss Loudon and her able faculty certainly have the gift of making their guests feel at home, as well as of providing them with enjoyable entertainment.

The program (if one may give it so conventional a name) was opened by Miss Margaret Weiland, a very talented young artist who is assisting Miss Loudon in the studio this year. She played Polonaise from "Eugene Oniegin" (Tschaikowsky-Liszt) with flawless technic and much musical feeling.

Another member of the Loudon faculty is Ruby Evans of the Chicago Opera Company, a thoroughly charming artist possessed of rare interpretative power in concert work, as well as opera. She gave two groups of songs containing "In the Garden" (Mary Turner Salter), "Blackbird Song" (Cyril Scott) and one of the Burleigh Negro Spirituals. Beside these she gave a most artistic rendition of Miss Loudon's song, "Memory," which was originally written for low voice, but which contains great distinction in the higher key. The words of this song are unusually fraught with meaning, and Miss Loudon's accompaniment is perfectly attuned to the feeling of the poem.

Ralph Michaels of the violin department played two numbers with splendid tone—"Elegie," by a Chicago composer, Robert Just, and "Serenita" (Vieuxtemps). The former composition, written along extremely modern lines, though perhaps not of the popular kind, still contains many points of interest to a musical listener. Mr. Michaels is also a member of the Beethoven Trio, the personnel of which includes this year Miss Loudon and Frank De Moulin, cellist, in addition.

Miss Weiland played for her second group two attractive original compositions, "A Monotone" and "Capriccio."

A group of spoken songs was given by Dr. Clark, foremost among them being Miss Loudon's setting of "In Flanders Field." This is a very impressive and dramatic setting of MacRae's beautiful words, and is to our mind among the very few successful interpretations of this difficult piece.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

GREAT LAKES REVUE

The opening night of the Great Lakes Benefit Revue gave the Chicago public a taste of what the men can really do. The performance was a great success and certainly proves beyond a doubt that talent—and not only talent but the ability to demonstrate it to full advantage—is unlimited at Great Lakes. The comedy, from the bare idea to the working out of each detail, was original and carried out in a thoroughly professional way. There was nothing amateurish about the staging, the parts were splendidly chosen and well done, and the orchestra and chorus were well trained and rousing to a degree.

The only criticism which might be made is that the performance was too long, although the audience was so consistently entertained that few thought of leaving before the end.

No Chicagoan who loves fun and frolic can afford to miss this show. It is well worth your money.

M. BARBEREUX PARRY

Mrs. M. Barbereux Parry opened her spacious new studio at 506 Fine Arts Building on September 30 with a splendid class.

The Barbereux system of constructive voice production gives hope to all voices, for the constructive principle, which is the tuning of the individual tone throughout the whole range, not only builds the undeveloped voice in power, compass and tonal beauty, but reconstructs the worn and unbeautiful voice. In fact, this system is every day bringing back the original beauty and power of voice to many singers, who have not been able to use their voices for years, with the old thought of physical effort and health consciousness.

This work is the most advanced of any in the vocal field today, and the unlimited faith all students of this system have in their work proves their results fully justify all claims.

Madam Parry recognizes the great interest that many who have not studied the system feel and because of this she is glad to demonstrate with students in all stages of the work for the benefit of those who are curious. In fact, she says, "My studio is a 'work shop' or a 'laboratory' if you will, where purely scientific principles are being applied to voices which are in all degrees of deficiency. The process is most interesting from a purely scientific standpoint and I gladly arrange for public demonstrations at any time. For to know and recognize the human voice 'as a stringed instrument' is the local 'new thought' of today and is the hope of singers of the future, and to educate the masses to this viewpoint is our mission."

Notice—The article on "Ambition," in the Music News of September 27, was written by Marie Glem Estill, associate teacher of the Barbereux System.

LYRAVINE VOTAW

Lyravine Votaw spent a busy summer with private voice pupils and normal training classes in her studio, 110 Auditorium Building. She also conducted the music in teachers' institutes in Indiana counties in August.

Her course for music supervisors and grade teachers is strong and highly enjoyable. The classes are in session Saturday. Advanced methods, 9 o'clock; harmony, 9:30; musical appreciation, 10:30; history of music, 11:30. Courses for primary and intermediate grades begin the first week in October and will be held Saturday afternoons. A class in rhythmic expression is also being formed.

Miss Votaw's work is accredited by the Board of Education for teachers' promotional credits.

The music at Our Lady of Lourdes, St. Jerome's and the high school of De Paul is under Miss Votaw's supervision. Her students are filling important positions. Miss Votaw is associated with the Dearborn School of Lyceum Arts at 110-111-112 Auditorium Building and will make visitors welcome at any time.

A class in theory for singers was most successful under her direction last season. It will be resumed in the near future.

SECOND CONCERT OF THE CHICAGO CHAMBER MUSIC TRIO

The second concert of the new Chamber Music Ensemble, consisting of Ernest Toy (violin), Hans Hess (cello) and Frederick Morley (piano), took place before a remarkably large audience on last Sunday afternoon at 16 West Jackson boulevard.

This place, new to concert-goers, is the audience room of a church organization and it lends itself admirably to the needs of chamber music, as it is not too large, it is reasonably quiet (at least on "gasless" Sundays) and its acoustics are good.

The program consisted of two Bach excerpts (not heard by this writer), the Schumann Trio in D Minor, a Paraphrase on a Negro Melody by Coleridge-Taylor and a "Fairy Waltz" (Schuett).

The Schumann piece was, of course, the keystone of the concert and it proved to be a splendid work, excellently played.

The three members of the ensemble are solo artists of such splendid attainment that the tonal quality produced by them together could not fail to be fine, and their musicianship is such as to make a definite, logical reading certain.

The finer nuance, the absolute blend of tone which comes from long association, is already admirably suggested and it is certain to come in full measure with a few more appearances.

The Chicago Chamber Music Trio is destined, therefore, inevitably to become one of the very finest factors of the local situation, and the style and finish already attained are thoroughly gratifying.

The Adagio of the Schumann number was considerably the best of the three and in it the singing tone of both violin and cello were exquisite.

The Coleridge-Taylor piece, which is both novel and characteristic, was played with beautiful tonal quality and sympathetic interpretative thought, and the Waltz of Schuett, while not particularly "fairy" in style or utterance, was yet of original content and attractive rhythmic flow.

These concerts continue for five Sundays at the same place and there is every evidence that by that time they will be so well established that the trio will have become one of the decided factors of the season and will, doubtless, have frequent presentation in other environment.

A NEW ORGAN DEDICATED

In spite of war times, Chicago has witnessed already this fall two important organ openings, and there are probably others in view.

The latest occasion was last Wednesday evening, when, at the Calvary Presbyterian Church, on Keeler avenue and Jackson boulevard, a handsome new Casavant organ was inaugurated with a distinctive recital by Harrison M. Wild, with Marie Sidenius Zendt as the assisting singer.

Milon R. Harris is the director of music at this church and has in the last year or so built up one of the characteristically fine Harris choruses which have flourished in a number of West Side churches, and he naturally has become a prime favorite with the choir and congregation. Up to this time, however, he has been compelled at Calvary to be content with a piano only for background, and although he had the skillful services of Bessie McAllister as accompanist, yet it must be a great joy to him to now have so fine an instrument to supplement his efforts. And Miss McAllister is to be congratulated also on the new medium she will have on which to exercise her skill and artistry.

The organ is not a big one, and its lack of great body, as also its rather limited number of specific solo stops, made its use in recital a trifle disappointing. Nevertheless it is of exquisite tone and balance, and for church use it will unquestionably be a permanent joy and inspiration.

Mr. Wild, master technician no less than fine artist and thoroughly skillful program builder, was heard in a program which might well be used as a model by anyone who needs a list of representative works for such an occasion as that of last Wednesday.

Bach, for instance, is at his biggest and best in the G minor Fantasie and at his most charming point of childlike simplicity and art in the famous Air in D, both of which were played with classic purity, the group closing logically and in fine proportion also with the Finale to Opus 22 (Piutti).

The next group was frankly one to charm and consisted of the "Spring Song" (Mendelssohn), "Autumn Sketch" (Brewer) and "In Summer" (Stebbins), three characteristic bits, each one beautiful after its own kind and altogether forming a colorful and very beautiful group.

The next group opened with the familiar but ever fine "Funeral March and Seraphic Chant," that most characteristic of all Guilmant excerpts, followed by the rather difficult-to-fathom Nocturne by Bonnet and the indestructible and perennially popular "Tannhauser" March (Wagner).

The closing group opened with the Military Polonaise of Chopin, played with much vim and such volume as the organ afforded, and contained further the pretty Andantino (Lemare) and the strongly outlined and remarkably well built variations on "The Star Spangled Banner" by Dudley Buck.

Mrs. Zendt, who had the scholarly accompaniment of Mr. Wild at the piano and organ to give her background, appeared to decided advantage in her very first song, "The Nightingale" (Ward Stephens), which she sang with beautiful quality and keen perception of its inherent musical beauties, following this up with a clear-cut reading of the crisp "Blackbird's Song" (Cyril Scott) and a neatly virtuosic and effective rendition of "Lo! Here the Gentle Lark" (Bishop).

Mrs. Zendt has long since won her place as a mistress of the art of oratorio, and she has made especially her own Haydn's "Creation." Therefore her singing of "With Verdure Clad" came in the nature of an established reading, the fine artistic points of which were long ago conceded by everyone. The work found her on Wednesday in most responsive mood, and its rendition added much to her prestige.

For closing group the Spohr "Rose Softly Blooming," which is a favorite in her repertoire, was sung with much suavity and purity of tone; Carpenter's "Home Road" was made as effective as its nature will permit, and Tosti's "Good-Bye" was sung with brilliant effect. "When the Boys Come Home" was used effectively as encore.

The occasion was distinctly a gala one at Calvary and was attended by more than a thousand people. These found great pleasure in the beautiful quality of the organ and in the realization that it had come to stay.

Blanche Slocum

Her voice is such a one as is seldom heard. Not once in a generation does one find such qualities. It is a dramatic soprano, but so great is the range that she can sing almost any part. Her voice is so sweet and flexible and suited to any part she wishes to sing. It is wonderful.—Mary Garden in interview to the Associated Press.

It would be hard to say in which number Miss Slocum was at her best, because she was superlative in all of them. Her voice is magnificent, with a wide compass and rich tones. "Fear Ye Not, Oh Israel" was very fine, and she sang a lullaby song with wonderful sympathy. "A Necklace of Love" was a favorite also. Personally, we confess a preference for her operatic selection "O Don Fatale," which she sang superbly. Miss Slocum is of magnificent stage presence and seems fitted in every way for the operatic field.—Merrill, Wis.

An appreciative audience gathered last evening to hear Miss Blanche Slocum in her song recital. It was indeed a musical treat, each number being artistically rendered. Miss Blanche Slocum is a singer of rare ability and her range of voice is most unusual. She has a charming personality and a very pleasing stage presence, which add greatly to the enjoyment of her programs. The first number, "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from the Opera "Samson and Delilah," showed her talents to the best advantage, but the more simple songs, particularly the lullabys, were perhaps more greatly enjoyed.—Merrill, Wis.

The song recital given by Blanche Slocum last evening was a very successful affair. Miss Slocum never appeared to better advantage, and her program was varied enough to exhibit her voice in all its beauty. She was particularly pleasing in her rendition of "O Don Fatale," from Verdi's "Don Carlos," and in "Thy Beaming Eyes," by MacDowell."—Wausau, Wis.

Try the Cello

Teachers of violin playing will do real service to their respective communities by encouraging boys and girls to take up the cello. It is indispensable for ensemble performance, trio, quartet or quintet, and a solo instrument of great beauty with wonderful possibilities in the way of expression.

The place which the splendid art of Casals has made for him should react on the public of young musicians and materially increase the number of students of the cello. This artist lauds the cello's power and variety of expression. Its range extends through three clefs, bass, tenor and soprano, and it can take the bass part in an orchestra as well as a singing part. In addition, the length of the strings is especially favorable to harmonics; and in variety of timbre it yields nothing to the violin.—The Violin World.

A Business-Like Fall Beginning

The business man depends upon checking up at every step in his work. He must do this to know whether he has everything attended to. The checking is done when the work is complete. Here is a list which the teacher who aspires to be orderly and progressive may use for checking up when the season starts. It represents the various steps in the preparation of material.

If you have completed these, check them off on this list. If you have not, find out why you have not done them, whether they should be done. The absence of some element may explain why you are not doing all that you expected to do.

AT THE WARRINGTON

A really wonderful play is "His Other Wife," by Carl Mason, and it has been cast, staged and rehearsed by Mr. Pyre so remarkably well and with such intelligent skill that the performances at the Warrington this week easily reach a high water mark in the annals of the stock company and provide Oak Parkers with entertainment at once thoughtful and charming.

How anyone can waste his evenings at cheap vaudeville or the movie houses with such entertainment at hand as that provided by Pyre's Popular Players at the Warrington is difficult to understand.

"His Other Wife" is dramatic in the extreme, without even approaching the melodramatic. It is turgid and intense and carries a deep, well concealed mystery, but it is shot through and through also with romance and humor.

The larger dramatic moments belong to Karl L. Way, who plays Robert Bevington convincingly throughout and in the big speech of the last act rises to eloquence.

Bess Bennett as Mrs. Bevington is charming, while at the same time intelligent and skillful in the handling of a rather nondescript part.

The humor is supplied by Harry Castle, who is fine as the politician.

Either Mr. Castle is unfortunate in being assigned parts which drip with profanity or else he gratuitously introduces it in extreme. If the latter, he should know that it is distinctly offensive; if the former, Mr. Pyre should use a blue pencil.

The romance is supplied by Avis Wynne and Allen York, who make an ideal pair of young lovers.

Miss Wynne is pretty and igenuous and Mr. York, who is a distinctly personable young man, finds in this play his exact metier. He is dignified and restrained, while at the same time thoroughly appealing and in the dramatic moments he also rises to distinct success.

Jean Cooper and Robert Valentine play well the parts of Mrs. and Mr. Stewart, and Cora King as the unfortunate adventuress, who is shot at the end of the first act, was credible, both in looks and action, and she also spoke her lines intelligently.

Jean De Perrior was a very good butler and made much of the fine lines assigned him, while the cast was completed logically and satisfactorily by James Livingston and Kingsley Gordon.

Next week, "Which One Shall I Marry?"

THE APOLLO CLUB AT THE MUNICIPAL PIER

Unless it is possible to heat the hall it must be said, at once, that the Municipal Pier is no place on which to give a concert on the last day of September, and, therefore, it was a blue-nosed and exceedingly apathetic, although large, audience which heard the Apollo Club sing a magnificent program on last Monday night, consisting of the following numbers:

Ring Out, Wild Bells.....Fletcher
Ave Maris Stella.....Grieg
Song of the Vikings.....Fanning
Female voices:
The Elves.....Bornschein
The Night Has a Thousand Eyes.....Woodman
Sleep, Little Baby.....Colin Taylor
The Return of Spring.....Philo A. Otis
Thanks Be to God.....Mendelssohn
The Bells of St. Michael's Tower.....Stewart
The Lost Chord.....Sullivan-Brewer
Male voices:
My Boy.....Huhn
Land-sighting.....Grieg
Patriotic:
Union and Liberty.....Stock
The Home Road.....Carpenter
Land of Mine.....MacDermid

The event was notable for several things: First, the makeup of the program, which was remarkably American in color and comfortingly pointed in its insistence on the waning importance of German music.

Second, the club was represented by a fine number of singers, who were alert, eager and capable, and the resultant musical pleasure was therefore of Apollo-like significance, and consequently it attained its object, i. e., the introduction further afield than usual of the Apollo excellence.

Third, Mr. Wild was in splendid form and conducted with great musical intelligence, and Mr. Nelson at the piano proved himself again a wonderful inspiration. His work in the chorus from "Elijah" alone was of a calibre and power to mark him almost sui generis.

The whole program was fine; the lighter numbers were done as lightly as could be expected from congealed vocal chords and even the songs of Spring-like texture and mood were done engagingly, while the humoreskes were presented with the usual Apollo facility and the dramatic moments were well conserved and colored.

The really big choral moment came at the very end when the MacDermid wonderpiece, "Land of Mine," was given a rousing reading and was accorded a splendid reception.

This is a big, fine, vital and altogether intelligent composition and its acceptance everywhere is at a point of enthusiasm, which presages for it a long life and a very brilliant one.

Last week at a big choral event in Indianapolis the Innes Band featured "Land of Mine" and caused it to be so much liked that the composer, who chanced to be present, was accorded a genuine ovation.

Gratifying, indeed, was it to have a young Chicago singer introduced as soloist with the Apollos, and still more gratifying was his choice of compositions and his remarkably lucid and musical presentation of them with the expert assistance of Mr. Nelson at the piano.

The singer was Rene Lund, Chicago baritone, and his list of songs (all by Americans) was as follows:

Wandering Knight's Song.....Parker
Hamlet's Soliloquy.....Buck
A Lake and a Fairy Boat.....Homer
A Song of Tristam.....Borowski
Love and Springtime.....Metcalf
A Vision.....Protheroe
Rose Kissed Me Today.....Harling
The Piper.....Stoughton
Nature Awaits Thee.....Warner
My Dear (encore).....Salter

Not to take the space at this moment for elaborate review, either of the works or the manner of their presentation, it may be said that the list provided ample contrast, much musical delight and a wealth of emotional and dramatic story. Perhaps the three best, in order, were the songs by Borowski, Metcalf and Warner, although personal preference must always be discounted, and it is likely that each of the other songs was equally as well liked by other hearers and every one of them was accorded enthusiastic reception, while Mr. Lund must certainly feel that the audience sensed in him a fine young artist, a sincerely intelligent musician and a thoroughly pleasing personality, one whose progress is steady and marked.

MARGARET MATZENAUER SPENDS CONSERVATION SUMMER

Margaret Matzenauer, the greatest contralto of the Metropolitan Opera House, spent her summer at Schroon Lake in the Adirondacks, New York, conserving "the one voice in a million" (quotation marks acknowledging our indebtedness to Walter Anthony of San Francisco) so that she may give it freely this season in the service of the country of her adoption. For Madame Matzenauer has put at the disposal of the War Camp Community Service her wonderful voice and art to be used in whatsoever way it can help or inspire further patriotism and loyalty to America and her Allies. The great prima donna has a very extensive concert season booked until January 1, when she returns to the Metropolitan Opera House, and it is in connection with this tour that she will sing additional concerts for the government.

PAUL ALTHOUSE A SUMMER-TIME EXPLORER

The summer vacation of Paul Althouse, the popular all-American tenor of the Metropolitan Opera House, was quite in keeping with the spirit of the times, as the first half of it was spent in singing for the soldiers at the various cantonments and otherwise doing that oft-mentioned "bit." It was not until the latter part of the summer that he had a chance to indulge in his "exploring tendencies" and to find a brand new summer place at Lake Bomoseen, Vt. It is an astonishing fact, but none the less true, that though every summer vacation of the Althouse family is spent in a different part of the country, each resort is pronounced the "finest ever" and contains new wonders to be explored by the enthusiastic young tenor and his charming wife.

GAYLORD YOST AT THE LOCKPORT FESTIVAL

Gaylord Yost, American composer-violinist, appeared recently at the National American Music Festival with success. The Niagara Daily Press, of Sept. 4, has the following to say regarding Mr. Yost's performance of his own Concerto in G Minor: "It is not often that audiences are privileged to hear composers interpret their own works, but such opportunity was given last evening when Gaylord Yost, an American violinist composer, though bearing a name which shows his Swiss descent, played his own concerto in G minor. This composition, written in free, modern form, with life in its rhythms, shows indisputably the writer's creative talent, and was naturally played con amore. His encore, "Evening," a charming number, was easier of comprehension at first hearing, and made strong appeal to the audience, which clamored for more."

DURNO STUDIOS

Jeannette Durno has recently completed the making of a number of records for the Imperial Player Roll Company. The first to be issued is Liszt's "La Campanella," which has figured conspicuously in Miss Durno's programs. She has also made several records for the Duo-Art Company.

The season opens most auspiciously in the Durno Piano Studios in the Lyon & Healy Building with the enrollment of students from all parts of the United States and Canada.

The Inauguration of the Italian Musical League

Organized some time ago, the Italian Musical League was officially inaugurated on Sunday afternoon, September 22. Over 300 people attended. Among those present we noted Guilio Gatti-Casaza, general director of the Metropolitan Opera; Enrico Caruso and his wife; Italian vice consul in New York; Maestri Sturani and Polacco of the Chicago Opera; Fortune Gallo, impresario of the San Carlo Opera; Segurola, bass of the Metropolitan; Nana Genovese, mezzo-soprano, and many notable vocal teachers.

Speeches were delivered and telegrams to President Wilson and the Italian Minister of Public Instruction were sent.

The president of the league is Signor Ferrari-Fontana, tenor. The league will occupy several spacious rooms at 251 West Seventy-fourth Street. The purpose of the new alliance is to further Italian music in the United States. The idea of the league was born in the brain of Cav. Alfredo Salmaggi of Music and Musicians of New York.

On With the War Performances—John McCormack, Galli-Curci and Ganz Appear for the Sixty-ninth Regiment

Packed to its capacity, the Hippodrome heard three of the greatest artists of the day on Sunday evening, September 22. The event was given for the benefit of the Comfort Fund of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, formerly the 165th. The military uniforms shone beside the thousands of civilians eager to help and at the same time to listen to three stars. John McCormack opened the program with our National Hymn, followed by "A Long, Long Trail" and songs by Gitz-Rice, Coleridge-Taylor and James H. Rogers; with Mme. Galli-Curci he sang the duet from "La Boheme." The diva rendered the "Ombra Leggiera," from "Dinorah," and a group of short numbers. Mr. Ganz played a Chopin group. The fourth soloist was Carolina Lazzari.

The soloists were Isabelle Irving, soprano; Constance Karla, violinist, and Ellmer Zoller was at the piano. This concert took place on September 19.

Concerts at the French Theater

At the Theatre du Vieux Colombier several musical Tuesday afternoons will be given during the coming season. The Theatre du Vieux Colombier is the permanent French playhouse of New York, under the direction of Monsieur Jacques Copeau—his second season. The concerts and recitals will be under the personal supervision of Monsieur Pierre Monteux, the French leader of the Metropolitan Opera Company and temporary conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Those who will appear at the concerts are: Mme. Gabrielle Gills, soprano; Alfred Cortot, the famous French pianist; Jacques Thibaud, the genial French violinist; Henri Casadesus, viola; Maurice Dambois, the Belgian cellist; Carlos Salzedo, harpist; Maurice Dumesnil, pianist; Paul Kefer, cellist; La Societe des Anciens Instruments, Trio de Lutece, Barrere Ensemble, and the little symphony, under the conductorship of George Barere. The French Theater opens on October 14 with a performance of "The Secret," by Henri Bernstein, author of "The Thief."

The Philharmonic Society Opens on November 14

For the seventh season Josef Stransky will lead the orchestra of the Philharmonic Society, whose official opening is announced for November 14, and it promises to eclipse the season of 1917-18. On November 13 the organization will give a special afternoon concert exclusively for soldiers, sailors and marines in the service of the United States government. During the season of 1918-19 it is the aim of the organization to give twelve concerts on Thursday evenings, sixteen on Friday afternoons, four on Saturday evenings and twelve Sunday afternoons, all to take place at Carnegie Hall. Five concerts will be given at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

The Rialto

The week of September 22 to 29 was not interesting as far as the musical program is concerned. "Pucciniana," by Puccini, was rendered by the orchestra under Hugo Riesenfeld. The concertmaster of the orchestra, Sascha Fidelman, played Vieuxtemps' Polonaise, followed by Eldora Stanford, soprano, in a rendition of James Rogers' "The Star." Leslie Stuart's "Floradora," conducted by W. Finston, was also executed by the orchestra. Organ selections by Mr. Depew.

The Last Week of the San Carlo

The masses will regret the departure of Mr. Gallo's company on a long tour of some thirty weeks. For the fourth and last week of the season in New York at the Shubert Theater Mr. Gallo offered on September 23 "La Boheme," with Marcella Craft, Royer Azostini, Fornari and Bozzano, the performance being another benefit for the Italian Red Cross. On September 24 "Aida" was repeated with Estelle Wentworth, Joseph Royer, Stella Demette and Manuel Salazar. Some comment upon the singing this season of Mr. Salazar is that the Cuban tenor has not been in as good trim as last year, when his appearances almost created a sensation. This season he has a tendency of singing throaty. These facts were very much in evidence. Upon the balance of the cast I have already commented. On Wednesday matinee, September 25, "Carmen" was repeated; evening, "Traviata." The first performance of "The Barber of Seville" was given on September 26 with Queen Mario, Royer and Boscacci. On September 27 "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci" were repeated. On Saturday matinee 'Madame Butterfly" with Marcella Craft, and the last performance of the season, 'Trovatore," in the evening.

The Society of American Singers—First Week, "Mignon"

The second season of the Society of American Singers opened most auspiciously at the Park Theater on September 23 with a performance of "Mignon," by Ambroise Thomas, sung in English by an American cast; the audience was very large. Before proceeding we wish the organization success in attaining its purpose—the popularization of opera comique—but the public must give the necessary support, for we should not forget that it is an attempt to establish permanently a national institution with everything American. The prices are popular—it is easy to expend the amount requested by the Society of American Singers. There are no prohibitive sums demanded by its organizers—those who have craved for opera in the vernacular have it—and if the texts are not as poetical and musical as the French and Italian, the translation of "Mignon" is commendable.

As to the performance, the principal role was sung by Maggie Teyte in a fashion to satisfy. The English soprano was not only vocally but also artistically a delight. She is the physical incarnation of Mignon as Goethe or Thomas conceived her. Her aria, "Knowest Thou the Land," was given a most poetical interpretation, and the applause and the flowers tendered were fully deserved. Ruth Miller is destined to be the unique interpreter of the coquettish ladies. After the capricious and temperamental Musette she undertook to depict to us the coquetry of Philline, and she succeeded in no small degree. She acted in such fashion that William Meister was certainly justified in succumbing to her charms. Her costume must have been the envy of many a lady in the audience. Though the aria "I Am Titania" is a bit too heavy for her light, delicate, charming voice, she gave ample proof of excellent vocalization in the part which Tetrazzini, Sembrich and Jenny Dufau once attempted. Ruth Miller kept to as high a plane as any of them, for her voice throughout the performance was a delight and proved that frequent appearances improve the artistry of a novice. The repetition of "Titania" behind the "coulisse" was still better. In both lyric roles and coloratura she has shown that she is mistress.

We were not expecting to hear in John Hand a sensational tenor—for some seasons we have not been fortunate enough to discover a really great tenor voice among the newcomers—but, on the other hand, neither did we expect such a deception and disillusion as John Hand, a tenor from Salt Lake City, who was cast as William Meister, the poet, provided. That he did not cause a catastrophe among his colleagues is a marvel. In musical comedies of the great Broadway the writer never heard such mediocrity. That the performance was not marred in its beauty was due to the excellent female cast, although Henri Scott was splendid as Lothario. John Phillips, as Laerte, would make a valuable acquisition to the speaking stage. Carl Formes as the Leader of Gypsies was good. Dorothy Francis as Frederic gave a satisfactory rendition of the Gavotte. The orchestra is an excellent body and, directed by Richard Hageman, gave us pleasure from the overture to the last notes of "Mignon." Mr. Hageman's ability was evidently approved by the audience, and there were reasons, for his excellent musicians and the cast responded magnetically to his authoritative baton. Excepting for the tenor, the performance would have ranked with the best of luxurious opera houses of the world.

"Mignon" was repeated on Wednesday and Saturday evenings with the same cast. A note of praise is due Jacques Coini for the artistic and picturesque second act. The chorus sang more or less faulty, but with more rehearsals better performances are to be expected.

On September 24 Donizetti's "Daughter of the Regiment" was given in English, with David Bispham as Sergeant Sulpice, Bianca Saroya as Maria and Craig Campbell as Tony. Henry Hadley was at the baton. It was repeated on Wednesday matinee and Friday evening.

On September 28 "Carmen" was given in French, with Marguerite Sylva as the heroine, Riccardo Martin as Don Jose, Henri Scott as Escamillo, Ruth Miller as Micaela, and the balance of the cast enlisted Blanche De Costa, Florence Mulford, Franklin Riker, Walter Greene, Howard White and Harvey Wilson. Richard Hageman was at the baton. "Carmen" was repeated at the Saturday matinee.

JACK GRAY

At Corpus Christi Hall on Forty-ninth street and Grand boulevard, on last Thursday evening, at the business men's meeting to further the Fourth Liberty Loan, when an immense audience was present, Master Jack Gray, soprano, aged 9 years, carried away the honors of the occasion.

His voice and manner are both charming and the impression he made was a wonderful one.

He will sing at many Liberty Loan meetings shortly and unquestionably will be a great favorite wherever he appears.

Jack Gray, who lives at the Sisson Hotel in Chicago, is originally from Fort Worth, Texas, and at the early age of 6 made successful public appearances there.

He is now a pupil of Nance D. Thompson in the Lyceum Arts Conservatory in Chicago.

"Is far above the average patriotic composition. . . . This ode is the product of a composer of immense experience, backed by the best of training and founded on an unusually fine natural talent for music. Rich in harmony, broad in style, vigorous, effective alike for voices and instruments, THE CALL TO FREEDOM will add to the composer's reputation as a sterling musician, if it is possible to add anything more to the esteem in which Victor Herbert is already held throughout the entire United States."—Musical Courier.

THE CHILD VOICE IN SINGING

Another school year is launched upon the broad educational sea. Its outlook in many respects is different from any other year that America has seen within the memory of most of us. Even with the unsettled conditions nationally, educators, as well as our President and other important heads of the nation, feel the great need of strengthening the educational forces. They must not suffer, or the brain material of the coming generation will be below par.

The great impetus which singing by the masses has received from the singing in community and camp will be a huge inspiration and driving force in school music if teachers make it such. Every teacher, whether she be a music supervisor or a grade teacher, should feel the responsibility very strongly to drive hard on music this year.

America is looking into the future as she has never looked before. She realizes the responsibility placed upon her, and our school children are the ones who shall ultimately determine the degree in which America shall musically direct the world.

It is essential that a love and appreciation for good music be cultivated; it is important that independence in sight-singing be attained. But these lines are intended as a special plea for the proper care of the child voice in the schoolroom. So few parents are capable of such care of the child voice in the home that we look to the school to correct the atrocious rasping, nasal voices that the children so readily acquire by imitation from their environments.

Children are so largely imitative beings that much depends upon the speaking voice of the grade teacher. A voice may be animated without being tense and shrill. The child's speaking and reading voice is equally important with the singing voice. A child who reads in a heavy, monotonous tone will not sing with a light, buoyant tone. Each should help the other. A flexible, sympathetic, expressive voice in speaking promises much for the beautiful tone in singing.

There are so many surrounding circumstances that assist in good tone quality in the schoolroom that they must be considered—

(a) Fresh air, which brings purified lungs and a vitalized physical condition, is one of the prime essentials to good tone quality. Heavy, impure air in a schoolroom can generate only an uninteresting tone and causes much of the flatting proclivity for which school singing is maligned.

(b) Attentive listening is of great importance to good tone, for lazy ears always beget lazy tones, while one may hear without listening. Monotones, so called, are, nine cases in ten, voices that sing without listening. Placed in the front seats, where they can be reminded to listen and to sing softly, they frequently are brought to correct pitch. Another advantage in such seating is that it brings the good voices forward where the poor ones can hear them, and the poor voices are not imposed upon the sensitive ears of those having accurate pitch sense. Many monotones of the more serious nature require individual attention and should receive it.

(c) Create an ideal of tone quality in the classroom. Let the pupils criticize the tone quality when it is not up to standard. It creates the listening attitude and raises the tone standard, as well as encouraging the class spirit, which frowns upon anyone who willfully injures the class tone.

(d) Diseases of throat and nose are too often ignored in considering tone quality. Individual tone from the diseased throat is not difficult to detect if a teacher uses her eyes and ears as she should. Mouth breathing, flabby nostrils, distended throat muscles and like accompanying troubles proclaim the causes of some of the poor tones. Such individuals should have proper medical care before one may expect improved tone or a desire to sing. Children below the fourth grade in school have no chest tones, hence songs ranging below one-lined E or D at the most must necessitate a forced tone. Songs extending lower should be transposed to a higher key for their use, as two-lined F-sharp and G are easily within their range when proper tone quality has been induced.

Every song should be a lesson in pure tone and in diction. Pure diction, good enunciation and proper interpretation for the thought of the song will bring amazing results in good tone.

Voice training in the elementary schools is impractical and unwise, but care in keeping the child voice natural, unstrained and free is necessary, and is the essential duty of every music supervisor and grade teacher in our public schools. Breathing, tone formation, the mechanism of the vocal apparatus and the many points taught in adult voice training should be inculcated in school music only by example and through interpretation of the thought. The extent to which this is carried should be determined by the needs of the school, the time given to the subject and the ability and wisdom of the teacher.

It would be most gratifying if we could inspire the child who is afraid of his own voice to work more independently. Individual singing is an essential part of every music recitation. There are rapid, time-saving ways of doing it, and it is every child's right to recite individually in music as truly as in mathematics, history or reading. This would make it unnecessary to have the eternal "leader" in the singing lesson. The "leader" is the child who takes the initiative for the entire class; always is first to begin and last to stop; who feels the whole lesson resting upon his shoulders, and thus deprives the remainder of the class from deriving any benefit whatever from the lesson other than the mere pleasure of singing by being dragged along, as it were, by the hair. "Leaders" are the bane of the wise teacher and can be taught the world will move without them and that others can work when given an opportunity. If the teacher gives the pitch for starting from either a pitchpipe or an instrument, and accustoms the class to begin together and end together, the "leader" or "leaders" often listening on new work, the more dependent ones will grow independent and the entire class work be improved.

(e) Mental attitude has so large an influence upon tone quality that all artist singers consider it of great importance. It is no less to be found in the schoolroom a great factor in music. In my early experience in supervising, a teacher of a second grade proved to be of the old school who thought of children in school seats as a mass, not as live individual beings. Self-expression was repressed to such an extent that they were almost afraid to breathe. The first efforts to sing in such a mental atmosphere were as useless as trying to pour molasses from a jug in Winter without first warming. Tones were thin and heavy, flat and everything that was far from beautiful. Pinched by tense throats and tense breathing muscles, tones could hardly be otherwise, could they?

Then I learned a lesson: that the mind must be prepared, just as truly as the physical being. Most grade teachers realize this and have such a fine mental atmosphere in the room that it makes the music lesson a joy. When we find the other type it is the supervisor's duty to create that atmosphere.

But, returning to the example—if you will excuse further personal reference: I told the story of the next song I was to teach them, and in their interest hands were raised, all eager to tell their own experience about playing in the leaves, bonfires galore, and like fun, until their self-expression was just where I wanted it. The old-school teacher was seated on a stool in the front of the room, that not one movement might be overlooked, and just at this important moment there came from that teacher, in sepulchral tones, "Now, children, don't get excited." Imagine! Ye shades of all that is good and holy in pure tone and real life in singing! How could I expect anything from those poor children? I confess I wept bitter tears that night as I thought over the work of the day. Tears, not of chagrin at my failure, but of pity—deep pity—for children who must come under such a depressing, repressing, deadening influence in their formulative years. There are still some similar personalities in the schoolroom. Music with good tone quality can never be a possibility in such a mental atmosphere. There are different kinds of discipline. Singing is only a means of self-expression, but all mental chains must be unlocked before the child can express. Of all arts, music is practiced most and thought about the least.

(f) Voice mutation is a much discussed subject—yes, cussed and discussed, for the instability and constant changing of the voices in the grammar grades is what brings singing to grief in these years of a child's school life and into the first years of the high school course. Even more than before, individual attention is required. Careful testing of voices for the parts must be done frequently and each voice watched, the girls' voices no less than the boys'. While the girl's voice has not so marked a change as to range, it has many changes in dynamic force and tone quality, and some changes as to range as well. Some girls' voices will need to be shifted as to the part sung, whether first or second soprano, or alto, several times during the changing year or years. The better the tone work done in the lower grades, the less the difficulty arising during these years. That is true of both boys' and girls' voices, for if tones are properly formed and the voice kept from forcing during the first years, the throat will be in a healthy condition, and changes will be less marked. Boys will keep their upper tones longer and the range will be less limited than otherwise as the bass tones appear.

A thoroughly co-operative and friendly feeling between teacher and pupil at this time in a child's singing experience means the making or ruining of the child's musical desires for the future.

Many a boy has become disgusted and disheartened in the singing lesson, merely because he was made to sing when he knew it was a physical impossibility. The teacher, from ignorance and lack of sympathy, in a wholesale manner orders everyone to sing, entirely ignoring the physical change which is taking place in the boy's larynx; extending of vocal chords to double their former length necessitates considerable readjustment of surrounding muscles. Shall we demand of them the impossible? It will certainly do personal injury and will add nothing to the class beauty of tone.

Each boy put upon his individual responsibility at such time, as to what he can sing without effort will result in perfect safety to the individual voice, will bring good class singing and, best of all, will retain his self-respect, his respect for the teacher's knowledge of his voice, and invariably brings him to the teacher with questions about his voice, how to use it and what to expect of it in the future.

This article is not intended to be a laying forth of methods—the normal class-room is the place for that, but it does hope to create a thoughtful attitude toward tone quality in school singing and the preservation of the child voice during the school years, so that in his adult years he may not only enjoy listening to music, but may add his bit of usefulness with his voice, in making America a truly musical nation, and one which shall give to the world many vocal artists of real worth, and shall make America a singing nation.

THE LA SCALA GRAND OPERA COMPANY

By Joseph De Valdor

The country is thirsty for operas at popular prices. Some thoughtful and enterprising people have undertaken the task of providing such entertainments—the Aborns, the Savage Company, the San Carlo, and now a newly organized company which is to furnish grand opera at prices within the reach of the masses.

The absence of municipal opera houses, a regrettable matter for all music lovers, should make the La Scala Grand Opera Company a welcome asset to the musical life of America.

Thanks to Messrs. L. E. Behymer and Sparks M. Berry of the Golden Gate state, the inhabitants of our continent from coast to coast will have the opportunity to enjoy operatic performances which will rival the Chicago Opera and the Metropolitan of New York.

TAMAKI MIURA

This may sound a bit exaggerated to our readers, but a glance at the roster of artists will cause skepticism to vanish.

J. R. Ellison, C. H. White and Lawrence A. Lambert are the trio which completes the western syndicate which is behind this newly formed organization, and they are the Alpha and Omega of musical entertainments, not only at Portland, Ore., but on the Pacific coast. The quintet which forms the business organization knows the wants of the inhabitants and therefore their enterprise should not only be an artistic success but it will surely meet with good financial results without which the public would be deprived of grand opera.

There is no doubt that the music lovers will flock to the opera house when the organization arrives in any given town, and no one, when the hour of departure comes, will be disappointed at the performances for international artists have been engaged—costumes and equipment will be so provided as to leave no gaps in any department. And in spite of complicated transportation problems caused by the war, and notwithstanding the other enormous expenses of the company, the syndicate offers first rate performances at $2 as the highest price of admission. Prohibitive prices may grand opera a luxury, and so the La Scala quotes you $2 for the best seat, and lower prices which will enable any humble music lover to listen to an opera. Some of the artists have been members of Mr. Campanini's company; others have graced the cast of the Metropolitan Opera House, and so the company is assured of artistic success. Following is the remarkable personnel of the La Scala Grand Opera Company:

Mme. Tamaki Miura, the only Japanese soprano in America, known specifically as the unique interpreter of Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" and "Iris" (Mascagni), will appear in these roles, made famous at Colon of Buenos Ayres and other cities, and Edith Mason, for several seasons with the Metropolitan, is another soprano assurance of artistic success. Evelyn Scotney, the American coloratura soprano, known since the days of Henry Russell's company at Boston, will be the heroine of the pyrotechnical operas like "Traviata" and "Lucia." Cesare Nesi, Giuseppe Corallo and Theodore Kittay, the Russian tenor, comprise the trio of tenors. Ada Paggi and Fely Clement, the mezzo soprano of Henry Russell's Company of Boston, will add to the brilliance of the list of woman singers. Carl Formes and Marion Green, both native baritone-bassos with high qualifications, will also aid in insuring a good interpretation of the invested operas. Signori Coronna and Santini are among the baritones, and among the bassos are Howard White and Signor Picchi. And last, but not least, the famous international conductor, Signor Fulgenzio Guerrieri, will lead all the forces at the baton.

The repertoire is also interesting, as the following operas are promised: Puccini's "La Boheme," "La Tosca" and "Madame Butterfly"; Gounod's "Faust," Verdi's "Rigoletto" and "Trovatore," Donizetti's "Lucia" and "The Daughter of the Regiment," Flotow's "Martha," Mascagni's "Iris" and an English revival of "The Geisha" with Mme. Tamaki Miura. The orchestra will be composed of thirty-six picked musicians and the chorus will contain forty fresh voices. To the new syndicate the writer wishes a deserved success. We allow ourselves to urge the public to unlimited encouragement. Music is the greatest factor of all times and no country can rank as a civilized community which does not patronize it. Our country loves music and our resources are immense, so we can easily predict success.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE NOTES

Seldom has there been made manifest so much interest as was disclosed when two students of Professor Leopold Auer, who now is teaching at the Chicago Musical College, made their appearance for the first time in Chicago at the first concert of the institution given in Ziegfeld Theater last Saturday. ## ARTHUR MIDDLETON RENEWS EDISON CONTRACT

From the bright and breezy Along Broadway, the monthly magazine published by the Edison Company, comes the following bit of news and its official approval: "Probably the best piece of Edison news we have heard since our last issue is that Arthur Middleton has renewed his exclusive Edison contract for another five years."

There isn't much we can say in praise of Middleton that has not already been said. He is one of the truly great singers in this country, and there are those who believe he is the tiptop of all who ever stood in American shoe leather. And, speaking of Middleton, we wish you to read what a certain gentleman, not a music critic, had to say of the great baritone after his recent tour through the West: "Here is an artist who does not spare himself in any manner because he might think the audience uncultured or unmusical. There are many artists who, as soon as they are west of Chicago, believing they are out in the 'wilds,' put cheap numbers on their programs and in singing or playing do not give their best. This is not Middleton's way, as he strives to give the best that is in him, no matter what the place. This best is some of the greatest singing that the writer has ever listened to. Here is a voice that is second to none that this country has ever heard from a bass or baritone. With a warm, rich, luscious voice, a range of a bass and a baritone, and high musicianly qualities Mr. Middleton literally takes his audience by storm. His dramatic quality is equaled by his smooth legato singing, and his pianissimo work is lovely. All this, added to his jovial personality, makes his audiences remember his programs and want him back again."

INTRODUCING ETHEL LEGINSKA, COMPOSER

It will doubtless come as a surprise to the many admirers of Ethel Leginska, the brilliant pianist, to learn that this tremendously ambitious and gifted little artist has been devoting much of her time this summer to the development of new powers—those of composition. At a beautiful seaside resort on the Jersey coast, Leginska, under the guidance of Ernest Bloch, the renowned composer, spent the heated season in creating her own musical expression for the various beautiful bits of verse that she has gathered in recent years. The result will be soon seen on the concert programs of many well known singers who have pronounced the Leginska songs "gems" and are planning to use them in their tours all over the country. It is an interesting fact not generally known that several years ago this remarkable little pianist wrote a song called "In a Garden," which up to date has been sung over one hundred times in public and always an encore is demanded. Watch out for the Leginska compositions. If they are a true expression of her own personality they are certain to be fascinating.

HISTORIC MISSION OF ORCHESTRA

Famous French Organization's Visit a Manifestation of Existing Harmony Between Sister Republics

France and the United States will join hands in a patriotic demonstration when the National Symphony Orchestra of France—La Societe des Concerts du Conservatoire—makes its appearance in New York at the Metropolitan Opera House on October 8 and 13, for then the people of that community will be among the fortunate in this country to hear the distinguished musical organization, because of the restricted time possible for its American visit.

The patriotic symphony concert, as it is fittingly designated, is to be given under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce. An event having an international significance, it is designed to stimulate the entente cordiale between America and France.

For that reason alone the French High Commission negotiated for the approval of the United States Government in a brief tournee that might permit a further cementing of the relations between the people of these countries, who are now fighting shoulder to shoulder against their common enemy on the western front.

Encouraging news is brought here by Chevalier Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the executive committee of the French-American Musical Association, which is conducting the orchestra's tour. Mr. Kahn, just back from Paris, reports that a number of musician members of La Societe des Concerts du Conservatoire—the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra—have concluded their duties at the front. He reports also that the oldest and most famous symphony orchestra France has is preparing for rehearsals and that its performances will be noteworthy achievements in those cities fortunate enough to have been asked to cooperate in this international enterprise.

Preliminary steps will shortly be begun to start the campaign in this city for an appropriate reception of these soldier-musicians. They are eighty-six in number and include personalities which are known the world over for their pre-eminence.

There will be compositions on the program to be performed by great composers, but nothing which will not have its appeal for the general public. Emphasis naturally is to be placed upon compositions of French creation—works of melody and color in which the rich orchestration of masters will be brilliantly reflected through the strings, wood-winds and brass of this orchestra.

But, high above all else, will sound the note of patriotism, for the enthusiast is to have his opportunity the night the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra visits the city.

HONOR CONFERRED UPON OTTO KAHN

Those who know Otto H. Kahn, the man, and are even remotely aware of his indefatigable efforts for the promotion of French art in this country, were not surprised when the announcement was recently made of the conferring upon him by the French government of the Loyal Legion of Honor, which carries with it the title of Chevalier.

For more than a decade Mr. Kahn's activities in introducing and co-operating to introduce to America all French things of worthy character are generally known. Apart from his admiration for its people, Otto Kahn has entertained a profound respect for the art, the literature, the drama and the music of France.

HENRY B. RONEY

Henry B. Roney can now be found in the Fine Arts Building, Suite 633, or at his residence studio, 1021 Leland avenue, having retired from the faculty of the Chicago Musical College last June at the expiration of his contract.

Mr. Roney observed the opening of his handsome new studio by giving a reception and concert in the theater of the Chicago School of Expression and Dramatic Art, of which Mrs. Letitia V. Barnum is president. A half dozen of his most talented boys and girls gave the program, assisted by some rarely gifted pupils of Mrs. Barnum's school.

As he has done for some years past, Mr. Roney awarded free scholarships to a boy and girl who showed the greatest promise and talent in open competition. The scholarships were won by Miss Elinore Rigsby of Bowen High School and Master Richard Vail of Parker Practice School.

Music News

Vol. 10 Chicago, October 11, 1918 47

Comes the Dawn of the Day in Which the Young American Musician May Hope for His Legitimate Opportunities

The French, always apt and clever in diction, are calling his "The Autumn of Vengeance."

May it be swift and terrible vengeance!

But it is the time also of other things and one of them s the clear showing in the handwritings on the wall that The American Musician is at last to have his fair opportunity to prove what he can do.

At Lockport last month eighty American musicians pre- ented a week of programs made up exclusively of American ompositions, representing the work of 162 composers and over 00 of their pieces.

At Worcester (Mass.) Festival last week, the entire pro- ram and the entire personnel of the artists was American! And there were choral works and orchestral works and great rograms in general given to immense audiences which regis- ered entire appreciation and approval!

And now comes the astounding news that a young Amer- can has been appointed to conduct the concerts of the Chicago ymphony Orchestra throughout the coming season.

Frederick Stock has resigned. (His letter may be read in nother column of this issue of Music News.) And, instead of eeking for some foreigner to take his place, the directorate as chosen Eric De Lamarter, a Chicago composer, teacher, rganist and critic.

This is an almost unbelievable fact. Before the war we ould not have imagined that it would happen in the next fty years.

And the whole town, nay, the musicians of the entire coun- ry, are very much interested, and comment is as diverse as it general.

Plenty there are who assume that Mr. De Lamarter cannot ossibly fill the place satisfactorily.

This class asks: "How could it be expected that a young merican, with but little orchestral training, could do the work f a man like Frederick Stock?"

These people surely do not stop to consider, nor do they ven faintly realize what the appointment means for the Amer- an musician as a whole.

Always, ever since our musical history in America began, re, as a nation, have been subservient to the foreigner, and par- cularly to the German musician.

We have admitted tacitly and openly that this was the gical and the proper attitude to take.

And those individuals of us who have demanded that the American be given a chance have been asked: "But, where have we anyone in America who can take the place of the foreigner?"

Music News has mentioned no names, has had no axes to grind, but we have insisted that all the American wanted was AN OPPORTUNITY.

Perhaps Mr. De Lamarter cannot fill the bill with entire conviction; perhaps it will take much searching to find anyone who can.

But his appointment constitutes that one big chance which Music News has been asking for, and it is just as likely as not that he WILL show that he can live up to the responsibility.

We must remember that we have no precedent—nothing at all in the way of experiment or experience.

Our young American conductors have never had the opportunity to work with artist musicians and with unlimited backing, and we have only now for the first time placed these advantages in the hands of one of them.

Let us remember that when Mr. Stock began to conduct the Chcago Symphony Orchestra he was young, unformed, and not any too skillful.

But he grew through association and experiment. Let us remember, too, that many foreigners have been failures in this country. The latest example was Ysaye, who, although a fine soloist and a good all-around musician, showed very plainly at the last May Festival in Cincinnati that he is not a good conductor.

Let us then assume that Mr. De Lamarter will be better than Ysaye and that with the same kind of practice and association as that enjoyed so long by Mr. Stock he will reach the same successes. Why should he not?

Anyway, let us give him a royal good chance. Let's uphold him to the limit and not forget for one moment that his appointment is a victory unprecedented for the cause of Americanism in music and that it marks one more and a very important step in our progress toward that absolute independence in musical things which we have already assumed and proved in every other department of life.

Charles E. Watt

PASSING COMMENT

Nobody questions the personal loyalty of Frederick Stock any more than they question his musicianship. He has been a big artistic success in Chicago and he has a host of personal friends.

The statement of his thought and feeling, as expressed in his letter to the trustees of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, is high-minded and convincing, and the editorial comment of the Chicago Tribune (reproduced on another page) expresses very clearly the feeling of most people who know Mr. Stock.

The resignation of Bruno Steindel, announced on last Thursday, did not come as a surprise to anybody, for no one imagined that it would be possible for him to remain under the circumstances that his pro-Germanism has been so definitely charged and the adduced proofs of it have been made so public as has been the case.

The decision of the government as to the cases of others in the orchestra charged with pro-Germanism has not been made public, but now that Mr Stock and Mr. Steindel have resigned there should be no hesitation in asking for the resignations of every doubtful member of the orchestra, or, at least, the public should be given a statement embodying the decisions in each case.

And now that we have an American conductor for the orchestra it is quite natural that many other questions of policy should arise.

It has been said for years that no young American could get a hearing for engagement as soloist with the orchestra, and we all know that foreigners have been given the preference at all times.

It is true that occasionally a Chicago artist (American) has been engaged, but it seems perfectly logical to insist that this is the time when more of them should be given a hearing.

The daily newspapers have stated that it is the intention to have this year, frequently, "visiting conductors," and that, of course, is an interesting thing.

But may we not suggest that some of these "visitors" might very easily and logically be Chicagoans.

In conversation in Music News office it was pointed out, the other day, that there lives in this city a Scandinavian violinist who has been soloist with many European orchestras in the past (he has lived in Chicago for thirteen years) and that several of these engagements were in major events in London.

Since his coming to Chicago he has conducted small orchestras many times and on at least one occasion has been director of a very important program at the Auditorium, which he led to success.

Why should not such an artist be considered for one "visiting conductor" concert, especially when it is true that he would be able to evolve an entirely unique program.

It is said often, and truthfully, that Chicago musicians have but scant opportunity to meet each other in a social way and that there are scores of artists and teachers here whose personal acquaintance with other artists and teachers is meager indeed.

It seems to us that the solution of this difficulty lies in the establishment of musical salons in the homes of the musicians themselves.

This thought received great impetus on a recent evening when, at the residence of Miss Georgia Kober, there was brought together a distinguished and altogether delightful company of musicians and the resultant social evening was so markedly pleasurable that every one present felt a special debt of gratitude to Miss Kober, and the thought came quickly to mind that if more musicians would take the trouble to invite each other for evenings of sociability (and music) the present reserve among them could be very quickly broken down.

Chicago has not so many concert halls as it needs, but with Central Music Hall well established and Kimball Hall now entering the field we are much better off than formerly.

Orchestra Hall is too big, except for great events. The Playhouse is seldom available, and the theaters, delightful for Sunday afternoons, cannot be had at other times.

There are many new halls in outlying districts, and the suburbs of Chicago are coming to the front splendidly also.

In the later list of new halls none is more delightful than Community Hall in Oak Park, which is handsome, very conveniently located and arranged and splendidly managed.

It should be ideal for purely local affairs and those musicians who wish to give recitals or pupils' concerts in a place which is ideally located for attendance from Austin, Oak Park and River Forest certainly could find nothing better than Community Hall in Oak Park.

One of the most thrilling moments of the concert given by the Apollo Club at the Municipal Pier last week was the singing by Rene Lund of "La Marseillaise."

This was given with a spirit and understanding entirely fine and the effect of the performance was many degrees above the average.

VAN PYK AND FREDERIKSEN AT LYCEUM ARTS

No pleasanter task could have been allotted to the reviewer than the one of Tuesday last at Lyceum Arts Conservatory. Mr. Day and his aids make everyone feel at home. The recital hall is cozy and attractive, with good pictures on the walls, and the other appointments are in keeping. On this occasion a notable attraction was the introduction of Tor Van Pyk, a new vocal teacher among the faculty. He at once proved himself a decided acquisition not only to the school but to this vicinity. He has among his assets a well-schooled, wide-ranged tenor voice of most agreeable quality, and he uses it with enjoyable intelligence and skill. In all the essentials of training and natural taste he has his full quota, and he adds to them a bearing of distinction and an enunciation of English text altogether admirable. He employed unusual excerpts from musical literature to reveal his quality and proved himself well at home in each field. From the opera he used the "Salve Dimora" of "Faust" and Canio's "Lament" from "Pagliacci." A group of Scandinavian songs of engaging attractiveness, sung in Swedish, Norwegian and Danish, was supplemented by Clay's "Songs of Araby." It is good to hear the Clay songs. They have always been perfect of their kind, and now that they are growing old perhaps they will be accorded permanent place among the fit to survive. He finished with Russian, French and Bohemian songs, the latter being the Gypsy group which includes the lovable "songs my mother taught me."

Jeanne Boyd gave him accompaniments of clear-cut authority and understanding. Together they made the numbers to glow with style and warm musical feeling. It should not be long before Mr. Van Pyk takes a marked place of importance among the fraternity.

For an avowed chamber music "fan," or devotee, the clear light of the evening rested on a Sonata by the Swedish composer, Emil Sjogren, who has just recently joined the great majority. This work was given by Mr. and Mrs. Frederik Frederiksen and with a mind to make it a species of tribute to the composer, whose friendship they had shared. It is so very, very good that it calls for more mention than can be given it now. Lyrical always, logical and well put together, with adaptable themes and clever working out and an ever-present musical abundance, it is delightful to a degree. The players did it with excellent ensemble and understanding. Mr. Frederiksen draws a virile bow, is scholarly and fluent, and Mrs. Frederiksen has the big technic called for and yet knows how to be subjective when demanded. A deft and brilliant "Midsummer Dance" of Tor Aulin and a portion of the Wieniawski Second Concerto were their additional offerings, all well presented.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE

In the Ziegfeld Theatre, on Saturday morning, September 28, occurred the first Student Recital of the season.

The program opened with "Ballade, G Minor" (Liszt), for piano, played by Esther Berger, pupil of Karl Reckzeh. The selection gave Miss Berger ample opportunity to display a varied assortment of tonal moods and a splendid technical equipment.

The piano department was further well represented on the program by the playing of Concert Etude, "Les Vagues" (Moszkowski), by Marion Bergman, pupil of Alexander Raab; Mrs. Bertha Lewis, who played "Legende" (Skabo), and "Rigaudon" (MacDonald), and Wyoneta Cleveland, pupil of Rudolph Reuter. Miss Bergman gave a brilliant and effective reading of the Moszkowski number, as also did Miss Cleveland in Ballade, Op. 10 (Brahms), and "Fantasy Piece" (Charles T. Griffes), whose playing has much of the "Reuter style." Mrs. Lewis also proved herself talented and scholarly.

The two numbers which perhaps stood out most on the program were the playing of the First Movement of the D Minor Concerto (Bruch), by Abraham Sopkin, and the Second and Third Movements of the E Major Concerto (Vieuxtemps), by Nina Wulfe, both pupils of Leopold Auer, and splendid examples of the work done by this wonderful teacher.

Helen Hagen, Naomi Brown Hamilton and Bernice Seabury were fine exponents of the work done at the college in vocal art. Miss Hagen sang the "Polonaise," from "Mignon" (Thomas) with much skill and vocal charm. Mrs. Hamilton sang with intelligence and much beauty of tone, "You Loved the Time of Violets" (Lohr) and "The Fount of Bimiui" (Cadman), while Miss Seabury, on short notice, sang in place of Mae Pfeiffer, who was programmed, using for her numbers, "Oh se les fleurs" (Massenet), and "As We Part" (Ilgenfritz). Miss Seabury has a beautiful voice, much charm of manner and was heartily received.

There was a large and enthusiastic audience in attendance, which always lends inspiration to the performers.

LIBERTY LOAN SINGERS UNDER DIRECTION OF DANIEL MAYER

Under the management of Daniel Mayer, impressario, Miss Leonora Sparke of the Metropolitan Opera House sang at noon on the steps of the Sub-Treasury in Wall Street, on October 10, and Walter Greene, the new American baritone, will sing on October 11 at the same time and place.

The singers presented by Mr. Mayer in aid of the Liberty Loan drive have been very successful. Miss Florence Macbeth, for instance, who sang at Borough Hall on October 1 and the Sub-Treasury on October 3, attracted a great audience, all anxious to hear the prima donna who had succeeded Tetrazzini in the Chicago Opera Company four years ago. After Miss Macbeth concludes her pre-season tour with that company, and before the regular season opens in Chicago, she hopes to lend her voice more to the cause of world liberty.

CHARLES M. COURBOIN

Charles M. Courboin, the famous organist, gave the first recital of the season 1918-1919 at the First Baptist Church on Tuesday evening, September 24, assisted by Pearl Adams, the soprano. Among the numbers played by Mr. Courboin were the "Sonata Chromatica" of Yon, the overture from "Die Meistersingers" of Wagner, and a minuet of Moszkowski.

Mr. Courboin also for the first time played one of his own compositions on the program, a brilliant and dainty number entitled "Toccatina in F Minor, Opus 13, No. 1." His entire program was played with wonderful dash and abandon and he was heartily encored by his audience.

On Sunday evening, September 29, Mr. Courboin dedicated a new organ at the Church of St. Anthony of Padua in Syracuse. His program for this occasion included the following numbers: "Hallelujah Chorus" (Handl), "The Harmonious Blacksmith" (Handl), "Triumphal March" (Mailly), "Andante Cantabile, A Major" (Haydn) and Improvisation on the "Adeste Fidelis."

His program was enjoyed by an audience of about 1,500 persons.

ROLLIN PEASE

Rollin Pease, bass baritone, is engaged by Manager James Hawley to sing in Ohio concerts this month with members of the Chicago Grand Opera Company.

Last month his engagements included a program at the Chicago High School Teachers' Club, the holiday services at K. A. M. Temple and the inter-church war work mass meeting at the Auditorium. The latter appearance proved to be a contest of lung power and endurance between the singer and the much-neglected Auditorium organ, which was not content with sticking all through the solos, but ciphered weirdly during the subsequent speeches.

Mr. Pease is getting direct action on the war by participating in various camp and patriotic programs and by acting as instructor in the Students' Army Training Corps stationed at Northwestern University.

MR. STOCK'S LETTER

Following is the very beautiful letter written by Frederick Stock to the trustees of the Orchestral Association in tendering his resignation as conductor of the orchestra:

Camp Innermost, Merrill, N. Y., Aug. 17, 1918.—To the Trustees of the Orchestral Association, Orchestra Hall, Chicago.—Gentlemen: To you, with whom I have worked these many years in sympathy and mutual confidence, it is unnecessary that I should protest my devotion to this country, which I originally sought not only as a place in which to make a living but as a home in whose air of freedom, buoyancy, and generosity my spirit could breathe and my art could develop and flower. To some of you it is known that as a youth, while still living in Germany, the land of my birth, I disapproved of the autocracy of its government and combated the growing spirit of militarism.

In the quarter of a century I have lived in Chicago my dearest hopes have been fulfilled. I have come to love the United States as my native land, to cherish her institutions, to identify myself with her cause, and to regard myself as one of her dutiful and grateful sons. My devotion to and love for this country I count among the finest assets of my inner self.

Said Germany Was Wrong

From the beginning of this awful war and long before this country became a belligerent I felt and said freely that Germany was in the wrong and should be defeated, and no one who knows me has ever questioned the sincerity of my then views, which, since April 6, 1917, have become with me, as with all Americans, the most profound convictions of my soul.

I do not hesitate to classify myself as American, because all who know me are aware that at heart, in thought and in spirit, as well as in action and in deed, I am American, just as willing as any patriot to give my last drop of blood and my last penny for the land of my adoption and of my affections.

Blames Self for Laxity

While all this has been known to you, it unhappily is true that, because my primary interest has been artistic and not political, I omitted the step which would have given legal effect to what was a spiritual accomplishment, and did not take out my second papers and become before the law an American citizen; and so now, when most of all I wish to feel myself a part of this great republic in its struggle to make the world free from the menace of recurring wars, I find myself technically—almost, I would say, ironically—styled "alien enemy." For this, I know, I have no one to blame but myself; and it is I who must atone.

However deeply I may feel my heart throb with love for this country, however ardently I may long to serve her, however sure may be your confidence in me—and it has been too often expressed to admit of question—it remains true that many of the music loving public to whom our orchestra must appeal are unable or unwilling to know the sentiments of my heart or to distinguish between those who are alien enemies from conviction and choice, and one whose greatest grief it is to be so classed.

For Best Interests of All

There has never been a moment when I have consciously put my own interests or ambitions above the welfare of the orchestra to whose service I have given twenty-three years of my life; and now, after careful self-searching, I have come to the painful conclusion that the best interests of that orchestra and of your association demand that I withdraw from my position as conductor until the day comes, for which I earnestly hope, when papers of full citizenship can be issued to me and make me before the law, as I am in spirit, an American citizen

I firmly believe that my withdrawal will afford a solution of the problems now confronting you, and will tend to relieve a delicate and vexing situation. I have, therefore, respectfully to request that you will relieve me of the duties of conductor until that happier day shall dawn.

Let me say, in conclusion, that it is impossible for me to express adequately my gratitude for the support and encouragement given me through all these years by the trustees and members of our association and the music loving public in general, and to express the hope that the same consideration will be bestowed upon my successor. Respectfully,

FREDERICK A. STOCK.

LAZAR SAMOILOFF'S ACTIVITIES

When the musical season was over and when teaching ceased to be the chief occupation, as it is always from fall to summer, Lazar Samoiloff, the New York vocal master, was still busy in his branch, for many of his pupils followed him to the country, and when an hour of leisure was left he wasn't satisfied to remain inactive but plunged himself into war work. This summer he gave two concerts for the Red Cross—one in Salisbury, Conn., and another in Canaan, Conn. Both events proved successful from every point of view—artistically and financially. Those who contributed to the success were all pupils of Lazar Samoiloff. Like the pilgrim, his students followed him to the summer school at the Berkshire Hills. When the foliages of summer began to fall, on September 9 the vocal master returned to New York and reopened his Carnegie Hall studio for further activities. Nine hours out of twelve are already consumed by continuous teaching and the season promises to be an exhaustive and long one. Since America entered the war his pupils have been singing in the camps and are still journeying from one camp to another to entertain our boys. They met with great success, especially in the aviation camp, and the work was exceedingly pleasurable to the boys, who are always eager to listen to high class music. The Red Cross of Connecticut has requested Mr. Samoiloff and his pupils for a series of concerts and all are at present working on the future entertainment to be given some time in December and January. Mr. Samoiloff always accepts only students who are musically inclined and they must be talented if he is to train them for professional work. Under his guidance those lacking the musical ear have acquired it through his unique method. He has opened a class of solfege, the fundament of teaching. Coaching and voice placement are his specialties and he emphasizes it with his pupils. Mr. Samoiloff occupies a suite of three studios. He is also the director of the Bel Canto Musical Club.

The Garrick (Chicago)

The Garrick ought to be sold out to the last seat every night with such an attraction as that now offered, "Seven Days' Leave," for not alone is it a splendidly written war story, but also its cast of characters provides opportunity for the employment of gifts so varied as to make it original and entertaining in the extreme.

It happens in England and the time is the present. Two officers having seven days' leave each come home to a channel village and there discover a very dangerous spy system and a plot to blow up American transports which are due to pass shortly.

The ferreting out of the details and the people—the frustrating of the former and the convicting of latter—provides material which is of absorbing interest and which in the play is worked out smoothly and convincingly.

Not the least thrilling moment is that when the woman spy (German) is compelled to doff her bathing suit, which she had donned for the purpose of swimming out to a submarine with tidings, and the assuming of this scant attire by Lady Mary, who loyally proposes to go out and warn the otherwise defenseless transport. The spy tears herself loose from restraining hands and both she and Lady Mary plunge into the water at the same moment and (in the next scene) there ensues a race in the water which is, to say the least, exciting.

The scenic display required by this piece is elaborate and appealing, and the cast is both long and fine.

Kitty Sharrow is prettily played by Florence Eldridge, and Lady Mary is made attractive, even if very affected, by Jean Stuart.

Mrs. Keys, a character part, is played to perfection by Pauline Hutchins, and the Spy is deftly done by Suzanne Jackson.

H. Cooper Cliffe as the Colonel reads a wonderful speech, "Carry On," in a wonderful way, and Terry Fielding is exuberantly played by William J. Kelly, who, between acts, sells Liberty Bonds with a will.

Cornelius Keys, an attractive juvenile part, is well done by Sidney Bracey, and Frank Beamish does what is possible with Stephen Darrell.

At least a dozen others are in the list and every one is good.

Altogether, "Seven Days' Leave" is an exhilarating and entertaining performance and well worth three hours of anybody's time.

"Lightnin'" at the Gaiety (New York)

After the successful production of "Turn to the Right," Messrs. Winchell Smith and John L. Golden now produce "Lightnin'," a play by Winchell Smith and Frank Bacon, the latter acting the leading part. The play contains dramatic scenes, but on the whole it is a comedy based on the occupation of land, bought crookedly by a railroad company, and attempting to seize the poor man's property. Naturally a play always concludes with justice for the wronged one. The action takes place in California and Nevada—the paradise for those seeking divorce. It would take up too much space to relate the story. The comedy is capitally acted by practically one interpreter, Frank Bacon, co-author, as Lightnin' Bill Jones who knows everything, save that the invention of electricity escaped him. Mr. Bacon is a natural comedian and keeps one alive throughout the performance. After a number of poor comedies and mediocre farces, "Lightnin'" is worth the money the public spends. It should be seen, heard and enjoyed.

The "Walk-Offs" at Morosco (New York)

The Hattons are again on the board, this time with another comedy in three acts. The plot is the always favorite subject of the Hattons, depicting the fast life of the northerners and the settled and wholesome life of the south. In this comedy the Hattons picture a southern man with healthy ideas, with principles and the love of wholesome domestic life. He wins not only the girl from the north, but he succeeds in changing her ways, habits and everything else. It is the poorest comedy written by the Hattons (formerly of Chicago). The play lacks life; the conversations and dialogues are (permit me to say) "mushy." Of the female interpreters Roberta Arnold, the divorcee who cannot live without her husband (supported by his wife), is excellent and amusing. Carroll McCornas, the woman with habits, but subdued by the southerner, is also to be recommended. William Roselle deserves a note of praise.

"Penrod" at the Globe (New York)

Edward E. Rose has dramatised Booth Tarkington's novel for the stage, and Klaw & Erlanger and George C. Tyler are the producers. There is no change in the plot from the novel. Those who are not acquainted with the story will be satisfied only with a brief relation. The boy detective, Penrod, with his associates—by the way, two colored boys—are on the trail of Dade, the Crook, who gains the confidence of Penrod's father and who also courts his daughter—if Dade were not a crook he might have succeeded in winning her hand, but he is discovered by the ingenious Penrod, a mere boy, who, as a reward, receives a medal and a small pecuniary compensation. Every episode is amusing and for once mere boys had the best of their elder colleagues as far as acting is concerned. Andrew Lawlor, the accidental detective, is clever as Penrod, and is the soul of the story and play. A note of praise to Mr. Davison for a nearly correct picture of the crook. The large cast contributes variously to an enjoyable evening. DE VALDOR.

The Warrington Theater (Oak Park)

At the Warrington Theater this week the Pyre Popular Players are finding in "Which One Shall I Marry?" a fine vehicle for the exploitation of their best talent.

The play is an advanced "problem" and such as to furnish much food for serious thought.

Next week they will present "Why Smith Left Home."

GREAT LAKES CONCERT QUINTET

It was worth the long trip to Evanston to hear the Naval Chamber Music Organization which enlists the talents of John Doane, Herman Felber Jr., Carl Fasshauer, Robert Dolegsi and Walter Brauer. They dashed off the brilliant Dohnanyi Piano Quintet with no end of style. It is such a grateful work, so lucid, facile and full of sweet reasonableness, that one is inclined to put it beside his two other favorites, the Schumann and Brahms. In its way it stands as a later type of piano playing, just as the other two do of their period, the forties and seventies. It has great sweeping phrases and runs over with fluent melody—which was our happy state of affairs until Reger and his excessive followers began studied ugliness. Philip Hale says Reger's music alone is enough to make us hate Germany—which is good patriotism.

The ensemble of the group of players is of commendable smoothness and has admirable search for individual expression to make it out of the common. The players, being all young men, lend themselves to an abandon which cannot fail to appeal. Chamber music is too much left to the sedate, learned and reserved, and a certain studied repression is quite often its dominating quality. These young men played their Mozart with freshness and spirit, were not wanting in crispness and precision of attack and phrasing, neither did they forget the happy spirit of the man who wrote cheerfully.

The program included a group of organ numbers and encore by Mr. Doane. He is so adept, temperamental and masterful in color registration that he puts a touch of distinction on whatever he presents. These tended to make the Liszt "Sposalizio" something to conjure with.

CHICAGO WOMAN'S MUSICAL CLUB

The first concert of the season 1918-'19 occurred in Recital Hall, Fine Arts building, on Thursday, October 3. It was preceded with a lecture on "Opera," by Edouardo Sacerdote. He gave some very vivid and interesting pictures of opera from the beginning, when it could only be heard by the nobility, up to the present time, and the Chicago Opera Association, which is within reach of all. A most interesting musical program followed.

Ralph W. Michaelis played "Romance" (D'Ambrosia), "Menuet" (Hochstein), "Oriental" (Amani-Elman), and "Mazurka" (Drake). Mr. Michaelis' impeccable technic, beauty of tone, and a strict adherence to the composer's message, form a combination rarely found in violinists.

The excellent support given by Mazie Odell-Cardy at the piano was a real delight to the audience and must have been an inspiration to the soloist.

Mrs. Kenneth Ozmun displayed a beautiful opulent voice in her singing of "A Spirit Flower" (Campbell-Tipton), "In Italy" (Jeanne Boyd), and "Where My Caravan Has Rested" (Lohr).

Edythe Pruyn-Hall's accompaniments were skillful and, as usual, gave one a very comfortable feeling — she always does just the thing that she is expected to do.

Marie Hoover-Ellis' playing of "Nocturne, Opus 23, No. 4" (Schumann), and the Evler arrangement of the "Danube Waltzes" was a marvelous display of technic, poetic inauguration and brilliant interpretation. Alice Bell Watts is the possessor of a gorgeous soprano voice and charming presence, and she sang "Rose Kissed Me Today" (Harling), "What's in the Air Today?" (Eden), and the aria "Lieti Signor" from "The Huguenots" with clear enunciation and splendid interpretation. Celia R. Hathaway's accompaniments were excellent and discriminating.

A patriotic and very inspiring address was given for the Fourth Liberty Loan by a "Four-Minute Woman," after which a subscription was taken which resulted in raising about $100 for a bond and the selling of some individual bonds through the club. Mrs. Alvin G. Ireland, chairman, and her co-workers deserve a great deal of credit for the campaign, which is not yet finished, and they hope to add much more to the amount already subscribed.

This flourishing club has for its president Marie Edwards Von Ritter, a bundle of energy; for chairman of the program committee, Mora Murdock, who is very businesslike and who has mapped out a most interesting program for the year; for chairman of the lecture class, Maud Rea, the popular and energetic manager of the Apollo Club. This department has arranged for a wonderful series of lectures to be given once a month, preceding the concerts. The lecturers to follow are: Harrison Wild, who will speak on the "Oratorio," D. A. Clippinger on "The Construction of a Song," Glenn Dillard Gunn on "American Music," and one or two other notables.

The student department has for its chairman Eleanore Capps-Hostler, tried and true—a hustler—one who is in the habit of undertaking stupendous and unusual things and carrying them through.

The student department will make a comprehensive study of "American Composers and Their Music."

The first meeting of the season will be held at the residence of Mrs. Hostler on Sunday, October 27, at 3 o'clock.

Any student of music is privileged to join this department at a nominal fee and has the advantage of attending all of the functions of the club.

HERBERT GOULD AT ROGERS PARK WOMAN'S CLUB

In their beautiful clubhouse on Tuesday, October 1, the Rogers Park Woman's Club entertained their members and guests.

Herbert Gould, bass-baritone and navy department song leader, conducted a Community Sing in which "The Star Spangled Banner," "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Keep the Home Fires Burning," "Row, Row Your Boat," and some other familiar airs were sung with much enthusiasm by the large audience present, and was indeed inspiring.

Mr. Gould chose for his solo group "Young Dietrich" (Henschel), "Three" (Florence Ayelward) and "Three for Jack" (Squire), all of which were admirably suited to his voice. He is always a fine artist and was as usual able to give the "Message" to his audience, which is one of the chief characteristics and charm of Mr. Gould's singing, and one reason why he is so popular with every one else, as well as the boys in the navy.

Miss Stearns, a social worker from Milwaukee, gave the address of the afternoon and gave out some good thoughts in her unaffected style of delivery, with good wholesome wit, that were worth while taking home.

The afternoon closed with some numbers sung by the chorus from the Birchwood Morning Musical, led by one of their members.

ELEANORE CAPPS HOSTLER.

CHICAGO PIANO COLLEGE

A recital given by the younger pupils of the Chicago Piano College gave this writer an hour of keen enjoyment last Saturday afternoon. All the children showed good, detailed preparation and conscientious study. Richard Schweitzer played two Bach inventions and the Junior Chopin Mazurka, while "Valse Tente" (Schuelt), and "Minuet a L'Antico" (Seeboeck) was the group assigned to Lillian Reese. Thelma Simons played "Pasquinade" (Gottschalk) with facility and grace, and Kathryn Turner gave thoughtful readings to "Romance" (Woodman) and "Oriental" (Triml).

The most advanced work was done by Goldie Guy in the Weber Concerto (C Major), with Miss Godfrey at the second piano. The child's technical equipment is admirable and her method of attack convincing beyond her years. This number constituted a noteworthy conclusion to a little program well worth remembering.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE

One of the brilliant numbers of the musicale at Ziegfeld Theater on last Saturday morning was the playing of two movements of a Vieuxtemps Concerto by Mary Sylvia Lent (Washington, D. C.), who is a pupil of Leopold Auer.

The work accomplished by this young player was so much above the average as to give eloquent proof of the Auer worth with young pupils, for Miss Lent is only a little girl as yet, in spite of which fact she plays with remarkable ease, assurance and purity, while at the same time she has certainly attained fine technical development and splendid interpretative facility.

The accompaniment accorded her (accompanist unnamed on the program) was of remarkable style and finish.

Aside from this number the pianists of the program walked away with the honors, the teachers represented being C. Gordon Wedertz, Karl Reckzeh, Alexander Raab and Rudolph Reuter.

Zitta Allen (Wedertz) played a Chopin Scherzo with fine style, and Margaret Wilson (Reckzeh) was very convincing in the "Ricordanza" and an Etude of Liszt.

Jane Anderson (Raab), who has been heard before with much pleasure, again showed that she has remarkable talent and that she is developing it in a sane and effective way.

She is a girl of striking appearance, but lacks in stage deportment, in spite of which she scored heavily on Saturday in a Dohnanyi Rhapsody and the brilliant Etude of MacDowell.

The difficult and very wonderful Paraphrase made on the Mendelssohn Wedding March by Liszt was played with exceptional brilliance by Aaron Ascher (Reuter).

Gertrude Gibson and Jeanette Donhowe were the vocalists, the first singing in an acceptable manner the well-known aria from "Robert le Diable" and the latter proving herself the possessor of an unusually attractive voice and nice manner in "Possession" (Clough-Leighter).

The violin department of the college was further represented in the playing of a Chaconne by Vitali, excellently accomplished by Evelyn Vitto-Levin.

ALICE SJOSELIUS APPEARS WITH THE SWEDISH SOCIETIES OF CHICAGO

Whoever arranged the program for the benefit concert (Swedish Societies' Old People's Home Association) given at Orchestra Hall on last Sunday afternoon is to be congratulated on good taste and excellent judgment, and had not the artists spoiled the scheme a little by their overzeal in accepting encore demands the program would have been perfect.

As it was, it was too long by just about half the encore numbers. In other words, each artist should have given one encore only, instead of two. These are war times, we should remember, and conservation of time is as important as any other thing.

People do not like to stay too long in any concert hall at present and all artists should make their programs short and should carefully abstain from an overabundance of encores.

A feature of the Sunday concert was the singing (in Swedish) of two choral numbers by the Swedish Veteran Singers of Chicago.

This company consists of about fifty men, all past middle age, and yet, beyond any question, they produced the most beautiful male choral singing heard in Chicago for many, many months.

The tenors were fine and the basses made a definite balance, and together they sang with style and distinction, both as regards tone qualities and in musical interpretations.

Miss Ebba Hjerstedt, a young Chicago violinist, showed herself the possessor of definite gifts and much technical ability and was enthusiastically received by the large audience.

Tor Van Pyk, a Scandinavian tenor who lately became a resident of Chicago after a career on the stage which has covered many years and countries, sang the "Salut" from "Faust" with wonderful beauty of tone and rare discrimination in shading and musical phrasing, delivering the famous high note beautifully.

He was equally successful in an aria in Swedish (Behrens), and in his two encore numbers, one being the "Lament" from "Pagliacci" and the other that most charming of songs, "I'll Sing Thee Songs of Araby" (Clay).

In the last especially, the Van Pyk tone was beautiful and his manipulation of all musical and interpretative values notably good also.

The imported (from New York) soloist of the afternoon was Miss Alice Sjoselius, soprano, and the audience promptly fell in love both with her personality and her voice.

She is exceedingly beautiful in a straightforward, blond way and has the most ingratiating of manners, and, also, she certainly knows how to dress becomingly, which, in her case, is simple, and therein she shows her superiority to the vast majority of Sunday afternoon concert singers.

Her opening number was the big aria from "Roberto il Diabolo" and her second appearance brought a group of six Swedish text songs which you would not know if we should name them, but which pleased her audience (almost exclusively Swedish) beyond words to tell.

And it is no wonder that this is so, for Miss Sjoselius has a very beautiful voice which is powerfully dramatic when she chooses to so exert it, but which also is beautifully suave and caressingly tender when her texts ask for those qualities.

Never has a more charming folk song been given in Chicago than one which she presented, and throughout her program her work glowed with beauty, was suave to the limit and vibrated also with intensity of meaning.

Miss Sjoselius is a very great artist and Chicagoans may well wish for other opportunities to hear her.

This writer does not know whether she has ever aspired to opera or not, but he has no hesitation in saying that she would make the most beautiful and the most convincing Marguerite in "Faust" of any one that could be imagined—far more logical and exhilarating than the vast majority of celebrated prima donnas who have essayed that part.

The audience, as said before, promptly took Miss Sjoselius to its (collective) heart and she could have sung encores for a long time had she chosen, but being a great artist she contented herself with adding to her list of Swedish songs one more of like kind and of equally lovely content.

Edgar Nelson at the piano was so good that no improvement could possibly be suggested. He naturally and logically shared honors with all the soloists.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

A charming recital was given last Saturday afternoon by three young artists of the American Conservatory—Eleanor Eastlake and Kathryn Kiernan, duettists, and

HELEN CAMPBELL

Helen Campbell, pianiste. The program was as follows:

|---|---|
| The Gypsies | Brahms |
| Duet of the Stars | Chaminade |
| The Charm of Spring | Salter |
| On Wings of Music | Mendelssohn |
| Waters of Minnetonka | Lieurance |
| Miss Eastlake and Miss Kiernan | |
| Ballade—A Flat Major | Chopin |
| Helen Campbell | |
| The Lass With the Delicate Air | Arne |
| Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes | Old English |
| Two Little Irish Songs: | |
| To My First Love | Lohr |
| You'd Better Ask Me | Lohr |
| The Low-Backed Car | Samuel Lover |
| Duet from Martha | Flotow |
| Duet from Lakme | Delibes |
| Miss Eastlake and Miss Kiernan | |
| Miss Campbell at the piano | |

These young artists are fast winning the hearts of Chicago music lovers and cannot fail to achieve much as time goes on. Their work is thoroughly unaffected and sincere, besides being done in a pleasing and sympathetic manner Their preparation has been of the very best and they have had repeated success in joint appearances this summer at Ravinia Park, Great Lakes, Grant Park, and other places of interest.

Unfortunately the first group was not heard by this writer. Miss Campbell played the Chopin Ballade with keen artistic understanding and her personal charm contributed in large measure to her success, although it would be unjust to say that she was at all dependent upon it.

The second group of duets was charming. The singers seemed to have caught in equal measure the quaint, delicate spirit of the old-fashioned airs and expressed it with admirable piquancy. The operatic duets in closing formed a veritable victory for the young artists, who were most enthusiastically applauded. Both soloists have clear smooth, well developed voices and know how to use them with taste.

Miss Campbell is not less able as an accompanist than as a pianiste. The success of the afternoon was due in no small part to her exquisite skill and musicianship.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

A. G. O. SERVICE AT TRINITY

Irving Hancock heads the program committee of the Illinois Chapter of the A. G. O. this season. With his splendid equipment of organ and choir he inaugurated the services on Sunday afternoon. He is alert, ambitious, farseeing and has a sturdy initiative and will bring about a list of events that will easily stand any test of merit.

His plan of grouping all the organ numbers in sequence, at a stated portion of the service, had the effect of novelty and the music lost nothing by the arrangement. It is a commendable innovation. His own choir sang the elaborate service and he was his own adaptable self in the use of his organ and the effects he won from his choristers.

Florence Hodge used a Ferrata Nocturne, one of the rare appearances of the fecund New Orleans composer on a Guild program. His combination of Italian heritage and Southern environment makes him sound somewhat excessive—the continual use of chromatics growing wearisome. But it was graceful music, nevertheless. Bonnet's brilliant Catalane Rhapsode went with exhilarating speed and fervor, its many inherent difficulties being deftly surmounted by Miss Hodge. Frank Van Dusen, who is now organist at the People's Liberal Church, contributed excerpts from Guilmant's Fifth Sonata, making them of dignified solidity and enriched by continual variety of registration. The favorite Adagio was particularly well done.

Mason Slade chose to contrast the two Concert Overtures of Alfred Hollins. They sound solid and almost Mendelssohn-like in their assured stateliness, but only those who wrestle with them know how full of the tricks of the trade they are. To say that Mr. Slade easily compassed them and left an impression of the best sort is no small meed of praise.

W. D. Belknap gave one answer as to the passing of W. T. Best from the organ repertoire. Unquestionably the man who acquired the reputation Best did had a decided merit, but he failed to embody a permanent reminder of this in his "Fantasie" used by Mr. Belknap. The player was able to cope with its excesses, but it was love's labor lost—the music was not worth the pains.

CHAMBER MUSIC TRIO

A cosy place for the concerts planned by the Chicago Chamber Music Trio is the hall at 16 West Jackson boulevard. Save that the ceiling is a bit low the acoustics are excellent, and the hundred or more postulates at this rather exclusive form of musical pleasure pretty well filled all the seats and make for the intimacy essential. It is burdensome to reiterate that chamber music is simple in the extreme if approached cordially. The general run of concert-goers have decided that it partakes of the undigestible and pass by on the other side. Of course, theirs is the keenest of losses.

The new trio gives excellent reasons for existence and deserves the patronage and good wishes of the entire musical fraternity. Frederick Morley is a well poised pianist with facility, steadiness and beauty of tone at his command. Ernest Toy plays the violin with rarely good sweep and well rounded tone, and Hans Hess at the cello is felicitous in touch and vigor and brings a color at all times distinctive. He is a tower of strength in the organization. With these essentials provided and the evident satisfaction in their self-appointed task which the artists showed, the music was unfailingly enjoyable. The idea suggests itself, at such times, that the one thing to make an endeavor of this sort ideal would be a coach who could weld the elements more completely than the earnest rehearsals of the group can accomplish unaided. In a tricky bit like the Arensky "Scherzo" the manifest unsteadiness could have been largely avoided.

The lovely Brahms B Major had an unfolding of charm. The least interesting portion of the work is the Adagio. It is one of those somnolent moments of profundity which Brahms could indulge in and pass off as something else. On the other hand the "Scherzo" is a moment of perfection.

The final number was Gade's "Novelletten," done with a fine sense of its strictly musical flow. The Andantino came out with a simplicity that was of enduring loveliness.

NEW GRANT-SCHAEFER COMPOSITIONS FOR PIANO

Piano teachers will be glad to know of a set of four piano compositions entitled "The Passing Seasons" (A. P. Schmidt Co., Boston.) They are published separately, the titles being "Waving Boughs," "To a Snowflake," "Under the Greenwood Tree," and "Soft Breezes Blow." They are written in the composer's usual good style, and will be found practical and grateful teaching numbers. They are between grades two and three.

NEWMAN TRAVEL TALKS

E. M. Newman of Travel Talk fame is here with pictures and story of his recent trip through Great Britain, France and Italy. For five Wednesday and Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons beginning October 9, 11 and 12, at Orchestra Hall, the skilled traveler will present his "Wartime Europe" series of traveltalks in the following order: "Paris, 1918," "Wartime France," "Wartime Italy," "London, 1918," and "Wartime England." In a group of exclusive motion pictures and color views made by Newman you will see "what it is like" in these countries under the immediate shadow of the battle clouds. With the endorsement of Uncle Sam and with the approval of the governments abroad, Newman obtained credentials which afforded him unheard of privileges. On the battlefields of France you will meet General Pershing, Field Marshal Foch, Marshall Joffre, Clemenceau, and many more great strategists. To you, with heart and soul in the winning of the war, Newman brings the story of the sacrifices of men and women over the sea. Motion pictures will give you close range glimpses of our boys from all over the country in action. The traveler was with our marines at Chateau Thierry the day the great drive started. Many of our great aviators will be shown in action. Lieutenants Rickenbacker, Hamilton, Roosevelt, and most of our hero aces will appear before you—some of them in actual aerial combat. You will journey with American soldiers from a port of landing to billets, and then into the front line trenches. Many regiments of our boys came within close range of Newman's cameras. You are promised plenty of thrills throughout the series. One of the inspiring features is the astonishing part played by the women "over there." The series is a continuous story, the memory of which holds many ineffaceable pictures. You will do well to banish from your minds all previous impressions gained from reading and traveling.

VIRNA HARMAN WALKER

In the review of the opening entertainment given at the Virna Harman Walker Dancing Studios printed last week in Music News there was used, in error, a cut of one of Miss Walker's pupils instead of the intended one of Miss Walker herself, which is printed herewith.

Miss Walker tells us that she is rapidly filling her hours this fall and that the prospects are that she will have an even more successful season than last year at her well-appointed and very attractive studios in the old Lyon & Healy Building, on Wabash avenue.

THE STUMPF STUDIO

The piano studio maintained by Mrs. L. C. Stumpf and Miss Amy Stumpf on Maple Square avenue has grown to great dimensions and significance.

Miss Amy Stumpf, a former pupil of the late Emil Liebling, is a pianist of great ability and charm and has succeeded in drawing about her a class of talented youngsters, who remain year after year and who have developed into brilliant pianism in many cases.

Mrs. Stumpf, who teaches children almost exclusively, has also developed a very large class, and at the Spring Concert this year was able to show splendid results.

Both Mrs. Stumpf and Miss Amy have had such demand upon their teaching hours this fall that the time of both is entirely exhausted; in fact, Miss Stumpf has already a large "waiting class."

GODOWSKY IN A NEW FIELD

A very interesting experiment was tried out on the Pacific coast this summer and its success has been beyond the fondest hopes of all concerned. The Godowsky master classes which have been in session in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Cal., and Portland, Ore., were just what their name implies, classes conducted by a master pianist for pupils who were either professional pianists already or very far advanced on the road to that goal. There were two sets of "students" in those classes, those who played for the master and received his criticism, and those who only listened to the instruction given others. That both classes derived the utmost musical stimulation from the great master may be seen by the fact that a resolution was passed by the thirty-two pupils who attended the first master class in Los Angeles expressing their gratitude and appreciation for the privilege of being the first members of such a class in America, and further stating that in the four weeks of the course they had gained more pianistic knowledge and general musical understanding than they could possibly have done in several years of ordinary study. There have been applications from each one of these cities for similar classes next season, as well as from other cities throughout the country which have been impressed by the wonderful possibilities of the Godowsky master classes.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Moeller-Andrews Concert Bureau has announced a most gratifying list of artists in its winter course. The Chicago Grand Opera Company will open their season with two appearances—October 14, "La Tosca," and Oct. 15, "Barber of Seville," featuring Galli-Curci. Campanini is again director, which guarantees the same high class performances as heretofore. November 1 the Grand Opera Quartet, including Alda, Martinelli, Lazzari and De Luca, will be heard in concert. November 15, Jascha Heifetz, violinist. February 17, Alma Gluck. March 31, Matzenauer and La Forge. The bureau will also undertake some special concerts, the first of which will bring Caruso and his concert company on October 29.

The A Cappella Chorus, with William Boeppler as director, will as usual fill their important part in the season's choral work. Finlay Campbell, the soldier tenor, will be their first assisting soloist. At a later concert they will give "The Cross of Fire" (Bruch) with competent soloists.

Community singing grows more and more popular. One of the latest to join the ranks as director is Eugene Sullivan at the Empire.

Misses Anna Robinson, Gretchen Gugler, Olga Marcan and Beecher Burton are among teachers who have recently reopened their studios.

DENVER, COLO.

By MRS. JAMES M. TRACY

The musical season for Denver opened earlier than usual when, on September 26 at the Auditorium, Robert Slack's series of high class concerts commenced with Hipolito Lazaro, tenor, and Sophie Braslan, contralto, in joint recital. These artists, both possessing unusually exquisite voices and using them with that distinct, rare ease that only such artists are capable of, held the vast audience interested and delighted from beginning to end.

MRS. EDITH DOREY COE AND DAUGHTER, MILDRED EDITH

Mrs. Esther Cherry Paddleford, prominent in literary and musical circles, and who, since her marriage to Fred L. Paddleford, for nearly twenty years the superintendent of the State Industrial School for Boys at Golden, fourteen miles from Denver, has won the love and esteem of every inmate of the institution, gave an elaborate prenuptial reception on August 15 at her apartments in honor of Miss Elizabeth and Mrs. D. R. Hatch of Golden. Mrs. James M. Tracy was engaged to give a program of pianoforte music, after which Mrs. Paddleford accompanied several of the boys whom she has been training vocally, among them Wilbur Black, who has a remarkably fine voice and gives promise of a splendid musical future. Among the colored boys she has a double quartet that really sings in a manner to touch the heart strings. Their singing of "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" and "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia" drew the tears from many eyes.

Mrs. Jane M. Gibb, organist and newly elected chairman of the music committee of the Denver Woman's Press Club, which is composed of the most brilliant set of newspaper women of Denver and Colorado, gave an elaborate luncheon to the members of her committee at Daniels & Fisher's tea room on September 4. Those enjoying the occasion were Mesdames Esther Cherry Paddleford, Helen Dean Yetter, Helen Fuller Officer, Cateau Stegeman Tracy and the hostess.

At the pleasant studio of R. Jefferson Hall in the Barth Block an attractive program of modern music was given by two young girls, Lois Maer, 14 years, and Mildred Mitchell, 10 years old, pupils of Mrs. Mary Bolling Chapman, the directress of the Bolling-Musser College of Music of Memphis Tenn., who have been summering in Colorado. These children played the two movements of the Moszkowski and MacDowell Concertos with a firm touch and a dash and brilliancy that would do credit to much older artists. Mrs. Chapman has been one of the best known musicians of Memphis for many years. Her six teachers in the college have all been educated by herself and have been brought up in the same conscientious manner.

The photograph of Mrs. Edith Dorey Coe and baby daughter, Mildred Edith, which accompanies this article, is of especial interest to the many readers and musical friends of Mrs. Coe. As Edith Dorey she was one of the most ardent, diligent students of the Liszt School of Music, always eager to absorb more knowledge, which later reflected very substantially upon the pupils whom she instructed. As a pianist she memorized and played numbers of classic and modern compositions, completing quite an extensive repertoire. Dr. and Mrs. Tracy have always felt a keen sense of pride in the fact that they awarded Mrs. Coe with three degrees in the theoretical, teachers' and full pianoforte courses. At the present time she is devoting practice and study to her various programs, so that now Baby Mildred is getting the full benefit of a musical and artistic surrounding, which no doubt will reflect later upon herself and her ambitious mother.

The Ogden Theater has a splendid violinist by the name of S. Senosian. Elfrieda Taylor Orth, wife of Harold Orth, well known in musical circles, is accompanying him.

Tina Lerner, the brilliant Russian pianist, appeared on the Orpheum bill the week of September 17.

The Denver Municipal Artist Series, with A. M. Oberfelder as manager, had Margarete Matzenauer, the contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, as the drawing card for its first concert October 4. Frank LaForge, who has many musical admirers in Denver, was her accompanist.

The Musical Society of Denver is very enthusiastic on the beginning of its regular work of teachers' forums and concerts. The first meeting for the pianoforte department was held Monday, October 7. The Savoy Hotel has been secured for all meetings, receptions and banquets. One of the most brilliant events from a social standpoint will be the reception, Friday evening, October 11, for the quartet of grand opera singers, Frances Alda, Carolina Lazzarri, Giovanni Martinelli and Giuseppe de Luca, who give the second concert in Robert Slack's series.

Among the local pianists that appear annually at the meetings of the Woman's Club of Denver, Miss Irene Hubbell, whose picture appears on this page, is perhaps the most popular, judging from the many requests that are made for her programs. She has just returned from a several weeks' visit to Des Moines, Iowa, and while there was the inspiration for a number of informal and impromptu musical affairs. In the time she has been with Dr. and Mrs. Tracy in the Liszt School she has made very rapid strides in point of musicianship as well as in theoretical knowledge; in fact, the latter course she has practically completed. Miss Hubbell possesses the happy faculty of at once winning her audience and holding it interested. She has the physique and confidence, the memory and ambition that are bound to win for her a reputation as one of the best American pianists. She is a charming young lady, entirely free from affectation, and the praise bestowed upon her tends toward making her even more conscientious rather than to carry her away.

Judging from the wonderful array of artists that have been engaged for the winter's concerts Denver's music-lovers have a rich season in store for them.

Little Miss Orcutt should some day be endowed with much executive ability.

A SOLDIER'S LETTER

Ezra M. Hartman, a former pupil in cello with Hans Hess, Chicago, is now in service in a band in the United States Navy.

In a recent letter to Mr. Hess he tells of the various activities and relaxations enjoyed by the boys in the navy, and we take pleasure in reproducing here a part of his letter:

"September 15.

"Last night we had a fine picture here aboard—'Hearts of the World.' With canvas the top side was made into a huge circus tent, so that when one was inside it seemed like being in a real theater instead of aboard a ship. The inclosure held about 2,000 men and it was jammed full, as we had men from other ships over. Our orchestra furnished the music. On two occasions we have had the opportunity of going ashore and playing for the wounded men at the hospitals, and it has been very enjoyable; also the opportunity of speaking personally with men who have been wounded and come directly from the front.

"Here is a picture I had taken the other day. Our string quartet is coming along fine; we have quartets of Schumann, Haydn, Mozart, Tschaikowsky and Mendelssohn, besides a collection of specially arranged and familiar things. We've played for the Admiral several times and are to play again this evening."

EZRA M. HARTMAN.

Again we remind our clientele that Tuesday is our last day for copy. Much material received on Wednesday of this week is necessarily held till next week.

SAIDA BALLANTINE BOOKINGS

Piano solos by Irma Schemuit of Milwaukee.

Soprano solos by Melba Goodman of the Chicago Grand Opera Association; Celia Hatheway at the piano.

Quintet of Graces: Marie Fanelli, soprano; classic dancers, Helen Reed, Carmen Rooker, Nina Johnson, Harriet Bendel.

The proceeds were devoted to the philanthropic fund.

Barnes—William H. Barnes, who has for several years been organist at the Epworth M. E. Church in Chicago, is now in the service and has been assigned to duty on the Pacific Coast.

Kimbell—Grant Kimbell will sing "Sound an Alarm" (Handel) for an offertory solo at the First Congregational Church, Oak Park, next Sunday morning, October 13.

JEAN KNOWLTON AT THE COUNTRY CLUB OF EVANSTON

The Country Club of Evanston, which, paradoxically, is situated very near the heart of that city, is the possessor of a very beautiful little theater-auditorium, and there on last Saturday night a fine costume recital was given by Miss Jean Knowlton, soprano, her program being as follows:

French Group—
Non, je n'irais plus au bois
Lizette
Que ne suis—je La Fougere
Menuet de Martini
.....Arr. Wicherlin

English Group—
Pastoral
The Forsaken Maid
My Lovely Celia
The Plague of Love
Shepherd, Thy Demeanour Vary
...Arr. H. Lane Wilson

Spanish Group—
Marcha Real .....National Anthem
Granada .....Alvarez
El Tripili
Gallegada
Bolero Sevillanas
.....Folk Songs

Nacir y Morir .....Larregla
Linda Mia .....Folk Song
La Partida .....Alvarez

Miss Knowlton has a voice which is at once full, resonant and flexible. It is musical and susceptible of showing nice emotions, and at the same time it has brilliant qualities which make it exceedingly useful in the concert room.

Miss Knowlton has, further, definite musicianship, and in addition to all that a keen sense of entertainment values, so that she has been enabled to select a program which is not only novel but which also is logical and absolutely pleasing.

More than this, she has good stage presence and exquisite taste in dressing, the three costumes used during the evening being absolutely apropos to the groups of songs and, at the same time, immensely becoming to Miss Knowlton.

The audience liked her work very much, and she was the recipient of enthusiastic indorsement.

Following Miss Knowlton came Major L. Gordon Sandford of the Royal Field Artillery (England), who held the audience enthralled for a half-hour by the simple eloquence of his recital of moods and conditions on the battlefields of France.

He is, of course, excessively British in accent, appearance and racial feeling, but, strange as it may seem, he is a past master of droll humor, and while he told many heartrending things about the war he also kept ripples of laughter flowing over the audience almost continually by his droll stories and his insistent jollity.

MIDDLETON TO SING "MESSIAH" THREE TIMES IN ONE WEEK

"All good things come in threes," runs the old saying, and it certainly is a good thing to listen to the gorgeous baritone voice of Arthur Middleton in the stately music of Handel's "Messiah." At least that is the opinion of three of the most famous oratorio societies in the country. The Boston Handel and Haydn, the New York Oratorio and the Chicago Apollo Club have engaged this popular American artist for performances of this work on December 27 and December 29, respectively. Incidentally, Mr. Middleton has sung "The Messiah" over 200 times in the course of his career. This is a great record, even for the "John McCormack of baritones," as the critic of the New York Evening Mail labeled Arthur Middleton after his Aeolian Hall recital last season.

MARGUERITE RINGO

Marguerite Ringo, soprano, whose successful appearances at Lockport were detailed in a recent issue of Music News, is a native of California and has lived in New York City for the last three years, where she has become well known in concert, church and oratorio work.

She has held the position of soprano soloist in two of the best known churches and is, this fall, entering upon her second year at the Central Baptist, a handsome new church dedicated last October.

Excepting for her appearances at Lockport, Miss Ringo has devoted the entire summer to Y. M. C. A. work and has sung at nearly every camp and at several base hospitals in the vicinity of New York.

Miss Ringo is now booking her concert work for the coming season and has already a fine list of engagements.

She has received splendid commendation from the press, both east and west, some extracts from which may be found in another column of this paper.

Arnd—Miss Margaret Louise Arnd is devoting all her time singing for the Fourth Liberty Loan and will use the following songs:

America, the Promised Land.....Roy R. Murphy
(Dedicated to John W. Norton, U. S. N.; royalty goes to the French Orphan Fund)
The Blue Star in the Window.....Albert S. Reitz
(The entire proceeds of this song devoted to Red Cross and Liberty Loan)
The Vow.....Ralph L. Grosvenor
(To George M. Hard, 2d, 165th Infantry, U. S. A., and the Four Minute Song Men of America)

Scholin—Albert Scholin, who has studied the past several years at the American Conservatory in Chicago and who went to Jamestown, N. Y., last spring to take a position at the Jamestown Conservatory of Music as well as an organ position and the work of correspondent for Music News, has been called to the colors and is now in Jefferson Barracks, at Columbus, Ohio.

Ffrench—Miss Florence Ffrench, who has just returned from the east, where she made a number of appearances as soloist with the Sousa Band, will appear at Orchestra Hall in recital on October 31, under the direction of James Hawley.

THE AMERICAN OPERATIC CONDUCTOR

EXCERPT FROM A PAPER PREPARED AND READ AT THE OHIO STATE MUSIC TEACHERS' CONVENTION, JUNE 27, 1918, BY RALPH LYFORD, DIRECTOR DEPARTMENT OF OPERA, CINCINNATI CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

A Foreword

The Ohio State Music Teachers' Convention must be accredited with the initiative of the propaganda in behalf of the American musical conductor. To this end, Mr. Ralph Lyford, pupil of Arthur Nikisch and Felix Weingartner, and formerly of the Boston Opera Company, was asked to address the association as to the American operatic conductor.

Several years more than a decade of operatic conducting qualify Mr. Lyford to speak with the authority of experience, inside knowledge and first hand information concerning the subject. The following excerpt from his address contains points of sufficient saliency to make Americans possessing that breadth of patriotism which includes music, and their compatriots, sit up and take notice. Now that the Ohio Music Association has thrown the ball, and Mr. Lyford well started it to rolling, who will be American enough to give it another big push? A good slogan is, "America for American Conductors First." Now is the psychological moment for the beginning of their preparation as a class, their chance for a fair showing, and the protection of their art by safeguarding them from false criticism and a camouflaged persecution, the same to be guaranteed to conductors already prepared.

G. G.

Non-existent as a class, the American operatic conductor is a sort of curiosity that is allowed to exist as long as it is harmless. Little can be said of the past and present, but much can and must be said of the future American conductor of opera. It avails little, however, in discussing this question, to fall back into eulogies over the rare instances we recall of Americans who have been fortunate with the baton, or to paint in glowing colors a rosy dawn in the near future. It were better to seek out a path which might possibly lead to a real solution of the difficulties and barriers which discourage the young conductor.

The operatic conductor will not be evolved by shouting and hat waving, nor will he appear ready-made, the recipient of some heaven-bestowed genius. Under present conditions, granted the ability, they would not be allowed to hold any prominent position in our own opera houses. Why are we so loath to support our own children in the pursuit of music here in America when it comes to competition or any real test? Why are they not given the same protection that foreigners are given and find necessary? Few laymen understand the peculiar significance and necessity of this term "protection" as applied to theatrical affairs. Most of those who are successful feel a great sympathy for the word. Those who have not received the blessing of protection naturally feel quite rebellious when they witness its power. No young man of any nationality travels far without it.

In one of our finest but now, unfortunately, defunct opera houses, one might have observed the application of this panacea to several young foreign conductors, all of whom had gained little or no experience at the head of an opera company, but all of whom were good musicians. Through that opportunity, one of the favored foreigners was enabled to develop his talents by constant practice until he now enjoys the first position in our land.

The single American conductor, a musician of wide reputation, was forced out of the company, lacking protection against the criticism and ridicule of his foreign colleagues.

It is true that our great theaters are not to be considered as training schools for young and immature talent; but for every young American who is so fostered there are a hundred young men of foreign birth.

It is only by realizing the great power of the press, in other words, the people, and by applying such influence in a practical manner at the fountain-head that any fruitful results can ever be attained.

It is said we have no conductors to compare with the foreigners.

Of course not; and we never shall, so long as we continue to assist the foreigner up the ladder while our own children are deliberately thrown down.

An American is thought able enough to become the President of our country, but he is not intelligent enough to become the leader of a symphony orchestra, or a Metropolitan Opera House, founded, supported and allowed to exist through the strength of our own purses. We want the finished product regardless of cost, and since we do not take the time or trouble to cultivate our own, we will induce the "stars" to visit us from across the ocean and pay them half the salary of our chief executive.

A short time past the trade mark "Made in Germany" had us completely bewitched. Anything so marked was beyond question superior to our best. That idea is effectually exploded, and we are beginning to try out a new trade mark, "Made in America." Why not try it in regard to conductors of opera?

It may safely be said that there are many young Americans who not only long to become operatic conductors but who possess the capacity for success if they are given the opportunity of learning the art.

Apprenticeship is necessary—a thorough knowledge of the repertoire and routine of the state. But apprenticeship, instead of being reserved for the benefit of young foreigners, should by preference be given to young Americans. As a matter of fact, it is next to impossible for Americans to secure contracts with opera companies in this land, for all subordinate positions are distributed like so many olives, to young and nearly always unprepared and undeserving foreigners.

Let us approach the syndicates and directors of our institutions, bidding them in the name of patriotism and common sense and justice, to bestow no positions in our opera houses to foreigners for which Americans are eligible, with the exception of the few chief conductors, who, because of their long experience, and, in some cases, genius, must for a time be depended upon to maintain the high standard already established. With this one provision we should have, in five short years, a score, at least, of brilliant and accomplished young operatic conductors.

Then we could begin to replace the leading conductors, and in a decade the boycott and monopoly so cleverly constructed and camouflaged would be dissolved, with American conductors securely seated in their chairs, the whole vexing question of American opera, music, singers, stage managers, and impresarios would be quickly and easily reduced to its simplest factors and we would come at last into our own.

But this can never be accomplished until we make up our minds to give preference to our own men, push them ahead, stand loyally behind them even in their weakness, supporting them against adverse criticism, and denying the foreigner the right to corner the market and control the disposition of all contracts. That, and that alone, will constitute true musical patriotism.

When we need an orchestra leader in town or metropolis, let us take the best prepared full-blooded American, and if it happens that a foreigner must be favored, let us not in our hero-worship be less severe in criticism of his weaknesses than we would be of those of our own children.

Note—It comes to mind that among the very recent announcements of the Metropolitan opera season we read of three new assistant conductors being engaged, all with unknown and foreign names!

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. This is done in the belief that this matter will be found to be of great interest to a large number of people. This is in no sense an advertising department, and no items will be accepted for pay

Mr. Stock's Resignation

In a letter which expresses a very fine spirited sense of responsibility and unselfish devotion to the Chicago Orchestra, its conductor, Mr. Frederick A. Stock, has tendered his resignation to the Orchestral Association.

The tender has been accepted by the trustees for reasons which in no way reflect upon Mr. Stock, but are founded on the same careful regard for the welfare of the great institution they serve as has moved Mr. Stock's action.

Mr. Stock feels, and the trustees accept his point of view, that his failure to perfect the legal formalities of citizenship by taking out his second papers lay him open, and possibly the orchestra likewise, to some public criticism. Technically Mr. Stock is an "alien enemy" and Mr. Stock, with very rare consideration, has felt that his continuance as conductor might be misconstrued and erected, however unjustly, into an offense against the institution. To avoid any possible shadow of affront to its patronage or the introduction of any sentiment which might deprive the concerts of their proper atmosphere, Mr. Stock and the trustees, on the former's generous initiative, have adopted the course taken.

At the same time the trustees take occasion to make it clear that Mr. Stock's essential loyalty to the nation is fully recognized by them, as well as his years of faithful service to the orchestra. The resignation, therefore, will interrupt Mr. Stock's official connection with the orchestra, not finally sever it, for it is desired and expected that he will take up the baton again when the present legal objection has been removed. The feeling shown by the trustees has been earned by a devotion not often found in service and it will be shared by the great majority, if not indeed all, of the orchestra patrons. It is proper for the public to know of the confidence felt by the trustees in Mr. Stock and to recognize the honorable motives which moved him. He retires with great credit and will be welcomed back with friendliness unabated if not, indeed, increased.

In the meantime the orchestra has been strengthened by the addition of Mr. Eric De Lamarter, former music critic of The Tribune, an accomplished composer and organist, who has been appointed assistant conductor, and the concerts will be under his direction, and that of a number of visiting conductors and conductor-composers, insuring an interesting and varied season, the standard of which will be on a level worthy of the orchestra.—Editorial, Chicago Tribune.

How Muratore Thrilled San Francisco

San Franciscans who remember with delight the great success achieved by Lucien Muratore on the occasion of his appearance in San Francisco in February of last year, with his beautiful wife—Lina Cavalieri—will be pleased beyond measure with the program that Muratore and his assisting artists—Georges Truc, solo pianist, and Alexandre Debruille, solo violinist, will give at the Exposition Auditorium one week from tomorrow (Sunday, October 6) at 2:30 p. m. sharp. Muratore is one of the most heroic figures at present before the public. He and his assisting artists are French soldiers off on leave. Those who heard Muratore on the occasion of his last visit need not be reminded that he is, without a question of a doubt, the greatest tenor that ever appeared in San Francisco. For the benefit of those who were not in attendance on that occasion the digest of criticisms that appeared in the San Francisco newspapers will be of interest.

"Muratore is one of the greatest of tenors and one of the most magnificent in the history of the art of song. . . . After the song ('The Marseillaise') was finished the audience, still standing, shouted its approval and sympathy, and Muratore, whose voice is Italian along with his parentage, and whose art is French, still under the impress of his own marvelous performance could merely shout—'Vive la France.'" (Walter Anthony, San Francisco Chronicle, February 18, 1917.)

"In response to the clamoring thousands Muratore sang 'The Marseillaise.' The whole mass of people rose to their feet wild with enthusiasm. A man must have a soul aflame to do that. Chicago has not over-rated the French tenor. He ranks with the great ones." (Redfern Mason, San Francisco Examiner, February 26, 1917.)

"Muratore is handsome of face and figure. His is a magnificent tenor, high and of great purity and volume, and he quickly warmed up to the tremendous task of singing, as it were, to all the world in the monster Auditorium." (Bulletin, February 26, 1917.)

"Muratore has a melody in his voice that searches right into the heart's depths and brings to the surface all of the secret longings. He can reach the heights of human happiness, he can touch the depths of its misery. He sings of patriotism, of love, of passion, of joy, of sorrow, all with a virile passion, for his art is entrancing." (Call, February 26, 1917.)

"Ah! the voice of Lucien Muratore and his impeccable art! His is a big, luscious voice, vibrant with sentiment and passion. By his singing he reveals himself a man of intellect and cultivation." (Helen M. Bonnet, Town Talk, March 3, 1917.)

"Muratore's voice is a full-bodied, beautiful tenor voice and the ability to charge its luscious sweet tones with the emotional fervor so dear to the Latins. Muratore made an immediate 'hit.' . . . He also sang 'The Marseillaise,' singing it with a fire and a passion that started a tempest of shouts among an audience that rose in a great spontaneous and unanimous wave of patriotic recognition." (Argonaut, March 3, 1917.)—Pacific Coast Musical Review.

Camp Music Director

O. Gordon Erickson, musical director at the high school, leaves today to be musical director at Camp Sevier, S. C. He will be civilian aid to the commanding officer. It is reported that musical directors later are to be commissioned captains.

Mr. Erickson has been at Oak Park high for five years and has been the director also of the choir at the Sunday Evening Club. He says that the most wonderful and remarkable musical interest is manifested by the soldiers and that the voices of thousands are raised at one time in the camps.

The high command proposes to encourage singing and to improve its quality by the employment of the best talent available as directors. Mr. Erickson looks forward with pleasure to his new duties.—Oak Leaves.

Another Tribute to Schumann-Heink

The following tribute to Mme. Schumann-Heink was published in the August 21 issue of the Des Moines Capital:

"Mme. Schumann-Heink is a great singer. We cannot recall the name of a singer about whom so much good has been said and written. Schumann-Heink was born in Germany, educated in Germany and became the wife of a German. She was engaged to come to America to join the forces of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and from that time her popularity grew and her success as a great singer was assured.

"But great as is her popularity as a singer, it has become secondary to that still greater quality of mind and heart—'mother.' By common consent of the soldier boys and the great public this title has been conferred upon her, and it exceeds any tribute that has ever been paid to any artist or queen who has come to this country. She has freely given her four stalwart sons, George Washington, Walter, Henry and Ferdinand, to the United States Army and Navy to help win the war against Germany. In the cantonments of our country she has gladdened the hearts of the soldier boys with her beautiful voice. She has so won the love and admiration of the people of the Pacific Coast that the authorities of San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego have passed resolutions in her honor and presented the same to her, together with the keys of the cities.

"No one questions her loyalty. No one associates the name Schumann-Heink with Germany. She is a patriot through and through, and her loyal sacrifices to her country have set a noble example for every person of German extraction in the United States to heed and emulate."

Mme. Hassler-Fox in Philadelphia and Milwaukee

Her tones are of melodious quality, and she sang expressively, while the audience so much enjoyed her singing of "Tell Me, Where is Fancy Bred?" by Homer Bartlett, and the Scotch ballad, "Hame to the Hielands," by Howard C. Gilmour, that both were repeated. The voice has the true contralto quality. Mme. Hassler-Fox was recalled to give extra songs in response to cordial applause.—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

The fact that the orchestra has obtained the help of some of the finest soloists of the country this season, far better artists than have been procured at any other time, was amply illustrated in the artistic work of the New York contralto, Mme. Regina Hassler-Fox, who was particularly happy in her rendition of such songs as Spross' "Awakening" and Wolf's "Verborgenheit." Mme. Fox has a voice of mellow quality, her lower notes being especially rich and sonorous and her upper notes partaking of the brilliancy of a soprano. One very noticeable feature of Mme. Fox's singing is the abundant temperament which she displays. She infuses every song with a convincing fervor which carries her audience with her.—The Milwaukee Journal.

Father Finn in New Post

The Rev. William J. Finn has been appointed organist and choirmaster of the Catholic Church of St. Paul the Apostle, Columbus Avenue and Sixtieth Street, New York, and has taken to New York twenty-five of his boy choristers as a permanent addition to the choir. Father Finn succeeds the late Professor Edmund J. Hurley, who was knighted by the Pope for his work in developing the use of the Gregorian Chant in this country.

Josephine and Eugene Sullivan

Miss Josephine Sullivan and her brother Eugene were the soloists at the concert by Panduro's orchestra Sunday. Miss Sullivan has a rich and full soprano voice which was heard to good advantage in the aria, "One Fine Day," from the opera "Madame Butterfly," by Puccini. She responded with two encores, well sung, and received with much enthusiasm. In the duet from Il Trovatore, Mr. Sullivan disclosed a well poised voice of fine quality. The voices blended to a fine degree and the duet "Somewhere a Voice Is Calling" was given in response to an insistent encore. —Milwaukee Journal.

Miss Josephine Sullivan, soprano, and her brother Eugene Sullivan, tenor, were heard in a charming recital. These young people have been attracting attention for some time in their work, both as individual soloists, as well as together. Miss Sullivan's voice is of extended range and on this occasion was especially pleasing in "Caro Nome" from "Rigoletto," taking on a quality in the upper range seldom heard outside of the few great coloratura singers. Mr. Sullivan's voice is a tenor of unusually pleasing quality, which he adapts artistically both in ballads and the duets and scenes from opera with his sister.—Chicago Music News.

The program given by the orchestra under the direction of Henry Panduro proved a success in every respect. The selection of the soloists portrayed an unusual and excellent taste in music. Miss Josephine Sullivan, soprano, who sang "One Fine Day" from "Madame Butterfly," is a well gifted singer, having a full, rich voice, winning a loving response in all the hearts of the patrons. She was requested to give two encores. Her brother Eugene is an extraordinary lyric tenor, displaying an excellent quality of voice, which was heard to advantage in the duet from "Il Trovatore." Two encores were demanded after this number, which showed to advantage the blending of the voices.—Milwaukee Germania-Herold.

Grand Opera in Philadelphia

Creatore, the well known leader, who has for many years been a favorite in Philadelphia, has assembled a splendid aggregation of stars who will participate in the grand opera festival which will be given at the Academy of Music beginning Tuesday evening, Oct. 8. Because of the occupancy of the Academy of Music on the preceding night by another attraction, it was found impossible to open the festival on that occasion, as was first announced. To make up for the Monday evening performance a special matinee will be sung Wednesday afternoon. The repertoire for the week has not yet been definitely announced, but "Aida" will be sung as the opening performance, while such familiar works as "Rigoletto," "Trovatore," "Martha," "Carmen," "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci" will also be presented.

Among the well known stars are Orville Harrold and Regina Vicarino. The former is one of the greatest tenors on the operatic stage, as his international career proves, while Signorina Vicarino, who sang in this city with Oscar Hammerstein, has since won fame in Mexico and South America, where her interpretation of such difficult roles as Lucia, Gilda, Violetta and others of a similar type have placed her high in the ranks of florid singers. The entire company numbers approximately one hundred persons, while an excellent orchestra and ballet are also features. Among the artists will be Bettina Freeman, Sergio Eanco, Amadeo Baldi, Mario Carboni, Greek Evans, Jeanne Gordon, Lillian Gresham, Alice Hesleri, Giorgio Pulitti, Ethel Harrington, Salvatore Sciaretti, Francesco Tamburello, Alfredo Valenti and Carlo Villasies.—Philadelphia Enquirer.

Blossom Wilcox in Wisconsin

Soloists who sang in "Creation" gave the most finished exhibition heard here in a number of years. Miss Blossom Wilcox, soprano, formerly of Green Bay and now of New York, did splendid work. Her range is wide, her control excellent. Her voice seemed particularly adapted to her roles last evening.—Gazette, Green Bay, Wis., Jan. 10, 1917.

. . . Each solo was the occasion of much applause. Miss Wilcox, who sang with the choral society for the first time, has a wonderfully pleasing voice and a charming personality. . . . —De Pere News, Wis., Jan. 9, 1917.

Gertrude Ogden-Fleming

Gertrude Ogden-Fleming has a voice of broad dramatic quality which gives breadth in expression, aided by rich tonal coloring and fine range.—Mary Towle Davis in Towle's Magazine, Chicago.

Gertrude Ogden-Fleming, the young lady singer who is appearing at Carnival Court with the 65th Regiment Band, has a wonderfully clear, rich voice. A dramatic soprano of rare harmonious quality.—Buffalo News.

Gertrude Ogden-Fleming, soprano soloist with the Troy City Band, has proven to be a big favorite and a strong attraction for the Park.—Troy Budget.

Gertrude Ogden-Fleming, vocal soloist with Thavin Russian Band, is numbered amongst the cleverest and sweetest soprano singers in the profession.—Detroit Free Press.

MUSIC OF THE WAR

Phonograph Proves Its Value and Need Fear No Rivalry at Front

"With all fitting respect to the pipes, the drum and the fife, by which the music of war today is produced, it is the gramophone that uplifts its intrepid voice in the dugout under fire," said a Canadian officer invalided home, in discussing the need for and value of music among the men at the front, according to an exchange.

"Many a company headquarters, lit by a couple of candles flaring in bottle necks, sublet to countless rats, in ever-present danger of flooding, is cheered and brightened by the obliging music box.

"The gramophone has times without number proved its value as a tonic for morale. Under conditions as they are in the trenches, while the candle is repeatedly extinguished by the concussion of "five-nines" that are looking for you, some resort to fatalism, some to levity, others console themselves with the reflection that in the event of a direct hit they would never know anything about it. But a gramophone, the louder the better, is a great source of comfort.

"Through its lusty song you may hear explosions, and certainly feel the shaking of the earth, but you are saved the nerve tightening whoop of the shells as they complete their flight. There are old trumpets preserved in high honor for the sake of the dents they won in action, but who shall commemorate or praise the innumerable gramophones which, in this war, have been destroyed by shell fire?

"You will find certain tunes regarded as unlucky by units. I know one battery in whose mess you were frowned upon if you called upon the gramophone to give you Teddie Gerrard's song, 'We're Glad to See You Back, Dear Lady.' Invariably, they told you, it brought a bombardment upon them.

"I remember one winter night in what we now call a 'peace position'—guns in their emplacements on one side of a country road, officers' billets in the cottages on the other side. Four of us were running the record of 'I'm Happy, Happy, Happy, Happy All the Time.' Halfway through, the Boche commenced an intense gas shell bombardment.

"The gramophone operator stopped the machine and with the others, masked and dribbling in his respirator, stumbled out to his post at the guns. It was dawn before the final flight of whining, poisonous projectiles came over; but no sooner had the straining stopped than some one set off the gramophone where it had been arrested, and through the freezing air of the winter morning that metallic optimist declaimed again its enduring felicity.

"The record, 'When You Come, Dear, All Will Be Fair,' will always remind me of winter mornings when the war was at its best. It recalls breakfast by candle light before going to an O. P.—porridge and tinned milk, with my back to a blazing wood fire; the mess waiter hovering near to see when I was going to be ready for my eggs and bacon. Such a breakfast, I found, went very well to that song, and the record was regularly on duty for me.

"But there are records with less happy associations. We used to endure with jeers poor old Jimmy's favorite, 'Every Little While,' but poor old Jimmy was killed at Messines, and now if one of the new subalterns, unknowing, puts on that record, it seems to the old members of the mess that they hear again Jimmy's cheerful and discordant accompaniment.

"Superior people may 'crab' the gramophone, but it has proved its worth at the front, and fears no rival there."—Chicago Daily News.

Saba Doak

The singing of Saba Doak, a young soprano, was very musical and elicited much favorable comment. Miss Doak has a very fine voice, well schooled, of wide compass and sympathetic quality.—Maurice Rosenfeld in Musical America.

Sings charmingly, with ease, musicianly interpretation and English diction without a flaw.—Leanore Raines, Paris, France.

Saba Doak demonstrated again her rank among the best concert singers. Her stage presence and style of singing is artistic, her tone combines purity and sweetness with power, a quality only too rarely found. Her diction was as nearly perfect as possible.—Chattanooga News.

The selections used by Miss Doak were chosen to appeal to the children as well as the audience, and her artistic rendition of them pleased the children wonderfully and through them the audience. It is an art to sing acceptably to children, and Miss Doak certainly possesses that gift. Her rendition of the aria was really a work of art. A beautiful voice, flexible, full of sound, with a good range.—Festival, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

Ethel Leginska

To play in this fashion through the long course of such a concert is to play with passion, poetry and power, the range of beauty, resource and style of a pianist of the first rank.—H. T. Parker in the Boston Transcript.

Every work she brings forward grows and develops under her fingers like a living organism. The sleeping notes of the pianoforte awake and take on an individual shape corresponding to her exceptional personality.—London Daily Telegraph.

Especially admirable were her superb technique and her big musical qualities.—Echo De Paris.

Morgan Kingston at Ravinia Park

"Aida"

Following is some of the press comment accorded Morgan Kingston during his Ravinia engagement:

Morgan Kingston sang in fine style and was cordially received by the audience, which recognized in him an old friend.—Chicago Evening Post, July 1.

Morgan Kingston as Rhadames was a worthy member of this distinguished cast, singing his music with ringing power.—Chicago Daily News.

The role of Rhadames is probably Kingston's best. I know of no other that he does so well, and I never heard him sing this one as well as he did Saturday night.—Chicago Daily Journal.

Morgan Kingston was admirable as the painter lover.—Chicago Herald.

Morgan Kingston has developed during this last winter in a most gratifying manner. His voice was fuller in volume, solid all the way through, and he gave out the big phrases with an assurance that made them tell. He has also become more free in his stage action and made a fine impression as Cavaradossi. He sang the aria in the last act especially well and was warmly applauded.—Chicago Evening Post.

"Butterfly"

The operatic production of "Butterfly" brought forth, as formerly, the fine singing of Claudio Murio and Morgan Kingston, who puts into the characterization of Pinkerton all his dramatic gifts and vocal accomplishments. Seldom is the finale of the first act so well done as by Murio and Kingston. They proved to be the stars of the occasion.—Chicago Daily News.

Further testifying to the merits of the performance, there was Morgan Kingston as Pinkerton, one of the best tenors now on the stage.—Chisago Daily Journal.

Kingston was an ardent poet and a typical Bohemian.—Chicago Examiner.

Morgan Kingston, the Rodolfo of the cast, did his part with vocal proficiency and dramatic ease.—Chicago Daily News.

To Mr. Kingston's endeavors as the lover the usual adjectives of compliment may be applied, with the further praise that in the prima donna's last moments he simulated sorrow rather than the customary regret.—Chicago Tribune.

"Butterfly" by a Jap

The Japanese soprano, Tamaki Miura, is very popular in America. After studying in Japan under European teachers, Miura went to Berlin for a course under Lilli Lehmann. When war broke out she escaped with only a small suit case, and managed to reach London. Sir Henry Wood engaged her to appear at the Albert Hall. At the same concert Madame Patti sang. Miura also sang "Madame Butterfly" at the London Opera House, and was then engaged by Max Rabinoff for a tour in America. She has appeared with the Boston Opera Company, and also the Bracale Company in Havana, and is shortly to make her debut in South America, at the Colon, the Buenos Aires opera house.—Australian Musical News.

[Editor's note—Miura has just been engaged for an American tour by the La Scala Opera Company.]

Lela Lowe-Pierson

The numerous friends in Nashville of Lela Lowe-Pierson, formerly of this city, will be interested to hear of her musical success in New York. On last Friday evening she appeared at a concert at the Commonwealth Club of Montclair, N. J., before a large and appreciative audience of music lovers. Her rendition of the last movement of the Mendelssohn concerto brought a storm of applause which would not cease until she had responded with two encores.—Nashville Banner, Nashville, Tenn.

Lela Lowe-Pierson's violin recital Friday evening at Frenche's Hall before the membership of the Vendriedi musical and invited guests, was a revelation of the great talent and technical ability of this gifted musician. Her bowing is exceptionally strong and fine for her years, but in temperament and tone power she excels. Most notable was her performance of the brilliant E minor Concerto by Mendelssohn.—Nashville Banner, Nashville, Tenn.

Lela Lowe-Pierson's violin work was excellent. Her rendition of the Grieg sonata in F was all that could be desired, and especially artistic was her interpretation of the graceful Mozart Minuet.—News-Tribune, Duluth, Minn.

Lela Lowe-Pierson is a young artist of rare talent and ability, her playing being characterized by sound tchnic, a beautiful tone and much musical temperament.—Superior Telegram, Superior, Wis.

The New Season

They're off!

Pupils, new and old, are again registering in school and private studio.

More and more important has music become and with increased prestige comes greater responsibility.

These young students have a right to expect teachers qualified by preparation to give them the best instruction.

Teachers are justified in asking a fair compensation for their services.

Musicians need to find common ground for organization and endeavor.

The profession ought to establish itself in the business world and command respect.

The method of collecting bills for tuition every once in a while has to give way to regular and prompt receipts.

Are we giving music lessons or an education in music? That's the question of the hour.

How much longer will we be satisfied to have music disregarded in the educational curriculum?

Musicians, a new day appears!

Shall we mount with the eagle and greet the sun or like the owl—blink only and look wise?—Music and Musicians.

Two Bits of Comment on Minnie Hubbard

Minnie Hubbard's attainments as a teacher, violin soloist and promoter of musical art would be notable in any community.—Musical Leader, Chicago.

She has a charming, girlish simplicity, with mature dignity in both her poise and playing.—Music News, Chicago.

EDNA DE LIMA—A MODEST ARTIST OF MANY SIDED TALENTS

Not very often, but once in a while, one discovers an artist who is not only extremely talented, but so modest that she admits only after much questioning that before taking up singing she studied to be a concert pianist, that she speaks three foreign languages fluently, and that she makes her own translations for the songs on her concert programs.

Such a rara avis is Edna de Lima, the charming American lyric soprano who is known to concert audiences as the possessor of a lovely voice and artistry and captivating manner of singing that has caused even the blase New York critics to wax enthusiastic.

EDNA DE LIMA

At Lake Placid this summer, during her hours for recreation, Miss de Lima decided to make all of the translations for her New York and Chicago recital programs. Upon showing these translations to Frank La Forge, who has accompanied Miss de Lima at both of her New York recitals, he suggested that she make translations for other artists' programs also, and so there will be found on the recital programs of Madame Matzenauer this season translations of many songs by Edna de Lima. During the present Fourth Liberty Loan campaign, Edna de Lima will be one of the artists prominently featured to help in the sale of bonds. She sang twice during the opening day of the campaign, at Sherry's and at the Biltmore, and on Oct. 7 on the sub-treasury steps.

AMERICAN TOUR OF PARIS CONSERVATORY ORCHESTRA

A red, white and blue day for French music in America will dawn when the Symphony Orchestra of the Paris Conservatoire arrives from abroad to begin its tour of sixty cities early in October. Vast preparations for the welcome of this distinguished body of musicians will be celebrated as Tri-olor Day and the event arranged by the rious Chambers of Commerce and prinal musical organizations. These will be sisted in the care of the details by local ncert managers, who have volunteered eir services.

As previously stated, the coming of the chestra is due to plans of the French high mmission and the United States governnt, and it will be under the direct spices of the French government. The nch-American Association for Musical t is in charge of the arrangements for the ur. When Otto H. Kahn recently arrived m France he brought the greetings of the ciete des Concerts du Conservatoire de ris (the orchestra's full name in French) its celebrated conductor, Andre Mesger, and announced that the orchestra is looking forward to its first visit to the United States with great pleasure.

The patriotic note will be sounded throughout the tour of the visiting society and from present indications, judging by the number of cities already disappointed in not being able to list the orchestra among their attractions of the musical season, accommodations for music lovers will everywhere be taxed to the utmost. This, however, will not prove a novel experience for the orchestra, seats for which have for generations been considered the rarest luxury and as practically unobtainable except by the oldest patrons among the elite who have handed them on to members of their own families.

The tour of this oldest of orchestral societies (founded 1878) will last three months, during which period most of the large cities of the United States and Canada will have heard their patriotic concerts. While no announcement of the repertoire has been made, it is understood that in a program of highly valued masterpieces of the French school will appear many new and unfamiliar works. The profits of the tour will be donated to war reliefs.

WINNIPEG, CANADA

Winnipeg promises to be very lively this winter in the way of music. Mr. Walter Stanbrook, manager of Walker theater, has already given us two light operas of a very high order, and we are promised several more in the near future. The San Carlo grand opera was such a success last year that Mr. Stanbrook has arranged two weeks of the opera this year.

The Russian Symphony Orchestra will be heard here early this autumn. The assisting artists will be Florence Macbeth, coloratura soprano, and Ernest Hutcheson, pianist.

Mr. S. A. Parfitt of the Canadian Council Bureau has arranged with a number of eminent artists to appear here this season. He has already given the names of Pablo Casals, Mischa Elman, Leginska, Morgan Kingston, Kathleen Parlow, Godowsky, and the Zoellner String Quartet.

CHARLOTTE ELLEN POWERS.

Hagen—Helen Hagen, a pupil at the Chicago Musical College, has been engaged as soprano soloist at St. James' M. E. Church.

ANNOUNCEMENTS OF ETHEL M. RICE

Manager for Musical and Dramatic Artists

Carl Craven, community song leader, Michigan City, Ind., September 23, 24, 30, October 7, 14, 21.

Bertha Booth, solo violinist, week's engagement at New Riviera Theater, Broadway and Lawrence.

A special social meeting of the Daughters of the Confederacy was entertained with a charming program arranged by Mrs. Rice, in which Miss Ruth Mills, Miss Helen Ferbeck, solo dancer, and Miss Johnie Herford, pianist, participated. Miss Mills' rendition of the "Gypsy Love Song" from "The Fortune Teller" charmed her audience and gave promise of other engagements in the near future.

Announcement will be made in the near future of club engagements now under way in which many of our best known Chicago artists will appear.

Lindson Sisters, variety singers, will appear October 20 and week at the Howard Theater. On the 16th, 17th and 18th preceding this engagement they will appear at Peoria.

Mme. Amelia Conti, harpist, Chicago Opera Association, Pantheon Theater engagement.

Miss Edna Wilson, Miss Helen Rinehart and Miss Johnie Herford constituted the personnel of the community singers who have scored such a hit in the Ascher houses here and at Michigan City on September 17 and 18.

Miss Ruth Mills entertained inmates of the Indiana State Prison recently. Below is a letter of appreciation:

Miss Ruth Mills,
422 Fine Arts Building,
Chicago, Ill.

My Dear Miss Mills: Allow me to formally thank you for your invaluable part in the delightful song recital given in the Indiana State Prison chapel Sunday, September 1st. I do not know of any musical entertainment or otherwise that has reached the men of this institution so completely as did the concert and community singing in which you so kindly participated. I am sure if you really appreciated the pleasure you brought these men you would feel more than paid for your efforts. The men were not only pleased upon that occasion, but are still discussing the happy event.

The officers of the institution and the inmates join with me in extending their sincere thanks to you and to express a wish for your future success and happiness.

Yours very truly,

E. J. FOGARTY,
Warden.

First Concert of the Society of American Singers

On Sunday, September 29, the members of the company were presented in a concert, attended only by a limited audience. The baton was in the hands of Henry Hadler, who directed the orchestra in a rendition of "Les Preludes" (Liszt) and two of his own compositions, "The Angelus," from his Symphony, and Prelude to his opera, "Azora." The soloists were: Florence Hinkle-Witherspoon, who sang "Depuis le jour" ("Louise"), "In the Time of Roses," "Yesterday and Today" (Spross) and "Love in My Heart" (Woodman); Max Gegna, cellist, was also soloist, playing the Chopin Nocturne and a Popper composition; Craig Campbell, tenor, rendered "Chegelida Manina," from "La Boheme." Ruth Miller, soprano; Carl Formes, baritone; Craig Campbell, tenor, and Viola Robertson, contralto, sang the quartet from "Rigoletto." The second week of the organization's repertoire was as in the first.

John McCormack Sings for the Sailors' Comfort and Cheer League at the Hippodrome

The great tenor before opening his own season of concerts offered to begin with singing for those in need and wherever he appears the crowds follow him en masse. Simultaneously with the American singers at the Park Theater, the minstrel of the nation appeared at the Hippodrome before an immense audience. Some $15,000 were cashed in for the Sailors' Comfort and Cheer League. His voice and his songs were enjoyed to such an extent that many encores were compelled. The assisting artist was Wilfred Wilkinson, violinist, and Edwin Schneider was at the piano.

John McCormack, Galli-Curci and Others Sing at Carnegie Hall for Liberty

Carnegie Hall was jammed with a vast throng eager to buy Liberty Bonds and to listen to an unusual concert given on September 30. Five million dollars were subscribed on this occasion. The attractive features of this event were John McCormack, Galli-Curci, Enrico Caruso and Jascha Heifetz, violinist. The first sang "Keep the Home Fires Burning" and "Dear Old Pal of Mine," by Lieutenant Gitz-Rice. Mme. Galli-Curci sang "Annie Laurie," "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes" and the Mad Scene from "Lucia," with flute obligato by Manuel Berenguer. Enrico Caruso had his share of success, as well as the Russian violinist, Jascha Heifetz. The "Star Spangled Banner," sung by McCormack, aroused the public. There were other attractions. The event was given under the auspices of the Allied Musical Trades.

Marguerite Sylvia With the Chicago Opera

After fulfilling her eight weeks' engagement with the Society of American Singers at the Park Theater, Marguerite Sylvia will appear during the month of November with the Chicago Opera Association, when she will interpret the part of Carmen, in which role she is famous.

The Rialto

For the week ending October 6 the leading movie house offered the overture, "Il Guarany," by Gornez, played by the orchestra under Mr. Riesenfeld's baton. Josephine Forsythe, soprano, sang old Scotch ballads, and Martin Brefel, tenor, "M 'Appari," from "Martha." As a light execution the orchestra played "Alma, Where Do You Live?" by Jean Briquet. "Marche Militaire," by Schubert, was rendered by the organist.

The Symphony Society of New York

Walter Damrosch plans a series of free concerts for the soldiers and sailors. At the first concert at Carnegie Hall the leader of the Symphony will relate his experiences with General Pershing and the American Expeditionary Forces in France. A tour through the camps is also the aim of Mr. Damrosch. Besides the New York concerts four will be given in Washington under the auspices of the Washington Society of Fine Arts for the benefit of war workers. The orchestra will make four midwinter tours, visiting, besides other cities, Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia. The soloists will be Mischa Levitzki, Josef Hofmann, Mabel Garrison and Jascha Heifetz, violinist.

Elias Breeskin Substitutes for Ethel Leginska at the Humanitarian Cult

Owing to the illness of Ethel Leginska, the brilliant pianist, Elias Breeskin, Russian violinist, saved the concert of the Humanitarian Cult on October 1 at the Carnegie Hall. The violinist rendered "Souvenir de Moscow" (Wieniawski), "Zapatata" (Sarasate), one air by Goldmark and one by Cecile Chaminade. Josef Adler was at the piano.

The Chicago Opera Company in New York

All doubts were dispelled with the announcement that the Chicago Opera Association will return to the metropolis for a second season of four weeks, beginning January 27, 1919. The interesting points are the following:

French Premieres to Be Given

"Gismonda," by Henry Fevrier, composer of "Monna Vanna," under the composer's leadership. "Le Chemineau," by Xavier Leroux. "Le Cadeau de Noel" ("Christmas Gift"), by the same composer. "Aphrodite," already promised for two seasons; the opera is by Camille Erlanger. "Le Vieil Aigle" ("The Old Eagle"), given two seasons ago in Chicago, will be sung in New York for the first time; the composer is Raoul Gunsbourg, a Roumanian and director of the Monte Carlo Opera. "Cleopatre," given three seasons ago in Chicago, will also be one of New York's premieres; the opera is by Jules Massenet.

Italian Premieres

"Le Maschere," by Mascagni, the first American presentation. "Don Carlos," by Verdi, in French.

French Revivals

"La Navaraise" (Massenet), "Samson and Delilah" (Saint-Saens), "The Tales of Hoffman" (Offenbach), "La Juive" (L. Halevy) to be sung in Italian, "L'Africaine" (Meyerbeer) in Italian, and "Hamlet" (Ambroise Thomas )in Italian.

Italian Revivals

"William Tell" (Rossini) in French, "Falstaff" and "Othello" (Verdi), "Fedora" (Giordano), "Norma" (Bellini), "Linda di Chamonuix" (Donizetti) and "Crispino e la Comare" (brothers Ricci).

Henri Rabaud to Lead Boston Symphony

After a stormy search for a conductor after the presentation of many aspirants and after many rumors, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has finally chosen its conductor, and his selection is a happy one. It is time to purify the country from Teutonic influences. To suppress the importation of German conductors is desirable after the war.

Henri Rabaud is one of the leading conductors of the Paris Grand Opera and is not unknown in America. Last year the Metropolitan Opera presented his work "Marouf," which had more than a passing success. It will be revived this season and perhaps with the composer at the baton, if he can be released temporarily from the Hub organization. Pierre Monteux will substitute for him until his arrival in November.

The Opera Comique of Paris gave a series of operatic performances at Biarritz, beginning August 20, on which evening "Werther" (Massenet) was given, with Leon Beyle in the name part, Mlle. ### THEATERS

"Watch Your Neighbor" at the Booth

Oliver Morosco presents this military comedy of love, thrills and laughter opposite his own theater, where "Walk-Off" is running smoothly, but the Booth presentation is more entertaining and deals with war actualities, mainly the propaganda of the Huns—the propaganda of murder, slaughter and tyranny—under the false flag of socialism. Leon Gordon and Le Roy Clemens are the authors. The play is not a masterpiece—far from such. It is more suitable for a screen story, where anything and everything seems possible, or for the stage. It is merely an incident of an Englishman on the trail of the criminal Huns, who gather in Switzerland to spoil the morale of the Latins by a peace chain, followed by a military disaster. Naturally they are foiled. The stage doesn't need to tell us. The Englishman in reality is far more clever than the Hun, though the latter always boasts of superiority. Leon Gordon, the author, gives us an excellent picture of the cockney and the secret service man who is always cracking his jokes with good effect. A note of praise for Stanley Harrison, the loyal assistant to the Captain of the S. S. The whole play is amusing, but it contains its dramatic side to arouse just enmity for the Huns.

"Someone in the House" at the Knickerbocker

I am quite certain that the authors of this melodramatic comedy are aware of the existence of a play called "Arsene Lupin," but whether they constructed their play on the knowledge of "Arsene Lupin" or whether they know of many other plays conceived on similar lines, this play is at least cleverly drawn. The plot is: Jimmy Burke has Deacon imitate a necklace after an original one, exhibited somewhere. He gets into the house of the possessor, and his aim is to steal it. Percival Glendenning is an author with a play written on the same lines, and rehearses with his guests. Jimmy Burke, like Canio, acts seriously and steals the necklace, but before getting away he fools himself by presenting the original to Molly Brant, the owner, whom he courted for the purpose. There are other incidents not easily explained in a limited space. There is good humor in it, amusing scenes and the absence of vulgarity. The authors, not less than a trio—Larry Evans, Percival Walter and George S. Kaufmann—have imbued the play with "pep," and—what is remarkable—each and every one of the cast has a lively phrase to utter. In my recent journeys through the theaters this one is the best, in my humble opinion. It should remain on the boards and it should meet with success on the road.

"Keep Her Smiling" at the Astor

We do not lack comedians and comediennes, and it is true also that we have authors in abundance; in fact, an excessive number of mediocre ones. But where is the inspiration of the writer of farces and comedies who could afford the opportunity to men like Sidney Drew—opportunity of acting? The gamut of this comedy, founded on Edgar Franklin's stories in the Saturday Evening Post and adapted for the stage by John Hunter Booth, runs on a simple line: spend extravagantly, bluff the world and ruin yourself. But on the stage the hero without a penny wakes up in the morning to find himself the treasurer of a corporation. This is fiction. As for the stage or the theater, it is a play which will be buried as many of the novels of our five and ten cent series. We welcome Sidney Drew to the stage—back from the screen—and if not for him the play would evaporate in thin air. Perhaps the Sidney of today lacks a bit of the vigor for comedy. There is a reason—the loss of his son in the war—but Drew is Drew, and in this comedy he is as brilliant as he ever was. Mrs. Drew is not suited to the role of an extravagant woman. Still she has charm, and her voice is as fresh as an eighteen-year-old girl. Perhaps another comedy would have made her more conspicuous. The producer of the play is Richard Walton Tully.

OTTO MIESSNER IN A NEW ROLE

The Jackson Piano Company is sending out a very handsome catalogue, the purpose of which is to introduce the Miessner piano, which is the invention of W. Otto Miessner, the well-known composer and pedagogue of Chicago and Milwaukee.

The characteristic of this piano is its diminutive size, and because of this it is called "the little piano with the big tone."

In the booklet which details its virtues there are shown many pictures of it in actual use, and among these are three in which Mr. Miessner is depicted. In one of them he is seated at the gem instrument teaching a normal class; in the second he is giving a vocal lesson (solo), and in the third he is using it to accompany the work of a piano pupil who is seated at a normal sized grand.

FORM

(A paper read before her Normal Class by by Anna M. Tomlinson)

As a knowledge of any branch of human endeavor tends to increase our interest and pleasure in life, so an understanding of the basic principles of musical composition will aid the music-lover, even one without technical knowledge of the subject, to a larger and more thorough enjoyment of music.

It is conceded that to simply hear good music is one of the greatest pleasures, and how much more intense must be the enjoyment when you understand in detail the composition to which you are listening. To the pleasure of sense is added the pleasure of intellect.

There is no branch of music whose study is more interesting than form, nor is there any that gives such great returns in proportion to the time spent upon it; it stimulates observation and develops a keen insight. Also, with the understanding of form comes a grasp of the composer's intentions that cannot be gained in any other way. All art is subject to laws of the past. Now and then a genius arises whose works are apparently beyond all laws, and we say he is a law unto himself; but close scrutiny shows his products to be grounded upon basic principles.

Goethe said: "It is genius, natural talent, that is first to understand the laws of art forms and pays them readiest obedience." A composer would no more undertake to write a composition without a plan or design than an architect would undertake to build a building without a definite plan. He would probably change many details and add figures, but they would all conform to the general plan. This plan or design in music is called Form.

Music is either purely instrumental, purely vocal, or mixed. Instrumental is the most free, as it does not consider the voice limitations or have to adapt the music to the words. Every one is attracted by order, so order, or form, is the prime requisite of good music. The tones themselves are unsubstantial and transient; the pleasant sound appeals to the senses, but it is the composer's adherence to a definite form that gives stability and thus appeals through the intellect to the emotions.

Form does not mean monotony; its first requirements are unity and variety. Unity is apparent in the holding together of the entire composition; variety in the various details, as differences in key, tempo and structure of the passages. The first forms in music are beats, measures, rhythm and melody. The listener learns beats and measures through their accents, and these combine into rhythm. The melody is the divine part. Rules for harmony and form may be learned and followed absolutely and yet not result in inspired composition. But the musician born with a song in his heart and having learned the rules of his art can put his inspiration into permanent form, and the more correct the form the more lasting will be the appeal to others.

The motive is the smallest musical unit, but is the musical idea or thought, and from it develops the entire structure or composition. This is not the German "motif," which is used to signify various persons or emotions, as the Siegfried motif, etc., in Wagnerian operas.

Next in building up are the phrases, which are really an extension of the musical idea usually of four measures. Phrases are generally of two forms: simple, which consists of but one rhythm, and composite, consisting of two or more rhythms. It may begin on an accented or unaccented beat and usually ends with a cadence. Then as phrases in language are combined to make sentences, so phrases in music are combined into sentences or periods. The simplest of all musical forms is the two-part form used by solo and chorus, male and female voices, as shown in the Psalms of David. It is a repetition of periods or a union of them into a theme and counter-theme.

Many classical forms of music today found their origin in dance music. The dignified walking dances of the nobles and the merry wild dances of the peasantry afforded a contrast necessary for good musical form. As a result we have idealized dance forms by Mozart, Haydn, Schubert and others. The Allemande is a dance of German origin following a prelude. This was followed by the Courante, an old French figure dance which has chiefly running passages, as the name implies. Then comes the serious Saraband, of Moorish origin, but quite as popular in France and England as in Spain. It seems to be an unwritten law that a composer must leave the listener in a merry mood, so we have the Gigue, a rollicking, rapid dance. Other dances introduced are the Bouree, Passepied and Minuet, of which the latter is the most important and still holds its place as part of large instrumental works. Haydn first introduced it into the Symphony and Beethoven transformed it into the Scherzo. Another dance in favor with instrumentalists is the Polonaise.

There are two theories regarding the origin of the Polonaise. One is that it was evolved from ancient Christmas Carols as are today sung in Poland, and the other, more generally accepted, that it sprang from an old court dance or promenade. It rhythm is very marked, almost martial, and again so treated as to create a dreamy, melancholy composition. This is true especially of Chopin's Polonaises, in which he pictures the struggles, the court splendor and the triumphs of his country. In truth Chopin gives life and spirit to the old Polonaise form. From Italy we have two well known dances, the Saltarello and the Tarantella. Mendelssohn in his Italian Symphony made use of both. There is a tradition that Tarantella received its name from the tarantula, the huge spider whose bite was supposed to be cured by dancing, but this is fiction, and the name undoubtedly originated from Taranto, a town of southern Italy, where the dance originated. It is true, however, that the dance was used in the supposition that it cured a nervous disorder called tarantism, which was a prevalent epidemic in southern Italy for many years.

The origin of the Waltz is most obscure and has been claimed by many countries. It probably came directly from the peasant dances of different places. Schubert enlarged the Waltz from binary to ternary form, but Weber was the first to idealize it and bring it into absolute musical form in his "Invitation to the Dance." Chopin and Rubinstein followed his idealized form and Viennese writers, Johann Strauss in particular, excelled in writing Waltz music for dancing. Other modern dances are t

Polka and the Gallop, of same form but of different tempo. The best examples of this form are Mendelssohn's Wedding March, from "Midsummer Night's Dream," and Wagner's "Tannhauser." The tempo, of course, depends upon the composition. The funeral marches of Handel, Beethoven and Chopin are very slow.

Following the ternary form is the Rondo, described by the French as being "wrought as a ring with no break in its roundness." The word means a returning or coming around, and all movements are subservient to one principal theme, which is elaborated and reiterated throughout the composition.

The culmination of classical form is found in the Sonata, from the Latin word meaning sound, and in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries meant any instrumental composition as opposed to cantata, vocal composition. As it is now used the name stands for a definite musical composition comprising two or more movements. Most commonly there are three, often five and occasionally even more. It is a direct outgrowth of the form adapted in dance movements of the suites but improved upon by making more definite the subject used, elaborating the divisions, varying the key and making all parts balance more perfectly. At present the Sonata form consists of three principal parts. The first part, called "exposition," determines the character of the whole. Following the "exposition" is the development, called "free fantasia" by the English and the "working-out passage" by the Germans. Both are correct and convey a clear idea of what this second division stands for—development and working out—because the themes of the exposition are usually the basis by which the Sonata is drawn to the third division; free fantasia because the composer is here free to exercise his genius in every way possible of technic, imagination and passion. Like the development of the plot in a play, the themes are here as characters and placed in all possible relationships and entanglements which were not at all suspected when the subject was first introduced. The third movement is a recapitulation, returning to the first theme. When the Sonata is written for orchestra it becomes a Symphony, and was first adapted for orchestration by Haydn.

CO-ORDINATION

By HERBERT WHITNEY TEW

"In proportion as an art or science is lost or forgotten, the very name by which it was called will be misunderstood, misapplied and finally forgotten."—Hartman.

This degradation of terms is illustrated by the oblivion into which bel canto is relegated. There is nothing today which conveys any meaning to this term. The process which produced it is dead—no semblance remains, no trace.

The knowledge of the true law which coordinates the physical embodiment and produces that art or mode which in its expression is bel canto may not be gained by any reasoning logic of the physical senses or the mind of the flesh. It is intangible to them, nor may it be found or indicated by any scientific instrument.

Bel canto was the direct fruit of an experience which was in turn the fruit of consecration. Imponderabilia may not be weighed by the physical senses—material science has no grasp upon law.

The great teachers from Zoroaster, Confucius, Buddha, Plato, Pythagoras, and, greatest of all, the Nazarene Carpenter, down to Padacelsus, Trisusgestus, Emerson, Carlyle, Browning, Mrs. Eddy have made themselves the masters of Nature, through observing her in her own light, and all, like David, reasoned that his knowledge, comprehension of law (the Logos) transcended that of his teachers in that he meditated upon the law itself. All these great teachers covered a scope from ethics and morals to science, but their teachings are intimately connected because truth and beauty are one.

It may be granted perhaps that the modern anatomist knows more of the details of the anatomy of the physical body than the ancients, but the ancients knew more about the attributes and constitution of the force which organizes the physical conception of the body which becomes its visualized or objective form.

The moderns may know more of the larynx and its intrinsic muscles than the ancients, but the ancients knew the deeper law of co-ordination, which in its action governs the larynx and the whole tone producing mechanism, and in consequence expressed an actual art or mode of nature in her broadest conception.

The knowledge of this Law, i. e., the perception of that balance, which is the center of the irradiating Wisdom or Order (the dynamic energy of Life), is the Art, the Logos, the science or mode of all true activity.

The law is so beneficent that all being under its constitution and control exists in a state of freedom, its nature is beyond the ken of materialistic science or perception, its chief attribute is Beneficence or Love, which attribute brought forward as the Federal Head of all graces and powers, constituted Jesus of Nazareth the fullest embodiment of the Immaculate Conception of Light or the essence of Life, a perennial state having no relation to or connection with a materialistic view of phenomena, including time and space.

Hence the teaching of the Seers of Time have produced in the evolution of the ego varying results depending upon the rank assigned to the many attributes of the dynamic energy or Life.

Where Truth has held rank as above all, the art produced has taken on the more scientific modes of expression, but in all cases the advance has been due to the perception of laws deeper than those deduced from visible phenomena; hence all true modes are the direct outcome of a perception and practice of the principles discovered through the minutest scrutiny of Nature's processes. Nature is the sense of the Macrocosm, the highest conception of the Logos partially blinded by a carnal and temporal habitat.

Hence the art of singing cannot be expressed through the study of the mechanism, although a complete understanding of the mechanism results from the knowledge and practice of the principle upon which it operates, a knowledge only acquired through an experience in adapting the principle to the mechanism, which experience can only come as the sequence of a comprehension of the real organizers of existent activities, viz: principles, which require for visible expression a mode or art of manifestations, as principles perceived in a lower plane are not there self-operative.

An understanding of an abstract attribute divested of all materialistic argument and inclination can alone effect entry for a perception of Beauty or Truth or Order, and in this resurrection of the understanding we find that it is the Light seeking its own source.

Hence the Art or mode of Nature in her widest aspect which expresses the wonders of Articulate Wisdom, its majestic rhythms its gorgeous colorings, its vibrant, reverberating tone, cannot be invented by any one—"not little man." No individual man can claim to have invented or discovered a method of singing without exciting the "Homeric laughter of the Gods." The knowledge of the law of co-ordination, a principle or dynamic indefeasible energy put in practice, is the art or mode of vocal emission and this knowledge is the only master, and not only the greatest of these but the only true and infallible guide.

The skeptic, whose mind is crammed with opinions to which it tenaciously clasps, is unconsciously guided by all the agents of credulity and self-complacency. He denies the existence of anything beyond the horizon of his own vision, thus assuming that his horizon encompasses the entire wisdom of the ages.

These reject the testimony of their own senses, and with a credulity equal to their vaunted skepticism accept the wildest and most improbable theories, as an example of which may be cited the comic notion that tone should be placed back of the nose, or anywhere except the only point whence pure tone may emanate.

The materialistic repudiation of principle beyond its own ken constitutes that barren and arid waste known as skepticism. It judges before examination, pre judicum, and in this naked injustice parades its intellectual poverty and thus places an insurmountable barrier before his own initiation into vital and essential truths, and exerts a influence which tends to bar others who chance to fall within its enervating circumscription.

The basic error of the moderns who are addressing vocal art is a theory (based upon the investigations of material science) that the vocal cords change their length and thickness in pitch changes. A moment's reflection should convince any thinking person that a process requiring a constant stretching of these delicate bands must be not only unnatural but a highly deleterious abuse which reason will not tolerate; the premature failure and retirement of singers may be adduced in proof of this. Few pause to consider the meaning of the vulgar idea of the terms natural, to realize that if the vocal instrument is not in its natural position, it is out of position.

The same view extends to the remark one so often hears about singing, "O yes, that is the natural way," failing to perceive that if it is not the natural it must perforce be unnatural, and if unnatural then artificial, a sham, an imitation.

This unnatural mode of distorting the vocal instrument is the modern product which masquerades under the name of Vocal Art. It is that skepticism of the existence of real and absolute powers vested in forces it cannot see, feel nor taste, and an equally credulous acceptance of any and all preposterous theories based upon deductions from false physical hypotheses.

This acceptance of the fallacy of the tightening of the vocal cords in pitch production submerged the true principle—knowing nothing of this principle of the appogiata or breath control of the instrument there seemed no other way to produce tone above the normal speaking compass than to force the instrument in this manner. This brought about the downfall and final extinction of the general knowledge and practice of the one position scale.

This unthinking leap to false conclusions extends its characteristic further and rivets the thousand parasitical errors of detail so firmly in the general as well as individual attitude that it finally evolves that stubborn resistance to the truth which would liberate thought from its bondage and which is working its own destruction and that of its blinded devotees.

"Festina lente" is a lost habit of thought, appogiata is a lost process resultant from the former.

"He that believeth shall not make haste," like all other wise maxims, withers and is trodden under foot in the mad melee for glammon. In feverish haste the cynic, the sophist and the skeptic storm an Olympus contextured in the loom of their own illusions.

This great fallacy as to pitch formation is not only indorsed by otherwise sane thinkers but is practiced by them, and the polypheme menace to art and the individual instrument is openly advocated as legitimate, thus fostering an insidiously diffused master-craft of Appolyon.

Coupled with the impervious exterior is that inexplicable state of mind which refuses to accept the authenticated statements of reputable historians, and imputes a low standard of artistic discrimination to an age evolved sufficiently in ethics to produce Beethoven, Bach, Mozart.

The lead and gold symbolizing the material age of cynicism which has strangled the "divine art" in the Dunciad quatrain is apropos.

"There rose the seed of chaos and night
To blot out order and extinguish light
Of dull and venal a new world to mold,
And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold."

Astraea lingered beyond all the rest and quitted the habitat of man last to sadly take her higher home as the constellary Virgo, so perhaps she may be the first to return and lift the weight of gold and lead from the weary earthworn plodder, that I may recognize that in pity and fairness His own blinded eyes may be opened to see the great wonders of emancipated principles.

Then will the law of co-ordination supplant the baseless theories, the stubborn prejudices, the traditional ogres and hobgoblins of the non-essential, and intelligent with justice emerge and seal forever the ill-omened casket of Pandora.

Hope like Astraea flew last, and so with her one prayer string she plays with the distant sound of "the tinkling cymbal of the unseen image," but she is coming nearer, for she knows that the knowledge of the Law of Vocal Oratory is again brought down, and that the law is not a conflict of mechanism, but that harmonious unity which is the co-ordinating irradiation of Wisdom of Force from the Cosmic Center, the conflux of eternities.

The grotesque of the pregnant disorder of a Holbein would fail to depict the vagaries of the mental grading of the modern instruction, growing out of the fundamental misconception of the underlying law or nature's process in pitch changes.

All modern schools treat upon this fallacy; each teacher builds up his own system or theory upon this unverifiable hypothesis; each thinks his own speculation the only right method.

This has developed not only a polyglot travesty on the Art as a whole but a thing unsupported by standards.

The one standard is the spiritual law of co-ordination working through its visible and outward form—this will unify all thought and remold the divine art into its original expression of the "deep-toned sublime symphony of thanksgiving," when the "morning stars sang together" and "the Sons of God shouted for joy."

The glorious prototype or origin in kind of all externalized co-ordinated action is that wisdom which comprehends itself or Law, and is Law.

It seeks until it finds its source through the mazes of an alien existence.

In one of the recent Oxyrhncus discoveries a pregnant word ascribed because of intrinsic evidence to Jesus of Nazareth reads: "Let him that seeks, seek until he find, finding he will be astonished, astonished he will reign, reigning he will rest."

This is the ineffable logic of the journey back to its kindred, the omnipotent galaxy of Eloim; the forces existent behind myriad universes—the Being of Deity.

WILLIAM GRISWOLD SMITH

William Griswold Smith has been offered and has accepted the post of director of the Euterpean Male Chorus in place of Edward T. Clissold, who has resigned on account of his duties at Camp Grant. Under Mr. Clissold this south side organization has made a great name for itself in its 18 years of service, and is a great factor in the musical life of Morgan Park and Beverly Hills, where the bulk of its members reside. Concerts for our boys at Camp Grant, Great Lakes and other stations have proved great drawing cards during the year past, and the intention is to discontinue these entertainments during the coming season. Mr. Smith, the new director, is well known in Chicago, both for his solo performances and as director of the Armour Institute Glee Club, the Normal Park Baptist prize-winning choir, the Gresham Treble Clef Club, and formerly the South Congregational Choir.

Better Late Than Never

The directors of the Thomas Orchestra finally decided to accept the resignation of Conductor Frederick A. Stock. It took them an unconscionable while to come to this conclusion. Mr. Stock resigned August 17. His letter asking to sever his connection with the orchestra was suppressed, and every effort was made to give the impression that he would be retained in his post.

But as the "zero hour" of opening the symphony season approached, the prospect of having a subject of the kaiser lead the orchestra of the second American city grew less and less inviting; and on October 1—forty-three days after the resignation was written—it was accepted.

It must be admitted that Mr. Stock shows up better in this regard than do those directors who tried to keep him in place against the indignant protests of patriotic citizens and his own better judgment.

The Journal salutes the new conductor, Eric De Lamarter, wishes him well and believes that he will give entire satisfaction. His appointment is a recognition, belated but welcome, of the truth that at a time like this art cannot claim to be exempt from the requirements laid on all other forms of human activity. It should not take long, moreover, to prove that the claim of German musical supremacy is as false as all other claims originating in Berlin.—Chicago Journal.

That Holton Band

This is written for the person who thinks a $50 Liberty Bond more or less isn't of any consequence or that a pair of woolen socks might just as well be left unknitted.

Holton, Kansas, of some 2,000 population, is the home of the Holton Cornet Band. The members of it are "the boys around town." There is the village barber, the printer, the baker, the clerk, and all the young fellows who make up the social element in small communities.

War was declared. The Holton Cornet Band yearned to demonstrate its command of tune in a large way. So the leader wired the headquarters of the marine corps in Washington that the band was at the service of the nation. Conceivably the eyes of the commanding officer popped out just a little on receipt of this tremendous information. But he made a note of it.

An inspector went to Holton and listened to the barber and the baker and the others as they ripped off a march. The band was recruited as a whole and shipped off to Washington.

Well, Chateau Thierry and Belleau Wood aren't so far from Holton that the band couldn't make itself heard back home. For when 6,000 out of 8,000 marines fell in those most memorable of American conflicts the village bandmen dropped their horns and went over the top with stretchers.

And every last one of them has been decorated for bravery.—Chicago Tribune.

Mrs. Frances Eleanore Leonard, pupil of Mrs. Karl B. Stein, is located at Waukegan, Ill., and is meeting with marked success in her teaching of dramatic art. Her splendid class of pupils are the recognized leaders in contests of the W. C. T. U., for which Mrs. Leonard is the official coach.

Weller will be greatly missed, as she has a host of admirers in her chosen field of art. Later in the season she purposes studying repertoire with Yeatman Griffith in New York City.

J. Warren Erb of Pittsburgh, whose success at the Lockport Festival early in September was chronicled by this paper, has just had a most flattering appointment in New York City which will eventually sever his choir, studio, and other musical connections in Pittsburgh and take him to New York permanently. He has just been chosen as conductor of the Christian Science Oratorio Chorus, one of the biggest and most artistic organizations in the city. Mr. Erb's appointment was unanimous, and he has already started the season's rehearsals. Besides the conductorship, he will arrange for studio appointments in New York, and continue there his work as song coach, program builder and conductor. His work last season as artist accompanist attracted the attention of the best artists, and there will be increased demand for his services during the present season. He will return also to Walter Henry Rothwell, for work in score reading, having already been a pupil of Mr. Rothwell's, and elicited from this splendid authority warm praise and much personal interest in his fine equipment.

KANKAKEE, ILL.

Miss Edith Potter Smith gave her fourth organ recital Tuesday evening, Sept. 24, in St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of which she is organist. Miss Smith, a former pupil of Palmer Christian and Eric De Lamarter, and who is now studying with Harrison M. Wild, gave a comprehensive program in which she displayed good technique and excellent interpretative powers. The assistants were Miss Maude Lewis, soprano, of Chicago, and Miss Alberta Burns, violinist, who did splendid work and sustained their reputation for fine concert ability. The local press notices were very flattering in their accounts of the recital. Mr. Christian presented Miss Smith in her first recital, when she was but 18 years old.

GODOWSKY TEACHES

A First Impression—Pianissimo

The following "impression" written by Ethelyn Bannerman Campbell has percolated its way through from Portland, Oregon, where the Godowsky master classes had as successful a session as they did in Los Angeles and San Francisco.

We had come to Portland from the four corners of the earth to the Godowsky master classes. Monday morning found us waiting for His Greatness. A motley crowd. Intensely interested and all uncertain as to the course the teaching might take. Then he came—the Master Musician. First he talked of the principles of his art, the moments lengthened to hours; we were in anoother world of musical understanding. While he talked I knew I was being punished for my indiscriminate use of adjectives. I had nothing left to describe the most interesting musical experience life had offered—absolutely nothing left for crescendo! Life is very annoying!

Godowsky takes a language not his own, our stately mother-tongue, and moulds it with a mastery so complete that in his choice of words and fine discrimination in their use there is never a moment's doubt in the listener's mind as to the idea he is presenting. This quality of clarity and limpidity in his speech is analogous to his playing.

Double miracle!

The Master Pianist!

The Master Technician in words!

When we were mentally prepared for the conflict, we played.

How the Master must suffer! How he makes us suffer! The Renaissance of a new Inferno!

All the sins committed by music lovers since time was seemed to rest and abide with us, through whichever unfortunate victim happened to be at the piano. When rhythm ceased to be, when pianissimo seemed no longer within the realm of the possible, when our shattered nerves were pitched to the breaking point, then the Master says: "I will show you." Relief unspeakable! This is Music. His first touch seemed to spell peace and home and security. Music, disembodied thought, perhaps its innermost sanctuary.

We were exceedingly sorry for ourselves! Why had our wood-chopping failed to capture this magic?

As Godowsky moulds words to express his ideas, so he moulds the melodies rhythmically, marvelously, a tender radiance of tone.

This gift of the gods has found complete expression after the labor and renunciation of a lifetime. Perhaps it is the whole truth about piano playing. The last word.

PUZZLING QUESTIONS REGARDING MUSIC ANSWERED

[Letters addressed to this department will be answered by Mary Bower, B. M., who has made an exhaustive study not only of piano playing but also of music and both the psychology of music and the psychology of teaching.]

Question: Can you tell me where I can find any published statements that music has a therapeutic value? L. M. B.

Answer: The following articles can be found in the reference room on the fourth floor of the Chicago Public Library:

Pathological and Therapeutic Value of Music. Catholic World, Vol. 73, pages 44-53.

Influence of Music on Idiots. Living Age, Vol. 52, page 310.

Music and Medicine. Eclectic Magazine, Vol. 107, page 826.

Influence of Music on Cerebral Circulation. Music, Vol. 11, page 232.

Question: I have been taking voice lessons for over two years and I am not satisfied with the progress I have made. My teacher does not teach breathing. Do you think that would retard my progress? G. C.

Answer: Correct breathing is the foundation of good voice production. You cannot make satisfactory progress without the foundation any more than you can build a substantial house without a foundation.

Question: I am submitting to you a set of textbooks for piano instruction which have cost me much time and money and which have brought me no returns; I am also enclosing a catalogue of a music school of which I am the author and which I have been told brought the school no returns. Will you kindly tell me what you consider stands in the way of success? M. B. R.

Answer: I would judge from your textbooks that you have never had much experience as a teacher. They are theoretical rather than practical and uninteresting to the pupil, and they are also behind the times as to methods of successful teaching.

Concerning the catalogue, which I have not had time to inspect, I will answer in the November "Puzzling Questions Regarding Music Answered."

THE BEST WE CAN DO HERE IS NO MATCH FOR THIS

In an editorial in the Tribune of last Sunday the bravery and devotion of Our Boys in France was commented upon warmly, and in corroboration there were quoted some things recently written by an American surgeon, Dr. Lewis. Here is what he said:

" . . . Ten days ago we were ordered to move. It requires about seventy-five large trucks to move the equipment. We arrived at the site selected for us in a few hours. The site was a wheat field covered with stacked grain. Our men cleared this field and within twenty-four hours after our arrival we were receiving and operating upon the wounded. During the next four and a half days we passed through the hospital approximately 1,800 patients, 750 of whom were operated upon.

" . . . I have been operating twelve hours a day. One day when the work was heavy I operated nineteen hours out of twenty-four. . . . Bouresch, Lucy, Belleau Wood and Chateau Thierry . . . are going to be great places in American history, for the Fifth and Sixth Marines at Bouresch, Lucy and Belleau Wood equaled or even surpassed anything that America has ever done in the way of fighting. They were brought up in camions from their base, dropped off without any rest, and went into the fight against great odds. Some of the orders were given to them as they dropped off the camions. . . ."

We are apt to consider a wounded man a chastened man, cured of his present temper for eagerness, and seeking rather to take solace in his misery and the comfort of his surroundings. The news from No. 5 says not. American soldiers are not being discouraged by bullets. They do not complain nor rend the air with groans. Theirs is the instinctive American thought, "Let me at him again."

MORE ABOUT INTERNING GERMAN MUSIC

The Chronicle of New York, from which we quoted recently an article by Mrs. William Jay on the interning of all German music during the continuance of the war, publishes in its October issue a series of interesting letters which were received in response to a request sent out asking the opinion of various artists, more or less prominent.

The preface to these letters, as printed in the Chronicle, reads as follows:

Subsequent to the publication of Mrs. William Jay's article on interning German music, published in the August edition of the Chronicle, there was compiled the evidence that the musical faculty in the United States was very eager to proclaim its support of the very logical course of banishing all German compositions from programs in the United States. The following excerpts from letters and articles elicited from a variety of sources show most conclusively that the music even of classic German composers must be sacrificed so that American life be purged of all enemy influence. In view of the climax of the struggle of world freedom versus world domination, it is inconceivable that American audiences will permit their minds and souls to be infiltrated by the harmonies made in Germany.

The letters themselves, with their signatures, read as follows:

THE OFFICIAL BAN

As to the interning of German music, as advocated by Mrs. William Jay in the August edition of the Chronicle, I beg to advise you that, in the opinion of this office, the views of Mrs. William Jay cover the exact attitude which should be taken by all who can in the least exert any influence in the direction of interning all German music during the time of the war. The American Federation of Musicians encourages the actions of its local unions in the direction of causing its members to abstain from playing German music, and many local unions have taken the initiative in the matter. In conclusion, will say that in the entire jurisdiction of the American Federation of Musicians throughout the length and breadth of this country and Canada no German strain having any significance whatever in so far as the same may arouse disloyal sentiments is knowingly played by members of the American Federation of Musicians.—Joe N. Weber, President of the American Federation of Musicians, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

BAN GERMAN MUSIC AND ARTISTS

Sure and very much to the point! For the time being all German music and German artists should be interned. Will you please tell me, do you think any English, Italian or French artist would be allowed to sing today in Germany? I personally very much doubt it.

Since war was declared I have never had a German song on any of my programs. I have found hundreds of perfectly good American ones to take their places.—Frances Alda, Prima Donna, Metropolitan Opera House.

LEAVE GERMAN MUSIC TO GERMANS

The old adage, "Love and Art have no frontiers," must be held in abeyance at this time. The mental attitude of the Germans has compelled the rest of the world to modify its views on all that pertains to honor, chivalry and fair play. The world outside of Germany is brought face to face with the ugly fact that the German estimate of the rest of the globe is based on the belief that he himself is a superman; that no one has any rights that he need respect. The war has shown that, from his view, all he does is right and what the rest of the world does is wrong. Argument has no weight against such an attitude—action only counts.

To tell a German that you play German music for art's sake would probably meet his approval, but owing to his peculiar style of reasoning he would add that you also play it because it is the only music fit to play. As you know this is false reasoning, you have but one recourse—leave German music to the Germans.

In this western world of ours it is an undisputed fact that we have not one German tradition; we dress our women as the French suggest; our laws are based on those of the English; our ideas of chivalry are Spanish; our standard of honor is British. If we speak of the greatest writer we speak of Shakespeare; if we wish to link a poet of our own land with that of another we couple a Tennyson with a Longfellow; of a humorist, a Thackeray with a Twain; when we enumerate our States we find some named for the Spanish, some for the French, some for the English, some for the Indian, but not one remotely named for the German. It would seem that the God of Nations had watched over our beauty with a kindly vigil.

At the present time the bluest blood, the brightest brains and the best brawn of our land is in martial array against the German, and our boys in blue and our boys in khaki are rushing into battle and victory to the tunes of our land. Therefore it is the duty of every true American to suppress anything and everything that in any way brings comfort, profit or satisfaction to the Hun. He has forfeited every consideration from a fair-playing world, and the only way to get it through the hide of his vanity, obtuseness and stolidness is to bludgeon him physically, mentally, morally, financially and perpetually.—John Philip Sousa, Composer and Conductor.

I NO LONGER PLAY GERMAN MUSIC

I consider that the way in which the German composers have been exalted in the United States has been nothing but German propaganda. Ninety-nine per cent of the music students in the United States have been forced to study only German composers. In the past nearly every well-known orchestra was conducted by a German who gave an entirely German program. This is all past and done with; but, of course, when the war is won by the Allies there may be German music again, but I am convinced that it will never hold first place in this country.—Giuseppe Creatore.

PRO-GERMANS IN HIGH POSITIONS

During the past seven years, off and on, I have been conducting a campaign in the interests of American music as against domineering German methods, and it galls me to see that an Austrian musician is permitted, in this hour of crisis, to dominate New York's finest orchestra—the Philharmonic.

Dr. Karl Muck has been placed where he belongs; but the job is not yet complete. Only last November Josef Stransky declared publicly: "I am enjoying the hospitality of this country and I live here under the protection of its laws. If I am requested to play 'Star Spangled Banner,' as a conductor why should I not conform?"

But he could find no inspiration in the American national air until he was forced to play it.

Again this Austrian said: "Incidentally let me say, of course, my position is somewhat easier than Dr. Muck's, for the reason that no state of war has been declared between the United States and my country—Austria." But war was declared not long after these utterances, and we find Mr. Stransky taking out American papers, no doubt so that his policy of pro-Germanism and opposition to American music would not be interfered with.

As late as April, 1918, we find Mr. Stransky making this statement: "I readily admit that during the first part of the war my sympathies were with the German people."

Something must be done to depose all pro-Germans from these high positions. May I inquire whether you have discontinued your efforts in this direction?—Edward Schaaf, Composer.

EXCLUDE MUSIC OF ENEMY NATIONS

Ever since the subject has been set forth by Mrs. William Jay and other patriotic persons my spirit of loyalty has absolutely forbidden me to sing in German, and I have entirely eliminated even the works of the old German composers from my repertoire. I consider it the duty of every artist appearing before the American public to exploit the music of the Allies and exclude the music of a nation with whom this country is at war.—Margarete Matzenauer, Contralto.

CONDITIONS IN AMERICA DIFFERENT

By all means eliminate all German music if it will help to win the war. With both sons in the army—one in France, the other still here—I may be relied upon to support any movement that will hasten the day of victory, even at the temporary sacrifice of Beethoven and Brahms and Schubert. But naturally the final decision rests with my board. We must assume that conditions in America are different from those in Europe.—Max Zach, Conductor of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra.

ME UND GOTT

Please permit me to reply to the question of abolishing German music with a story of the great French philosopher, Voltaire, who one day asked a Catholic priest if it was not about time to abolish God and to close all churches. The priest answered: "You may close all the churches in the world, and yet you would not be able to abolish God. But why do you ask me? I am a priest, a believer. Why don't you ask my parishioners whether they are willing to abandon God and close the churches?"

Being in a similar situation, I answer, "Why do you ask me? I am a priest of art, an art-priest, a believer in music, the purest, because most abstract, art. I believe in Bach, Beethoven and Mozart, but I advise you to ask the congregation—in this case the different societies of music; or better, leave the decision of the whole matter to a plebiscite, which you could easily arrange in all musical circles. Then you will know what to do, since the noble, broad-minded American people always have found the right way at the right time.—Artur Bodanzky, Conductor, Metropolitan Opera House.

GERMAN MUSIC IS GERMANY

I am most decidedly against the performance of German music in the United States during the war—not that it can hurt the American, but because of the comfort it will afford the German. The German people in the United States have for years supported their own music and their own artists, their Liederkranzes and Arion Societies and their German opera. All these, united or apart, make one enormous whole—Germany—the fatherland. There is not a German here today whose heart will not feel consolation or whose pride will not be heightened by satisfaction when he listens to the music of his own country, and if it be performed by a compatriot (camouflaged or otherwise) he or she will be a silent messenger of hope—a voice that will reach the anti-American in the crowd of his and his country's enemies.

There is no propaganda so eloquent and insidious, no influence so subtle and persuasive as music, and the Germans realize it—otherwise why should they forbid the people of Alsace-Lorraine the joy of hearing "La Marseillaise"?

It may seem small to the German people that we should banish their native music, but this land of ours, which for years was their field of exploitation—especially for their musical artists—is today the home of many a grief-stricken woman mourning her dead from German bullets and German gases. It is not now the time to give, either carelessly or unconsciously, the least satisfaction to our enemy.—Eleonora De Cisneros, American Contralto.

NO GERMAN MUSIC

Please put me on record as being opposed to the production of German music for the duration of the war.—Carl Hahn, recent Conductor of the New York Mozart Society.

The wide variety of nationalities and occupations (all more or less musical) of the writers of the above letters makes this compilation exceedingly interesting.

Unquestionably many will adopt the policy and the plan of the Chronicle and will use no German music whatever on any programs of the current season.

Better a blundering Freeman
Than an adept Slave

ARTHUR B. ENGLISH

Just as certainly there will be others who will use the German classics in varying quantities.

Music News again reiterates its opinion that those who are strong enough, versatile enough and independent enough to go through a season without any German music whatever will be indorsed and applauded by the general public for their attitude; but we cannot see yet that it is necessary for all artists of whatever nationality to taboo everything of the Old German school.

We have as a nation already repudiated the claims of Germany that she is mistress of the music thought of this country and never again will we be dominated as in the past in our opinions.

Therefore it seems to us that the really logical thing to do this year is to make all our music programs specifically and preponderantly AMERICAN, first of all, and by this means declare over and over again our independence of all foreign influence.

Then, as the second item of our platform, we believe that we should use the music of our Allies freely—French in preponderance, Italian next, with English and Russian well represented, and scattering nationalities given attention in suitable degrees.

Last of all, we should use German (if at all) merely in such proportion as to emphasize its waning importance (this phrase is one we have used before). And it should not be the backbone nor the mainspring of any program given in this country—not alone this year, but from this time henceforth.

In a word, there seems to be two logical courses open to the compilers of all programs:

(1) We can emphasize our Americanism, our contempt for Germany and our appreciation of our Allies by absolutely excluding the music of Germany and thus be out and out 100 per cent anti-German; or

(2) We can prove our sincerity of purpose by making American music absolutely FIRST in our thought and practice, and giving our Allies the next choice of places, reserving for the German music, which has so long held a big place in our scheme, the third and least important place of all.

In other words, proving by the laws of juxtaposition and contrast that it is not nor has it ever been preponderantly better than any other music and that today it is—distinctly, positively and unalterably—on the wane.

IN MEMORY OF THOSE WHO DIED

The following beautiful lines by R. W. Lillard have been set to music as a memorial anthem (mixed voices) by George B. Nevin, and the composition is in press of Oliver Ditson Company, Boston:

Rest ye in peace, ye Flanders dead!
The fight that ye so bravely led
We've taken up, and we will keep
True faith with ye who lie asleep,
With each a cross to mark his head—
In Flanders fields.

Fear not that ye have died for naught!
The torch ye threw us we have caught:
Ten million hands will hold it high,
And Freedom's life shall never die!
We've learned the lesson that ye taught
In Flanders fields.

MANY CONCERTS SUSPENDED

On account of the influenza epidemic, theaters and concert halls all over the United States are being temporarily closed and there is a united effort to stamp out the disease which will result, promptly it is hoped, in betterment of conditions.

The Worcester Festival, referred to in Music News last week as an actuality, was, perforce, abandoned, after one postponement and a fresh order prohibiting it.

The three weeks' road tour of the Chicago Grand Opera Company has been greatly curtailed.

At the moment of going to press we have not received definite notices of cancellation of other events and, doubtless, some which are announced in this issue of Music News will not be given.

The notices of this week, both in this paper and others, must therefore be regarded as a record of what was planned rather than of what was actually presented.

CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The first concert of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, with Eric De Lamarter as conductor, has passed into history, and not only were there no attendant cataclysms but it is also true that he emerged from the ordeal with flying colors.

On last Saturday evening, when this writer heard the concert, there was the usual style and finish so long evident in the work of the players and there was perfect poise and absolute control on the part of the conductor.

In a word, everything went just the same as though Mr. Stock himself had been present, and all those disagreeable prognostications of the various people who "doubted" Mr. De Lamarter's ability to cope with the situation went by the board.

In fact, to us it seems that the one fault with the concert was that Mr. De Lamarter was so nearly exactly a replica of Mr. Stock in all that he did and accomplished.

Not that Mr. Stock is a bad model by any means, but each new conductor needs must present a personally characteristic front if he would attract unusual attention, and so far Mr. DeLamarter has been content to be a copy of Mr. Stock.

We will look for more individuality later when the makeup of programs falls to him, and with entire familiarity with his position it is entirely reasonable to suppose that he will become individualistic, not to say iconoclastic in his mode and action.

Meantime, while there is all the Stock suavity both of manner and result, there was, in real truth, on Saturday evening, an occasional breadth and a touch of dramatic power which were foreign to the older conductor and which gave promise that Mr. De Lamarter has it in him to put the colors on with a still more generous sweep of the brush when he has gained that confidence which a few appearances will give him.

The body of tone of the orchestra has suffered not the slightest deterioration because of the recent changes, and in musicianship, style and finish the work was remarkable for a first-of-the-season program.

It was not the most exciting program ever given by the orchestra, and yet the Franck Symphony, which was the keynote, is a splendid work, and it was delivered in like manner.

Franck was considered extremely ultra in this work even so short a time ago as 1899, but today it sounds musical and even sufficiently formal, although in the latter respect it does transgress the earlier accepted traditions of the symphony.

The Tschaikowsky "Overture Fantasia" is a brilliant work for the most part and quite all right to listen to unless the auditor is striving too religiously to make it fit the printed program.

A very good plan for this (and, in fact, most "program music") is to listen to the music first, absorb its message as pure music, and then afterward, if one must, read the "story" and try to make the music fit into it.

The Berlioz overture to "Benevenuto Cellini" is a good opening number and passed along agreeably on Saturday night, while "The Sirens" (Gliere), while again difficult to fit to its printed "story," proved to be exquisite music when regarded merely as a clever tonal study with a rather nondescript clash of sound at the end.

To this writer, and to most of the audience, we believe, the Herbert "Irish Rhapsody" was by far the most entertaining number of the program, and, in reality, the best music, excepting only the symphony.

This piece is a gay romp. It is almost rowdy at times and commonplace in directness of melody and definiteness of rhythm to the extreme limit.

However, the populace, even that part which sits at Orchestra Hall on Saturday nights, does certainly and emphatically like to hear familiar melody and stirring rhythm. And besdes, Herbert in this piece has proven himself a past master of contrast in that he has most deftly interspersed the gaiety with considerable of sentimentality and just a little sadness, altogether making a piece which is fascinating from start to finish and which the orchestra, under the sympathetic and alert baton of Mr. De Lamarter, made a glowing as well as a strictly human picture.

The program for the present week is as follows:

The Star Spangled Banner
Rondo Infinito, Opus 42.....Sinding
Symphony in E flat, Opus 13.....Enesco
Assez vif et rythme
Lent
Vif et vigoureux
Norwegian Rhapsody.....Lalo
Suite—Roccoco.....Saar
Etude for Strings.....Sinigaglia
Scherzo—L'Apprenti Sorcier.....Dukas

The first soloist of the season will be Mischa Levitzki, who on October 25 and 26 will play the C minor Concerto of Beethoven with the orchestra, the symphony of the same dates being the great E minor opus of Tschaikowsky.

AT THE WHITNEY TEW STUDIOS

On last Monday evening another of the Tew musicales again disclosed excellent work on the part of the pupils and great enthusiasm on that of the audience—a typical and intensely interested portion of the Tew clientele.

Few are the functions at any time or in any place where there is prevalent such a fine spirit of comradeship or such keen appreciation of effort. Every one at a Tew musicale knows that the pupils are sincere in their efforts and that they are working faithfully to exemplify the special propositions and deductions of their teacher, and those who attend month after month expect always in individual pupils to see constant development and growth. And never are they disappointed, for with the careful fostering of Mr. Tew each voice under his direction grows steadily. And not alone is tone improved and added to day by day, but also the questions of execution and interpretation of repertoire receive the greatest of care, and in style and effect the work is definitely and persistently progressive.

In this latter aspect Mr. Tew is greatly aided by Miss Harriet Cartwright, who again and again shows herself a most deft and intelligent accompanist and who also on occasion displays the fact that she has brilliant technic and fine interpretative feeling in the piano solos with which the song programs are sometimes preluded.

In the appended program it was noted that those pupils whose work has been referred to before in these columns again and emphatically showed the finest sort of talent and (in every case) an earnestness of purpose which will certainly eventually bring each of them to a high plane of artistry and which has already (equally in every case) brought definite and very pleasurable results.

Miss Pauline Bernstein, who has a really remarkable volume and quality of voice, was thoroughly satisfactory in both her readings, this writer liking particularly the rich quality of her lower tones in the Goring Thomas number.

Mrs. Thorelius has a very nice style of interpretation and a voice well under that control which makes possible fine expression, the same being true of Mme. Melius, and, in budding degree, in Miss Bergstrom.

Mrs. John A. Alcott again showed glowing personality and voice, and Mr. Alcott showed that his work is reaching that stage where it is both definite and brilliant. His reading of the Valerie White "Marching Along" is a particularly good one.

Mlle. D'Oex showed in the Berlioz number remarkable insight into the vocal difficulties involved and a very nice sense of interpretative feeling, while in several other coloratura arias (from various operas) she again disclosed technical brilliance and fine feeling for the musical values involved.

The program in full was as follows:

Pianoforte solos—
Two Larks ..... Leschetizky
First Love Waltz ..... Liszt
Miss Lucy Levy
Tell Me, My Heart ..... Sir Henry Bishop
Miss Bergstrom (first appearance)
Lullaby ..... Kreisler
Mrs. Thorelius
The Lord Is My Light ..... Allitsen
O, That We Two Were Maying ..... Nevin
Mme. Coltran-Melius
A Summer Night (contralto) ..... Goring Thomas
My Heart at Thy Dear Voice (soprano) ..... Saint-Saens
Miss Pauline Bernstein
Recitative and aria—The Trumpet Shall Sound (Messiah) ..... Handel
To Myra ..... Clutsonn
John A. Alcott
Aria—Damnation of Faust ..... Berlioz
Mlle. Roxane D'Oex
Lament of Isis (contralto) ..... Bantock
Ave Maria (soprano) ..... Bach-Gounod
Mrs. John A. Alcott

A number of encores were sung and several repetitions given by request.

Examples of scales covering three and one-half octaves were given, in which pupils in one breath made rising intervals, the last being three octaves, which was sustained.

Miss Harriet C. Cartwright and Miss Lucy Levy were at the piano. C. E. W.

HAROLD HENRY IS NOW A PRIVATE IN THE ARMY

Harold Henry, the pianist, who has been trying for several months to get into some branch of the service—he had arranged to enter the navy the day that enlisting closed—decided that if he would see active service at all, as he felt every American of serving age should, he must enter a training camp at once. For that reason he has canceled the fifty odd engagements that had been booked for him, and upon his own request has been inducted into the army. He hopes at the close of his three months' intensive training to win a commission.

MUSIC AT THE NEW ENGLAND CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Much good music has been heard by this writer at the New England Congregational Church.

A fine, if somewhat eccentric (from the churchly standpoint), organist of twenty years ago at this church was the late W. C. E. Seeboeck, and a later one was our new orchestra conductor, Eric De Lamarter, who in reality had his introduction to the musical public of Chicago as organist of this church.

For the past several years the "man on the bench" there was Hugo Goodwin, who at the New England organ completed his remarkable task of giving a series of organ recitals in which he played 1,000 compositions with no repetitions, and, better still, he played nearly every one of them exceedingly well.

The present organist is Irene Belden Zaring, one who has had a lot of experience in other churches and who everywhere has proved herself an intelligent as well as a thoroughly fine technical organist and choir director.

Few women in Chicago at present (or who have lived here in the past) have played the organ so well as does this woman of slight physique, who nevertheless has indomitable will and perseverance, coupled with excellent musical propensities.

Wherever Mrs. Zaring is heard it is to be noted that there are no slipshod moments in her programs and always she plays for her "In-Voluntairies" and "Out-Voluntairies," works of splendid import, and, just as invariably, she plays them well

On last Sunday morning she made Stebbins' "In Summer" to glow with a clear though soft radiance, and at the close made brilliant work of Kinder's "Exultemus."

The organ at this church is not one of infinite variety and lacks some of those brilliant and distinctive stops which characterize the newer organs of the community. But it has in compensation an equipment of those most desirable and resonant diapasons, the "old fashioned" kind, which our Elderly Person has said recently are "no longer built," and the tone of the organ throughout is fine, firm and of musical quality.

These attributes make the organ especially fine for hymn playing, and Mrs. Zaring, on Sunday, made "Old Hundred" and "America" to glow with unwonted power and style, while in a newer hymn tone she held to such authority of swing and rhythm as to encourage the congregation to do its best.

The Lord's prayer was used in cantillation form instead of the usual chant, and it was amply effective, while all the shorter service numbers, preludes, interludes, etc., were skillfully planned and manipulated by Mrs. Zaring and her efficient quartet.

The personnel of this ensemble is Mina Taylor Bonney, Annabelle McIntyre Dickey, Harlan Haines and Guy C. Latchaw, the latter an instructor at the Moody Bible Institute School of Music, and Mrs. Dickey being a well known concert artist, while all four are experienced and resourceful church singers.

The first set number for the quartet was the brilliant Benedictus in E flat by Dudley Buck, that master of writing for singers and past master in his knowledge of what is effective in church.

In this number Mr. Latchaw had opportunity in a fine solo to show the excellent qualities of his voice and his musicianship, and Mrs. Bonney at the close delivered a top note which was thrilling, the concerted singing of all the members of the quartet being also fine and exhilarating.

The other big number was the Shelley "Give Peace, O God, Again," which this writer must confess he does not care for, excepting the opening section, which is written in the form of a long and elaborate solo for the alto voice.

In this Mrs. Dickey showed some extraordinary low tones, rich, full, resonant and beautiful, and she maintained throughout the length of the number evenness of scale and constant and consistent charm of quality. A fine singer is Mrs. Dickey and perfect mistress of the art of public expression.

ORA PADGET LANGER CONCERT COMPANY AT WOMAN'S CLUB OF AUSTIN

Now is the time of all times when the Woman's Club has a right to its existence, for never before in the lives of most of us has there been such need of good wholesome entertainment and diversion for the wives, mothers, sisters and sweethearts who are fighting bravely the battles at home, and waiting for their loved ones who are on the battle fields, in the air, or in some distant training camps.

How little we know (and perhaps it is better that we do not) just how soon our lives may be changed, and if we have done our mite to cheer or make happier the lot of some one else, we have the blessed assurance that we have done our best, and I believe that such is the feeling in the majority of clubs today. There seems to be a greater unanimity of purpose than ever before. Such was the feeling we had when listening to the splendid address of the president, Mrs. A. H. Clement, for "It is woman's work," she said, "to alleviate suffering at home as well as abroad, and by organization and system this work is carried on."

And right now we need musicians as never before—when music should come into its own as the cleanest and best sort of entertainment, and not only does it entertain, but it serves as a solace and healer to thousands of broken hearts.

The government also has asked us not to give up music—when thousands of our musicians are giving so freely of their services, and not only should it take its place as the purest and best of all the arts and professions, but it should receive its just compensation from a financial viewpoint.

The musical program of the afternoon was given by the Ora Padget Langer Concert Company, composed of Ora Padget Langer, contralto; Jessie De Vore, violinist, with Mrs. Charles Orchard at the piano, and Clara Campbell Moffett, harpist. Each soloist appeared twice on the program and as many times in encores.

Mrs. Langer's songs consisted of the following: "Morning Hymn," Henschel; "Evening Song," Gilberte; "At Morning," Jeanne Boyd; "Eros," Kursteiner; "Rondel of Spring," Bibb; "Unto Thy Heart," Allitsen; "Spring Song," Weil, the last two being sung with violin obligato.

Mrs. Langer's voice is rich and resonant and is also of a very wide range. She was in the prime of condition and once more added to the long list of successes which is credited to her.

The writer's bosom had occasion to swell with pride when a number of persons in her vicinity, and on several occasions since, likened the singer to the writer (or vice versa), both vocally and physically, for which the writer acknowledges thanks, not knowing she had so complete and so charming a double.

Mrs. De Vore played "Conzonnetta," Ambrosia; "Gypsy Dances," Nachez; "An Old Love Tale" and "A Memory," Branscombe. and "Perpetual Motion," Bohm. Mrs. De Vore has abundant technic and she played with dash and skill and much refinement.

Mrs. Charles Orchard, the accompanist of the afternoon, provided substantial and artistic support.

Clara Campbell Moffett, the harpist, played for her numbers, "Chanson Sans Paroles," Dubez; "Sweet Remembrance" Hahn; "A Reverie," Mrs. Barber; "Harp Eolienne," Godefroid, and "Irish Ballads." She has a good technic, a pleasing personality and much grace of manner, which is absolutely essential in a harpist.

The new quarters in the High School Auditorium are not only commodious, but beautiful and artistic; a decided improvement on any meeting place ever occupied by the Woman's Club.

E. C. H.

Nothing for Nothing

Here follows an extract from a letter just received by Music News:

"Before closing, I wish to tell you of an experience which might come very well under the head of your splendid article, 'Nothing for Nothing.'

"Last Easter day, I was called upon to prepare for a funeral at about two hours' notice. You may know that to get into touch with some fifty odd people and conduct a rehearsal in two hours is moving at a fair rate of speed.

"I felt at the time that nothing need be said about the financial end of the matter, as the deceased was a near relative of one of my chairmen. As a matter of fact, nothing was ever said about the choir to this day, not even a note of appreciation, which could have been read at a rehearsal.

"Several weeks afterward I was again called upon to play a funeral for an old colored churchman. His widow insisted on knowing how much my services would be and as affairs stood with this family, I knew they could hardly afford the old man a decent burial, without music. So I left matters alone and said 'nothing.' A few days later I had a note from her and $10. I called on the widow personally and returned her $10, telling her I couldn't think of accepting this money when she needed it so badly, and what do you think she did? She agreed to take it back under the condition that she could deposit it with the parish treasurer, to be used when some poor family was in need of funds for music of a similar nature.

"The world surely is a funny place, and the people in it. The first party seemed to expect that the choir and organist of a church were the public's servants; the lady, a poor humble negro washerwoman felt and appreciated the services which were rendered.

"Funerals, however, differ from concert engagements, etc., but the above experience shows a fair example of how the church musician is imposed upon many times during the year. GEORGE W. BARNES.

EDISON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Edison Symphony Orchestra gave the first concert of the season at Orchestra Hall on Thursday evening, October 10. The event was one of strong patriotic significance, in view of the fact that thirty-eight of the ordinary membership of the Orchestra are in the service, and though the remaining body played very well, it would be untrue to say that the absentees were not missed. The program opened with a rousing march, "Lights Out" (McCoy), followed by Schutt's "A la Bieu-Aimee," too perfunctory as to rhythmic interpretation. Three African dances by Ring were done in the proper lugubrious manner and the first section of the program was well rounded out by Rossini's overture "Semiramide."

The Swedish Coronation March (Svendsen) was splendidly given, as was also Sinding's "Rustle of Spring." Miss Barbara Wait, the soloist of the evening, sang Verdi's "O Don Fatale." Miss Wait's tone is clearer and freer than that of most contraltos while lacking none of the richness—she possesses remarkable range with the same pleasing quality throughout. Her rendition of "When the Boys Come Home" in encore was thoroughly impressive and brought down a shower of sincere applause.

The Edison Orchestra is to be congratulated, not only upon its fortunate choice of a soloist, but upon its own good merits.

BERNICE RUGGLES

Miss E. Bernice Ruggles, teacher of piano and voice at the Cosmopolitan School of Music, has taught piano since 1905 and voice since 1913. She received the post-graduate degree of B. M. at the Cosmopolitan School of Music in 1917, having received her piano training with Henry Purmort Eames and vocal work with Dr. Carver Williams. Miss Ruggles has appeared in concert in several Wisconsin towns, in Joliet, Ill.; Lockport, N. Y., and Chicago. She has held the position of soloist and choir director at the Richard Street M. E. Church of Joliet (1916-17), and of the Joliet First Baptist church since January, 1918.

Besides this she has appeared in churches in Wilmette, Roseland, South Chicago and the South Park Congregational church. She has also assisted in programs given at the Kenwood Club of Chicago, Joliet State Penitentiary, Joliet Orpheum Theatre and various other places. Miss Ruggles' experience as soloist and accompanist has been rich and varied and will no doubt lead to a successful career as time goes on

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY

On Tuesday evening, October 1, Miss Electa Austin, pianist, and Mrs. Clare Livingston Hansel, contralto, both of the faculty of the Northwestern University School of Music, appeared in recital at Music Hall.

For a program not pretending to large proportions it was as perfect in all its details as this writer has ever heard. Following are the numbers:

Bourree, A minor ..... Bach
Elegie ..... Rameau-Godowsky
Tambourin ..... Rameau-Godowsky
Si mes vers avaient des ailes (Victor Hugo) ..... Hahn
Le desir ..... Sibella
Le Miroir (Haraucourt) ..... Ferrari
Seguedille (Carmen) ..... Bizet
Garden in the Rain ..... Debussy
Golliwogs Cake Walk ..... Debussy
Dance of Puck ..... Debussy
The Dove (Folk Song of Tuscany) ..... Arr. by Schindler
The Song of India (from the legend Sadko) ..... Rimsky-Korsakow
The Song of the Shepherd Lehl (Snegourotchka) ..... Rimsky-Korsakow
Polonaise Americaine ..... Carpenter
Impromptu ..... Carpenter
At the Spring ..... Liszt
The Sailor's Wife (Mary Stewart Cutting) ..... Burleigh
The Dairy Maids (Conde) ..... La Forge
Rain (Negro Folk Song) ..... Turner
The Home Road ..... Carpenter

Miss Austin possesses a most delicate, refined technic, the very essence of careful study and fineness of musicianship. Yet with all its purity, no one can say that her playing lacks strength or mastery.

Mrs. Hansel's voice, while not of the showy type, is beautifully even and sympathetic and she is a master interpreter. Whether it is in such dramatic songs as "The Sailor's Wife" (Burleigh) or Hazzard's "Li'l Boy," sung as an encore, she is one and the same, a supremely artistic singer. With Grant Schaefer at the piano the program was rendered almost flawless.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

CHICAGO CHAMBER MUSIC TRIO

The fourth of a series of concerts given by the Chicago Chamber Music Trio showed a marked improvement over the first in the fulfillment of the prediction that with routine this body of artists would continue to mount in public favor. In the first place, the seating of the group, which now throws the vibrations lengthwise of the hall, is much more favorable acoustically, and, secondly, the program was better chosen and not too long to be enjoyed fully to the end. Evidence was again given of Mr. Morley's originality in composition by the rendition of his "Spring Idylle." Not only did it contain imagination, but the two distinct themes were very skillfully and effectively interwoven to the liquid piano accompaniment. This number, together with the Scherzo from the Godard Second Trio and the Andante from the Saint-Saens Trio in F, made a delightful episode, as it were, in the "round" of the program, the first number consisting of the entire Mozart Trio, Opus 16, G major, and the last of the Arensky trio in D minor. The Mozart number was delicately rendered and the Arensky, though the ensemble was not always perfect, was done with smoothness and wealth of tone on the part of all the artists.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Pierson—Lela Lowe-Pierson, violinist, was soloist at the song service at Warren Avenue Congregational Church last Sunday evening.

DOELLING AND JOHNSON AT THE AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

On Saturday, October 12, Miss Mae Doelling, pianist, and Miss Jennie F. W. Johnson, contralto, appeared in a recital at Kimball Hall, under the auspices of the American Conservatory. They gave the following program:

Concert Allegro ..... Scarlatti-Godowsky
The Three Hands ..... Rameau-MacDowell
Symphonic Etudes ..... Schumann

Miss Doelling

Ah, Rendimi ..... Rossi
Victorious ..... Carissimi

Miss Johnson

Etude, C sharp minor ..... Chopin
Ballade, G minor ..... Chopin

Miss Doelling

The Sea ..... MacDowell
Solvejg's Cradle Song ..... Grieg
Monte Pincio ..... Grieg

Miss Johnson

Winter ..... MacDowell
March Wind ..... MacDowell
Minuet ..... Schobert-Godowsky
Tambourin ..... Rameau-Godowsky
Gnomenreigen ..... Liszt
La Campanella ..... Paganini-Liszt

Miss Esther Hirschberg at the piano

Both artists are well known and highly regarded in Chicago musical circles. The audience was therefore large and appreciative, which always gives added inspiration to the performers. Miss Doelling's technic is not only pure and faultless, but it is the technic of broad experience and mature judgment. Her playing embodied at all times the most sympathetic appreciation of her subject, coupled with fine discrimination in the treatment of it.

Not lacking in sympathy was Miss Johnson's singing. Her rich, full tone reveals unmistakably great depth of insight and keen understanding of artistic values. It is, indeed, a pleasure to hear two such thoughtful artists, both exponents of the highest type of musical ideals.

Miss Esther Hirschberg at the piano played fittingly well.

DEATH OF JASPER FFRENCH

The sympathy of the entire music profession goes out to Mrs. Florence Ffrench on the death of her youngest son, Jasper, news of which reached Chicago on Tuesday.

Jasper, who was 23, was accidentally killed while in the performance of government duties as aviator instructor at West Point, Miss.

Ringo—Marguerite Ringo, soprano, sang in front of the Public Library in New York City on last Wednesday for a monster meeting in aid of the Liberty Loan. Her numbers were "The Star Spangled Banner" and "The Marseillaise," and she was applauded vigorously by the many thousands of people within sound of her voice.

Sherwood Music School—A program was given at the Sherwood Music School on Thursday evening by Georgia Kober, George Ralf Kurtz and Else Harthan Arendt, members of the faculty. Review will be given next week.

Holmquist—Gustaf Holmquist will be a "Messiah" soloist with the Evanston Musical Club this year.

Emma Ewen—Miss Ewen sang in the First Congregational Church of Champaign, Ill., on October 6.

WESTERN CONSERVATORY NOTES

The attendance thus far this year exceeds that of last year at this time, and the enrollment continues to increase. A goodly number of pupils from out of the city are with us this Fall. Reports from the Branch Studios in all parts of the United States are very encouraging considering general conditions.

A special department for instruction in "Theatre Organ Playing" has been established under the direction of Mr. Charles J. Mendsen. The popularity of this department is readily attested by the large class already taking this work.

The equipment of pianos has been increased this Fall, as it was found necessary to utilize every available space for teaching purposes in order to meet the demands of the larger enrollment in the Piano and Vocal departments.

The "Ensemble Divisions" of eight performers each upon four pianos together, have been organized and assigned their respective compositions for the forthcoming recital. The "ensemble room" is equipped with four pianos for this special purpose.

The Wednesday evening Lecture Class is at present dealing with a series of important subjects of special interest to the Normal students and young teachers generally. As announced in Music News recently, these lectures are open to any who may feel inclined to attend. The hour is six o'clock.

MINNETTE WARREN

Minnette Warren, the very youthful pianist-composer who gave a successful recital in Chicago something over a year ago and who is scheduled for a New York recital this month as well as for an early appearance as soloist with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra in the home town, is certainly a versatile girl, as may be deduced from the varied stories which have been printed about her.

The latest, prepared by and vouched for by one who knows Miss Warren very well, reads as follows:

"Driving across country in her own car, mending tires by the side of the road, cleaning plugs and acting as her own chauffeur, have long been included among Minnette Warren's accomplishments, so she offered them to Uncle Sam in the capacity of ambulance driver in France. The offer could not be accepted because of her youth, but the managers of a motor bus company near her home were less particular.

"Always an ardent recruiter, Miss Warren, who frequently patronized one particular bus, suggested to the driver the government's need of his services and finally told him that in the event of his enlistment she would take his place at the steering wheel. Naturally she had little expectation that she would be called upon to make good, but when the bus driver actually took her at her word and notified her that he had entered the service, accompanying the notification with the astonishing statement that the company wanted her services and he was ready to train her to run his car, she faced the situation squarely. Uncle Sam, however, demanded his new recruit before the lessons could be accomplished. Miss Warren, not wishing to appear a novice to a professional instructor, decided to learn something concerning the operation of a White car on her own account. Under cover of dusk she bribed the greasy employe of a near-by garage to let her try her hand guiding an enormous truck through the perilous highways of her home town. After juggling with brakes, clutch and gear for a brief interval she presented herself before the manager and promptly convinced him that she was able to make her work good. Only a threatened strike among the drivers at the employment of a woman prevented her from accepting the position."

BLANCHE SLOCUM MAKES BRILLIANT IMPRESSION AT RECITAL AT ORCHESTRA HALL

On last Tuesday evening, at Orchestra Hall, there occurred an event which was full of interest to musicians especially, and to the public at large in a much more vital way than is usually the case with such functions—and very especially did it touch Oak Park, for Blanche Slocum, the giver of a song recital on that date, is resident there and is widely known to the public in general through the fact of the extensive writing for the newspapers she has done, and she is very especially known to the music profession through the fact that she is a protege of Mary Garden and has the unqualified recommendation of that famous singer.

All these things combined to create such enthusiasm that Orchestra Hall, great as it is, was none too large for the Slocum audience, and not only were there numbers to greet the young singer, but also quality.

Not to dwell particularly on the society contingent from Oak Park, it may be said further that few local singers have ever faced a more representative professional audience in Chicago.

All this tended to make the occasion difficult for Miss Slocum, inasmuch as such an audience must, perforce, contain many who are critically inclined and a good many who are in the mood for hypercritical judgment, as well as those sincere well-wishers of Miss Slocum who came to do honor to her perseverance and achievement and to give her a cheer on her way to the heights.

For, with such a voice as is her possession, the heights are surely her destination.

The program as given by Miss Slocum on Tuesday evening was of great variety and it entailed a range which is almost unbelievable.

This being the case, there are some who will naturally prefer the contralto qualities of the Slocum voice and some who will like her dramatic soprano efforts, while still others will find a chief beauty in the ease with which she manipulates extremely high pianissimo tones. This writer confesses that the latter point is one which pleased him greatly.

The critics of the daily press told Miss Slocum that she should adhere to the contralto range, but this is entirely a matter of opinion.

It must not be forgotten that many good authorities have declared Miss Slocum to be the possessor of a dramatic soprano voice which for such work as the heroines of the Wagner operas is ideal. These roles, it is remembered, are all such as to require very great range, and the contralto quality is as essential as the dramatic soprano. Certainly Miss Slocum has the range which will comfortably cover the most exacting of these roles and until she has been heard in such parts it is rather futile to choose as between the more attractive parts of her voice.

At present, as we all know, Wagner opera is taboo in this country, but one cannot help thinking how magnificent a Brunnhilde would be Miss Slocum, and even the excerpt from "Oberon" (Weber) gave ample proofs of enormous vocal resources on her part, as well as tremendous dramatic spirit.

And, beyond any question, this great aria was one of the extremes of a gamut which proved Miss Slocum to be wonderfully versatile and to be in possession of a range unprecedented.

The other extreme of this range was the lovely song by MacDermid, "The Magic of Your Voice," and this, as is recalled by everyone, was not only written especially for Mme. Galli-Curci but also in such a way as to employ the lighter and more charming graces of this wonder coloratura to perfection.

Now the "Oberon" aria is a task which tries out the full power of a Mme. Schumann-Heink for instance, and when it is remembered that in this concert Miss Slocum gave with conviction, style and splendid vocalization both the Weber aria and the MacDermid song, one is ready to say that this young Chicago-Oak Park girl has a remarkable gift, and also within herself the possibilities of a wonderful career.

Her program, as a whole, was extremely varied and it was entirely unique.

Classic bits by Beethoven, Lotti and Carissimi were given in suave, clear-cut style, while the "Il va Venir" from the Halevy opera "La Juive," proved another and very diverting angle of the Slocum possibilities and potentialities.

The "Star Spangled Banner" and the "Marseillaise" showed Miss Slocum's devotion to the right cause, and her singing of them was eloquent.

The "Scottish Cradle Song" by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach afforded a splendid opportunity for those who think Miss Slocum is specifically contralto to revel in the low tones with which it abounds and which she manipulated very beautifully, the same qualities finding expression also in MacDermid's "Charity," a song of potent charm and unfailing delight.

John Alden Carpenter was also called upon for a "Cradle Song" and also his beautiful "Home Road," a song which is being used extensively in these stirring times and which Miss Slocum delivered with a special spirit and good vocal style.

Altogether, in choice of works, in vocalization and in interpretative feeling, Miss Slocum proved that she had made fine use of her opportunities, and that she is very far along on the road to brilliant success.

She needs the biggest sort of environment to bring out her best style (opera probably), and she will be able to fill the great place when it is offered.

The audience at Orchestra Hall was extremely cordial and enthusiastic and gave many recalls to the singer, and at the close, in spite of her evident determination to add nothing further to the program, persisted in asking for "more" until Miss Slocum finally yielded and presented MacDowell's "Thy Beaming Eyes" in a way to make it one of the finest moments of the evening.

Edgar Nelson was at the piano (a beautiful example of the Baldwin excellence), and in the bigger numbers was broadly dramatic—just as occasion required—and in the lighter ones furnished such excellence of tone and shading as only so supreme an artist could provide. C. E. W.

THE NEWMAN TRAVELTALK

"Wartime France" is E. M. Newman's traveltalk for Wednesday and Friday evenings and Saturday afternoon at Orchestra Hall. To those who know France, the land is worth fighting for. Today the whole world turns to France for inspiration in this war against cruelty and special privilege. In an exclusive group of Mr. Newman's own motion pictures and magnificent color views this thrilling traveltalk takes you to historic Soissons, Rheims, Arras, Verdun, Toul and Chateau Thierry, where Mr. Newman arrived the very day our wonderful Marines charged into the battle and saved the day. You will gain a complete understanding of the work Uncle Sam has done in France, without which the efforts of our troops would count for naught. Cities—one with 300 miles of railroad track—a bakery making a million loaves a day—the building of whole communities. In close range motion pictures you will enjoy intimate glimpses of General Pershing, Field Marshal Foch, Clemenceau, and many more great strategists. Mr. Newman journeyed with the American soldiers from a port of landing to billets back of the lines, then into the front line trenches, where he photographed our boys in action. Lieutenants Rickenbacker, Buford, Winslow, Roosevelt, Hamilton, and most of our fearless aces will appear before you, some of them in actual aerial combat. You will better realize that the degradation and horror of war do not exist for the French. They are but incidents swept aside in the passionate fury of their love for their sacred land. Up to the Mirror of Ages the face of the women of France shall be held as the perfect pattern for all womankind. Devotion, quiet unselfish fearlessness, supreme heroism in the ammunition factory and on the firing line in rescue work, mark their every hour of labor.

MRS. W. S. BRACKEN

On Wednesday evening, October 9, in the commodious rooms of the Cosmopolitan School of Music, a short recital was given by four of Mrs. W. S. Bracken's pupils, the Misses Welch, Tyler, Rohn and Petcina, very successfully.

After this the audience was treated to a recital by Mrs. Bracken and it was a real treat. She was in superb voice and we couldn't help wishing as we sat there that we might hear her oftener in public.

Her program covered a wide range of French, Italian, Russian and English songs and comprised the following: "Cade le Sera," Mililotti; "Death of Jeanne d'Arc," Bernberg; "La Mirror," Ferrari; "La Pluie," Georges; "Hindu Slumber Song," Harriet Ware; "The Bird," Fisk; "Triste est le steppe," Gretchaninof; "What the Chimney Sang," Griswold, and "Chevalier Balle etoile," Holmes.

These were all sung with much beauty of tone, perfect enunciation and splendid interpretation.

Mrs. Bracken is one of the most authoritative of local artists, with beautiful tonal qualities as well as splendid interpretative abilities.

We hope to hear her soon in a more extended recital.

ORCHESTRA HALL DEBUT OCTOBER 8th

"Miss Blanche Slocum gave a Song Recital at Orchestra Hall, Tuesday evening, before an audience of good size and most friendly disposition. Miss Slocum has a voice of great power which is of a genuine sort of whole-souled quality. . . . Miss Slocum is a young woman of great natural gifts of voice . . . there was also a quality of sincerity that will count."
—KARLETON HACKETT IN THE CHICAGO EVENING POST.

"Blanche Slocum made her debut at Orchestra Hall before a large audience that included many of the professional musicians of the city. She had a dignified and ingratiating stage presence. A taxing program showed that a song like Carpenter's 'Home Road,' calling for simple, broad treatment and lying well within the mezzo range, is the sort of thing she can do superbly. In one of the big arias from 'The Jewess' she proved her right to affix the word dramatic to her vocal label. . . . She should rest content to develop the undeniable gifts that are hers by making the most of her big and beautiful voice with mezzo range and quality."
—HENRIETTE WEBER IN THE HERALD-EXAMINER.

"Miss Blanche Slocum faced a very friendly audience at Orchestra Hall last evening, cordial enough to put the singer at her ease from the outset, and her program was delivered with much impressive assurance. The voice is of wide range and great volume. . . . The pianissimo was the means of bringing Miss Slocum her greatest applause. After her aria, 'Il va venir' (Halevy), Miss Slocum was recalled several times and obliged to add an encore."
—HERMAN DEVRIES IN CHICAGO AMERICAN.

"Her program contained, besides the two operatic arias, some American songs. In all her program Miss Slocum disclosed a serious intent, clear diction and a voice of wide range. The lower tones resemble a contralto in quality while the higher register reaches well above the accepted dramatic soprano range. There is considerable power also in the voice. . . . Miss Slocum has a good stage presence and her diction in the various languages is clear and distinct. Several of the American numbers had to be repeated."
—MAURICE ROSENFELD IN DAILY NEWS.

OCTOBER DATES

AUBURN, IND., OCTOBER 2:
"Her singing was excellent and greatly enjoyed by the many music lovers who gathered in the theater. She has a wonderful soprano voice with a great range and her singing was of real merit."—EVENING STAR.

KENDALLVILLE, IND., OCTOBER 3:
"Blanche Slocum fairly captured lovers of music. Added to wonderful voice is personal charm that captivates and pleases her hearers. Miss Blanche Slocum gave a rare musical treat at the Boyer Opera House. She possesses a voice of rare sweetness and range and of splendid flexibility. Perhaps her personality has much to do with the charm of her music. She was repeatedly encored, responding ever with just what the audience seemed to want. Her sister, Nellie Slocum, at the piano, was complete mistress of the instrument and a splendid aid to the singer and her wonderful voice."—KENDALLVILLE NEWS.

BLUFFTON, IND., OCTOBER 4:
"She has a wonderful voice and perfect control. She responded to many hearty encores during the evening."—BLUFFTON EVENING NEWS.

"As Miss Slocum went through her program the audience was soon to become acquainted with the fact that she has a wonderful control of a wonderful voice and that they were listening to something out of the ordinary in the way of singing. Miss Slocum's program was varied from opera on to some beautiful lullabies and it was these that gripped her audience the more. Her 'Cradle Song' (John Alden Carpenter), 'Scottish Cradle Song' (Mrs. Beach), along with 'The Magic of Your Voice' (MacDermid) were wonderfully popular with her audience and the applause throughout was generous."—BLUFFTON EVENING BANNER.

RUBY EVANS AND FRANCES PAPERT AT TUESDAY ART AND TRAVEL CLUB

The program at the opening reception of the Tuesday Art and Travel Club on Tuesday, October 8, at the Sherman House, consisted of a musical given by Ruby Evans, soprano, and Frances Papert, mezzo-contralto.

This is the year for ladies' voices, when so many of our men singers are in the service, and many are taking advantage of it, giving duet and other ensemble programs. The one given by the Misses Evans and Papert was interesting not only on this account but also from an artistic point of view.

The program opened with a group of duets, "The Fugitive," Dvorak; "A Song from the Persian," Foote; "Tuscan Folk Song," Hawley. The voices blend beautifully and these were done with much charm of manner. Continued singing together will make these young singers one of the ensemble institutions of Chicago.

In her solo groups, which consisted of "Voce di Donna," from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli, for first, and "The Bitterness of Love," Dunn; "My Love Is a Muleteer," Francisco di Nogero, and "Oh, No," old English, Miss Papert displayed a lovely quality and well schooled voice, and sang with good style and interpretation.

Miss Evans has a lyric soprano of gorgeous and beautiful quality. She chose for her first group, "In a Garden," Salter; "Fly Little Note," Liddle, and "Prelude," Ronald, and for second, "Musetta Waltz Song," from "La Boheme," Puccini. These were sung with splendid style, and she was well received by the audience, which insisted on an encore, for which she sang "I Want to Be Ready," Burleigh, with a good conception of the text.

The program closed with the duets, "Oh, That We Two Were Maying," Nevin, and "Waltz Song," Hutting; after which they were forced to respond with an encore, when they sang, "In Old Virginia," which was much enjoyed by the audience.

The program was an innovation and seemed to find great favor with the large audience present.

Before the program the president, Mrs. W. D. Hurlbut, gave a very lucid description of the work done by the club, and its charity, which is exclusively for art. After which she presented a large service flag to the club. This was responded to by Mrs. Fleming, a past president, in an eloquent speech in which she not only thanked the president but paid her a very beautiful tribute, adding also that "The Tuesday Art and Travel Club is very discriminating in choosing its presidents." Mrs. Fleming then made an impassioned appeal for the Fourth Liberty loan.

LEON ROTHIER FOR BIG DRIVE

Leon Rothier, the French basso of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing the "Marseillaise" on Friday afternoon, October 18, at 3 o'clock. This meeting will be under the auspices of the New York Central Executives of the New York Central Railroads, to be held at the Concourse of the Grand Central Station. Chauncey Depew will be the speaker.

JOHN M'CORMACK'S FIRST RECITAL OF THE SEASON

John McCormack, who appears in Chicago a half-dozen times each season and always fills the Auditorium to the last seat on the stage, even at such a moment as the climactic week of the Liberty Loan Drive, when every other amusement venture is languishing, came on Sunday afternoon last to his usual local habitat and scored, as always, with the same eager, capacity audience.

He was in the best of condition and his mode, while sedate, was full of charm and sincerity.

His program was chosen with a view, probably, to the introduction of as many novelties as possible, and it achieved its purpose exceedingly well, even the Irish group being made up of comparatively little known selections.

A very noticeable feature of the afternoon was, naturally and logically, the presentation of many patriotic selections, and in this genre McCormack is fine to the last possibility.

"The Star Spangled Banner" was phrased differently from the usual reading, but it was sung with abundant spirit and resounding effect.

The other patriotic items were "The Long, Long Trail," "God Be With Our Boys Tonight" (Branscombe), "When Pershing's Men Go Marching Into Picardy" (Rogers) and "The Americans Come," by Fay Foster.

The last named was unquestionably and emphatically the best of these numbers, and it was so regarded and indorsed by the audience. This song demands positively that the story be told not alone in musical quality of tone but further, and still more insistently, in the fact of positively clear enunciation of text so that the audience may understand each word.

Few indeed are the singers who could tell so dramatic a story and cover such a gamut of feeling in so short a song and back up each phrase of it with such perfect rounding out of the actual words as did John McCormack at this time.

The Rogers piece may probably be better liked on a second hearing, but at present, beyond the fact of a remembrance of clear rhythm and a feeling of mild excitement in the "story," this writer feels no special pleasure in the retrospect of the first hearing.

For his classic number Mr. McCormack chose an aria from "Judith" (Parry) and gave it a comprehensive and definite reading.

In his second group Franck's "La Procession" and "Bantock's "Love's Secret" were examples of exalted mood values well conserved, while "No, Whom I Love" (Tschaikowsky) and "The Star" (Saint-Saens) were examples of graceful, intimate songs well done.

The Irish songs included (all beautifully sung) "The Lark in the Clear Sky," "The Darling," "The Plowman's Whistle" and "The Nobleman's Wedding," and in the American group, besides one already mentioned, there was "Thine Eyes Still Shined" (Schneider), which was much applauded; "Far Awa'" (Mrs. Beach), which is a tender, touching song, very much in the McCormack metier, and "Constancy," a good song by Foote.

Of course there were numerous encores, and, equally of course, the audience insisted upon "Mother Machree" and other long-familiar items of the McCormack repertoire, and in all these the singer proved himself not only amply gracious but always and insistently beautifully musical and intensely human in manner and appeal.

Mr. McCormack had the same accompanist who has played so long for him, and in place of the violinist of the past several years he introduced, in a collection of bijou solos, Winston Wilkinson, a good violinist, who was much liked by the audience.

FLORENCE MACBETH

Miss Macbeth began her season in recital October 8, at Burlington, Iowa, and from there joins the Chicago Opera Company for this tour, and will continue the season 1918-'19 with them in Chicago.

Miss Macbeth has had no summer rest or vacation, giving up her entire time to sing for the soldiers and sailors, recruiting for the British army and navy. Hardly a week has passed that Miss Macbeth has not been called upon two or three times for this great cause.

When an artist thinks it is a privilege to be able to do this bit for the sailors and soldiers, it is one of the highest forms of patriotism. Miss Macbeth has been credited by the British mission with having done more in aiding the recruiting than any other one woman.

WILLIAM BEARD

Another activity which this successful singer and teacher has added to his studio is an association with the R. & B. Production Company. This company is affiliated with Lyceum, Chautauqua and Vaudeville managers and will promote the organization of musical companies. Mr Beard will look after the personnel of these companies and see that talented young artists are properly placed. His years of experience in public work will stand him in good stead in this work and will also be an outlet to his studio for talented students who are ready. He has placed a number of young people in this way when not affiliated with a management, and his selections have invariably made good, so that his judgment is held in high esteem. Mr. Beard has just opened his sixteenth season at his Fine Arts building studio and reports the prospects as very favorable for another good one.

A ROUSING RALLY SONG

"On to Victory" is the title of a new song, just on the market, the words and music of which are both by John Constantin Zouboulakis, who is of Greek extraction but long since an American citizen.

In his poem Mr. Zouboulakis has struck a note of deep patriotism and has expressed his thought in stirring and finished fashion. Few war verses have been so telling.

The music is exactly apropos and contains a vitality as well as a suavity which will carry it far.

It is published both as a solo and in quintette form (soprano, alto, baritone, first bass and second bass), and in either form it will be found an invaluable number at all sorts of rally and patriotic gatherings.

LYCEUM ARTS CONSERVATORY

The Lyceum Arts Conservatory is devoted frankly and unreservedly to the preparation of youth for acceptable public performance.

Not alone—for such an end—must good technic and good musical interpretation be imparted, but also many little points of stage manners, matter and comprehension which are but seldom touched upon in any classroom.

On last Tuesday evening a very enjoyable musical program at this school was preluded with a short address by the director, in which he gave many valuable hints on public appearance, and both the artists appearing supplemented his talk with potent examples, in themselves, of what constitutes good and interesting public performance.

The two were Louise Cozad and Mary R. Fitch, pianist and soprano, and each gave a preliminary talk which was at once exhilarating and enlightening.

Miss Cozad played the D major Toccata of Schumann and twelve of the Chopin Preludes, stating first that the former was one of the most exhaustive of piano forms, treated by Schumann with the maximum of skill, and that in his Preludes Chopin has been said by great critics to have reached an eminence which would entitle him to the rank of immortal even were every other composition of his to be obliterated.

Mrs. Fitch said, preliminary to her group, that comparison should be suspended when listening to any artist, and each one should be allowed to speak his own message, untrammeled by the remembrance of just how anyone else had ever interpreted the same composition. "Listen to the message of the piece," she said, "and forget the manner of presentation as far as possible."

In playing her numbers Miss Cozad again demonstrated that clarity of technic and brilliance of pianistic conception, which, coupled with a real musical feeling, long since demonstrated her a fine player and one whose examples can readily be taken as ideal by the pupils to whom she presented them on last Tuesday.

Mrs. Fitch, definite in tonal values and positive in interpretative thought, presented "Love Is the Wind" (MacFayden), "O Heart of Mine" (Galloway), "The Star" (Rogers) and "Kew, in Lilac Time" (Paul Bliss) with such purity of style and earnestness of reading as to please her hearers greatly. She has attractive voice and excellent musicianship and interpretative ability.

The Galloway piece is one of great musical suavity and that of Bliss (American) is a gay conception, entirely pleasing and effective.

A Philadelphia Forecast

Ordinarily the Philadelphia Orchestra opens its season with a concert unornamented by the personality of any visiting soloist. This year, it seems, that tradition is going to be honored in the breach. Carlo Linten will read in French two poems by Emile Cammaerts while the orchestra plays to them the accompanimental music written by Sir Edward Elgar. "Le Drapeau Belge" tells the character of one of the pieces.

Truly this will be an Allied occasion. First, the most distinctively American orchestra; then the great Belgian tragic actor reciting the words of the great Belgian patriotic verses, and lastly, the music of our British cousin, Elgar.

Some Conventions Lapse

It is an attractive promise, and the orchestra schedule for the whole winter is eminently attractive, as well. Apparently there has been a firm effort made to get away from the precise Philadelphia convention of these annual concerts. Radical new faces will be seen in the soloist place of honor, from time to time (interspersed, of course, with the prime favorites of other years), and probably a good many purely orchestral novelties will come out in the course of the twenty-five programs. It is almost certain that one will hear considerably less German music in the Academy this year than usual.

And speaking of the Academy reminds one to say that the old edifice has been refitted during the summer with the much-discussed new stage setting for the orchestra. Not a little curiosity exists among the faithful and hardened habitues of the building as to what these may turn out to be.

Decorative Background

The West Philadelphia branch of the women's committee is responsible for the idea and the money; a young Dutch artist named Anton Albers, of New York, is responsible for the design, and Conductor Stokowski (in all probability) for the acoustic qualifications. It is also said that Leopold Seyffert has had an advisory part in the general scheme of things; which, of course, will not hurt the setting any in the eyes and ears of most good Philadelphians.

On the whole, therefore, one thing with another, we are looking ahead to October 18 with a definitely pleasant stir of zest. It has not been a particularly easy summer for some of us, and it is not likely to be a particularly easy winter. Which is to infer that we shall depend a good deal on the season's inspirational quota of music to help us through.—Philadelphia Record.

A MacDowell Admirer

"I shall open my coming New York recital with Bach's Toccata in C Major, arranged by Busoni. It is a great, noble work, of several divisions—a very big composition. On this program I will also place MacDowell's Third Sonata, the 'Norse.' This work, to me, is tremendously big, portentous, emotional. I prefer it to the Fourth, the 'Keltic,' because I am more in sympathy with it. How seldom are MacDowell's Sonatas heard! Last season the 'Tragica' and 'Eroica' once or twice, but not the others. Such works should be played over and over, or how shall the general public become familiar with them? It's odd, but each season we seem to have an epidemic of certain pieces. One year it is the Liszt Sonata, or the Brahms-Handel Variations of the Cesar Franck Prelude, Chorale and Fugue. I don't think we have had an epidemic of MacDowell's Sonatas, but it would not be a bad idea."—From an interview with Miss Cottlow in Musical America.

The Smash That Counts

Never in the history of the great war has the time been so ripe for an overwhelming, victorious smash. It is the psychological moment for the six billion knockout. The whole energy of the nation from its most retiring individual to its most powerful organization is needed to establish once for all the undisputed supremacy of the allies. The Liberty loan will do it.

Whether the war is to end this year or not, whether we shall once again or many times more find it necessary to open our purses—these things matter little at this time in comparison to the imperative need for instant mastery of the war situation.

The Liberty loan is our swift and material answer to the question of our attitude. We entered the war on no sudden impulse. It was the result of severest reflection. We have acted with thoroughness and accord. It is no time to let doubt shadow our purposes. Our avowed purpose from the first was to go on to force unconditional surrender. Victory is gained by destruction of the enemy force. We shall do it with our men and material. Our men are in arms. We shall take the six billion loan and carry on.—Chicago Tribune.

Hofmann as a Boy

I was one day invited by Mr. Henry E. Abbey to attend an exhibition he proposed giving of the almost incredible musical talent possessed by Master Josef Hofmann, then a boy of eleven. This introduction of the wonderful boy was made at Wallack's Theater to an audience of musicians, artists, newspaper men and others interested in art in all its phases. Little Hofmann did a variety of marvelous piano stunts, and I, among others, put him to a test. I played on the piano sixteen bars of an unpublished waltz I had recently composed, and, while I played, young Hofmann listened attentively. Then, seating himself at the piano, he played my waltz correctly, modulated from one key to another, interpolated other medolies, and after five minutes of this extemporaneous, reverted to my waltz in the original tune and note for note. This brought great applause from his critical audience, and for fully an hour after that he submitted his talents to tests, far surpassing even the exalted opinion all had formed of him.—Rudolph Aronson in his "Memoirs," New York Sun.

Frederica Downing at Lockport

Frederica Downing, contralto, proved the equal of her associates, Charles W. Clark and Lucille Stevenson. Possessing a voice of large proportions and luscious quality, she was able to interpret many difficult and unusual songs. Her personality commanded instant respect.—Lockport Union-Sun and Journal.

Mrs. Downing opened the program with four songs in which she scored with the tonal warmth and smoothness of her fine contralto voice. Additional admiration was aroused by her legato and her command of mezzo voice work. She was insistently recalled after both groups.—Niagara Daily News.

Lucille Stevenson at Lockport

Miss Stevenson sang two groups of songs. Her liquid tones of charming quality, her finished phrase and beautiful diction, whether she sings in English or French, and her control of interpretative effects betoken the accomplished artist and musician. Her singing gave genuine pleasure.—Niagara Daily Press.

Miss Stevenson's voice is exquisite. Her tones are all well placed, full and rich in quality and unusually sympathetic; and the songs chosen were well suited to her voice. A wealth of wonderful tone, combined with clear, distinct and musicianly interpretation, made her performance one long to be remembered by the audience.—Lockport Union-Sun and Journal.

Minnie Hubbard at Mankato

National flags made a pretty background for the Red Cross benefit concert given in the Baptist church at Mapleton last evening. The church was filled with people, who doubly enjoyed themselves, for to them was given the privilege of helping the Red Cross and listening to a dainty, artistic program of violin, vocal selections and readings.

As befits all patriotic occasions, the audience stood while the artists played and sang the first verse of "America," the opening number. Mrs. Minnie Hubbard of this city gave several groups of violin numbers with her usual charm and grace, and during her numbers the audience showed its appreciativeness by close attention, drinking in every pretty quivering note. Mrs. Hubbard was called back many times after each group to give encores, which were delightfully pretty.—Mankato (Minn.) Press.

A Sincerely Patriotic Alien

Frederick A. Stock has for many years been the leader of the Chicago Symphony orchestra. He succeeded the late Theodore Thomas, in 1905. Now he has resigned on account of his lack of citizenship. Mr. Stock is a German by birth and never got farther with naturalization than to take out his first papers, which was many years ago. Therefore he stands as an alien. He has written a letter to the trustees of the Orchestral Association of Chicago and no manlier letter has been written by any foreigner since the beginning of the war. He does not refer to "The Fatherland;" does not praise Germany nor tell how much he loved the old country and how his heart bled for that land. But he issues an address full of patriotism framed with the choicest of words. It is delicately done. He blames nobody but himself for not having been naturalized; expresses the warmest appreciation of the United States. He says, to quote his own language:

"To some of you it is known that, as a youth, while still in Germany, the land of my birth, I disapproved of the autocracy of this government and combated the growing spirit of militarism. In the quarter of a century I have lived in Chicago my dearest hopes have been fulfilled. I have come to love the United States as my native land; to cherish her institutions; to identify myself with her cause, and to regard myself as one of her dutiful and grateful sons. My devotion to and love for this country I count among the finest assets of my inner self."

Professor Stock withdrew from the orchestra to relieve the organization of embarrassment. He realizes the condition of public sentiment in regard to alienization, and he does not complain. He retires in a way so manly that it must attract attention. Professor Stock had made application for citizenship twenty-three years ago.

The board of trustees, in a response to this letter of resignation, testifies to the patriotism and high character of Professor Stock. No one can read his letter in full without believing that he has expressed his real sentiment and that he is worthy of immediate citizenship, if such a thing were possible. But he cannot be naturalized until the war is ended.—Des Moines Capital.

THE MILLERS BOOKED FOR FALL RECITAL TOUR

Nevada Van Der Veer and Reed Miller start a western tour next week on the following schedule:

October 22, Kenosha, Wis.; October 25, Cape Girardeau, Mo.; October 28, Kansas State Agricultural College; October 29, Fremont, Neb.; October 31, Columbus, Neb.; Nov. 1, Holdredge, Neb.; November 4, Denver, Colo.; November 7, Muskogee, Okla.; November 9, Lawton, Okla.; November 12, Dallas, Texas; November 13, Houston, Texas.

ILLINOIS CENTENNIAL PAGEANT AT THE AUDITORIUM

A really wonderful performance was that given at the Auditorium last week, when, in celebration of the Illinois Centennial, a pageant was shown by something over 800 performers under the auspices of the State Council of Defense to a succession of four audiences averaging each over 5,000 people.

As a "story" the performance was thoroughly interesting and also very instructive. The acting, for the most part, was thoroughly good, although very few of the speaking voices employed could penetrate to any depth in the Auditorium.

One of the scenes was prepared and presented by the Chicago Drama League, and in this Dorothy Meadows had a fine part in which she spoke her lines so well as to constitute the one glowing exception to the rule.

The scenic investiture and the dressing and groupings of the masses of people employed were masterly in scope and effect.

Each scene was plentifully besprinkled with incidental dances and there were a score or more of "program" events of elaborate character and intricate detail.

These dances were arranged, rehearsed and presented by Mme. Marie Yung and they certainly constituted a royal indorsement of her skill and artistry.

Seldom indeed has any grand opera company had so characteristic a terpsichorean display and no local event in the hundred years of Illinois has ever witnessed such beautiful art in that particular line.

Mme. Yung is fortunate in having many talented pupils, and scores of these appeared in solo and ensemble with the most remarkable effect, one of the most charming and successful being Constance Penney.

The music of the event was furnished by a splendid orchestra, which, under the baton of William Weil, played a thoroughly interesting program in good style, and a chorus, which, under the direction of Daniel Protheroe, did a few things very well and some others very badly.

This body of musicians was placed incorrectly as regards the accompaniment and the play itself, with the result that there was very little synchronization of effect.

There were several solo numbers also. Miss Frances Ingram had one which did not suit her voice at all; Dixie Merrick sang a little number in an inaudible voice, and Miklos R. Redey, having one of the best numbers on the program, made good work of that part which was solo but hodgepodge of the ensemble section, perhaps through the fault of the chorus and conductor.

The one thoroughly satisfactory number was a rather commonplace composition with, however, much spirit, which was sung in beautiful voice and much style by Lola Pierson Tillema.

Mrs. Tillema has both vocal musicianship and was able to present her work in a way which was thoroughly professional and also very much in keeping with the big and brilliant environment.

pear in the near future. While spending the summer in the Pocona Mountains of Pennsylvania she gave a concert for the soldiers, who were happy to listen to her beautiful dramatic voice. She gave the concert with her own accompaniment and delighted her hearers with "Fields of Balleyclare," Handel's "Largo," "Danny Boy" and "Home, Sweet Home." Naturally, the "Star Spangled Banner" was the opening number. At the local fashionable hotel she gave another musical entertainment with many prominent folks present. A reception was tendered to her for the gracious musical treat. While away from civilization Miss Conrad composed several songs, which will be printed in the near future.

REED MILLER AND NEVADA VAN DER VEER—A NON-JEALOUS ARTIST COUPLE

Among the few living refutations of the statement that all artist couples are professionally jealous of each other and live "scrappily" instead of "happily" ever after is the case of Reed Miller, tenor, and Nevada Van Der Veer, contralto, who laugh at this so-called bugbear of domestic bliss and admit that there is nothing like that in their family. "Quite the contrary," says Mr. Miller. "We take great pride in each other's successes, and, in fact, during the first four or five years of our married life when either of us was singing, the other would stand in the wings and tremble until the ordeal was over. This nervousness became such a burden that we finally decided not to listen to each other at all, and so when Mme. Van Der Veer sings I'm out somewhere having a smoke; and likewise it does me no good to ask her how I sang on a particular occasion, because the answer will surely be, 'I guess it was good but I don't know; I wasn't paying any attention.'"

TALENT

Youth has its freedom from prejudice and preconception, consequently this is the age of greatest elasticity.

If in childhood days the means of expression could be found to co-operate with the quality to be expressed, much unhappiness and discontent would be saved the human family. But the knowledge of our being and the laws controlling it are yet too limited.

The wise man knows that every good and perfect gift cometh from the Father, and so, without searching the past or taking into account that the spirit of man is no new thing in existence, we will try to see what talent is and with what we have to reckon in the education of talent.

In spite of the fact that the observing and experienced man knows that no heart is happy which cannot measure its own beat, no mind is extremely active which cannot utter its own thoughts, and no soul at peace with itself which cannot give utterance to the truth abiding within; in spite of this knowledge, we proceed with our existence in a material world until the half of this life is spent before we begin to appreciate or to place any value on our God-given faculties of self-expression. Development comes through expression. And we are inclined to give the credit to so-called "talent" when the means and the bent of an individual co-ordinate; if, through expression, the latent quality grows on apace.

When one is inspired by the depth of his own conviction to speak with authority, be his language music, oratory, art or invention, the world stays its mad rush to give heed. Such inspiration and enthusiasm mark one as unique. He stands apart. A certain transfiguration seems to have taken place and we have deity in man expressing itself.

Man is dual in his nature, and if freedom of expression is not maintained (for truly it is every child's birthright), through physical development, then man finds himself handicapped by the physical consciousness. He lives in a material world. Harmony of being is unknown to him, and his cry for expression is the more bitter by reason of this condition. And so we find different schools inculcating in their teachings the principles of "going into the silence," which is nothing more than getting away from material consciousness into the consciousness of the real man, hearing the still, small voice of wisdom proclaim the value and virtue of the individuality of each soul-vision, and the value of its message to humanity. What we want is true conviction, not flattery; and true conviction comes only from the spirit abiding within.

We do not want to seemingly digress, but since our message is to the living soul seeking its outlet, we must lay some stress on the vital importance of physical fitness—a sound mind in a sound body. The physical is our densest body; too, it is our great means of expression. Then it behooves us to bring it under the control of the real man. So long as man is physically conscious, just so long is he handicapped for expression on the higher planes. Reasoning further along this line we note that man's ignorance of the truth of his being is his only handicap. And with the knowledge of the laws controlling life and its expression comes an insight into the treasure-house of each soul. Does it not appear plain, then, that talent is no rare quality, however rare it may be, but that it is the spirit of man freed from all inharmony, expressing the truth of his being in a language burning with the zeal of a fired soul? What man has done, man can do. The true value of self, of our unique individuality, we are slow to recognize. And I am much inclined to attribute this false attitude to the religious teachings by which many have been taught to regard self as a worm of the dust, from which it is a far step to viewing man in the high conceit of his innate deity. We need to get the assurance of our great philosophers and poets, such as Browning, who proclaims man to study in the embry." Indeed, we need to study the truth as Christ taught it. When we have risen to this plane of contemplation we begin to recognize that the so-called talent is the rightful inheritance of each individual. The history of talent but proves the value of honest endeavor. From our viewpoint the proper and true value of the real self insures us a success beyond the bounds of any quality so readily termed talent by the world.

A true valuation of self precedes self-confidence and self-respect. Somewhere Emerson speaks of this self-respect as being "man's perception of the deity in man."

The history of many of our talented musicians and artists portrays a lack of symmetrical development. They failed in the estimate of their true value and of the value of their message to humanity. This lack of symmetry is the more pronounced in the so-called talented man by reason of the contrasts in his expression. Symmetrical development, like self-mastery, comes only through application to and knowledge of the laws governing self.

There are soul qualities in the being of each individual, and the human cry is for something to stimulate the dormant faculties into life. Burke so truly said, "He that borrows the aid of an equal understanding doubles his own; he that uses that of a superior elevates his own to the stature of that he contemplates." In the light of such wisdom it would be well to contemplate Deity; nor can this attainment be reached other than through the study of man.

All true art is virtually religious in its deeper aspect, and talent, recognizing its true source, is humble with the humility of a seer. Man is endowed with qualities which go to make up faculties. Also he is endowed with freedom of will, and only in so far as he exercises that freedom of will can he hope to attain self-expression. And surely we do know that man is brought never in such close intimacy with his Maker as in the expression of his own inspired deeds. By virtue of which reasoning we are led to assert that talent is a soul faculty stimulated into expression by the inspiration of divine qualities innate in every child of God.

Sunday's Events

The Hippodrome was taxed to its capacity on Sunday afternoon, October 6, when Josef Rosenblatt and Sascha Jacobsen, violinist, appeared under the auspices of the Humanitarian Cult. They were assisted at the piano by Mr. Ross for the first and Emanuel Balaban for the second. The Hon. William Wilson, secretary of labor, delivered an address for the Fourth Liberty Loan, as also did the leader of the Cult. Mr. Mischa Appelbaum appealed for subscriptions.

At the Lexington Theater, the temporary home of the Chicago Opera, a capacity house was present in the evening to listen to the first concert of the Royal Italian Grenadiers' Band, under the auspices of the Italian ambassador. The band played operatic bits, and so well that we lamented that our own bands have never been able to yet attain the artistic heights for which the Italian and French bands are well known. Therefore, we applaud General Pershing's decision to place our own bands on the artistic level with the bands of our allies. It seems that the presence of Enrico Caruso must always be the cause of some ovation, for the tenor received one when caught in the audience. Maestri Tardite and Monente are the conductors of the band.

Toscha Seidel, on his second season in America, gave a recital in the afternoon at the Carnegie Hall for the East Side Lyceum before a goodly gathering.

Minnette Warren and Adelaide Pierce in Joint Recital at Aeolian Hall

A daughter of Minnesota appeared last year in song recital at Aeolian Hall. She left lasting impressions—I am speaking of the charming Kathleen Hart Bibb. This year another daughter of the Flour State came to give us a proof of St. Paul's artistry, and the journey of some 1,200 miles, though long, was worth while for the artist and those who gathered at the Aeolian Hall on the evening of October 11. Miss Minnette Warren, the pianist, was responsible for the delightful moments enjoyed by New Yorkers. As is the custom in these patriotic days, the charming young lady played the "Star Spangled Banner" before plunging into the execution of Grieg's Ballade in G Minor. Miss Warren's program did not consist of piano masterpieces—the works rendered were mostly bijou in character—but in spite of this feature Miss Warren's abilities could be amply judged in Chopin's Fantasie Impromptu—the notable qualities exhibited in this composition were the facile technic, the limpid and clear tone and the excellent comprehension of the French-Pole's conception. Delightful, charming and extremely interesting were the same composer's Etudes, A Flat, C Sharp Minor and Variations brillants. Besides the pianistic qualities, which is the prelude of a very promising career at the keyboard, her personality is to be accounted as one of the essential factors, possessed by only a few—a winning smile, a dignified appearance and a winsome face. This combination of physical qualities should help greatly and will place her in the rank of not "only a piano player," but in the roster of the great pianists. The balance of her program enlisted her own ambitious compositions, "Three Preludes" and "Variations," and the following: "Concert Etude" (MacDowell), "Le Bon Vieuxtemps" (Engel), "En Bateau" and "Reflects daus Leau" (Zeckwer). Miss Adelaide Pierce, another young lady from the Twin Cities, divided with the pianist the evening in a rendition of songs. In the rendition of Handel's "Quanto mai felici siete" she disclosed a rich contralto voice of sufficient power to carry an operatic role. In the "Tes Doux baisers" her exquisite interpretation, her excellent phrasing and her French diction won the audience, which applauded her frankly and heartily. The operatic style was exhibited in the singing of the aria, "O don fatale," from Verdi's rarely heard opera, "Don Carlos." I must necessarily come back to Miss Warren as a composer, for the young pianist is an unusually gifted song writer, as proven in Miss Pierce's singing of "Calm Be Thy Sleep," which is dedicated to the contralto. Miss Pierce's renditions consisted also of "Si mes vers avaient des ailes" (Hahn), "Dear Old Glory" (Hamblen), "Love Like the Dawn Came Stealing" (Cadman), "Valentine" (Belden), "Deep River" (Burleigh) and "The Year's at the Spring" (Beach). Commendable accompaniment at the piano by Charles Gilbert Spross.

Henri Rabaud Will Curtail All German Music, Including Wagner, at the Boston Symphony

The new French conductor of the Boston Symphony, who is to arrive some time in November to take charge of the orchestra, will eliminate all German composers, including Wagner. He declares in a cablegram received by a daily newspaper of New York that he has put a ban on German works, including Richard Wagner, despite his admiration for his works, which he conducted at the Paris Opera. He declares the following: "My patriotism would have suffered cruelly if we had not been able to dispense with them."

Who can blame Henri Rabaud for his decision after the criminals of Potsdam have ransacked the French towns? Who will blame the composer of "Marouf" for the banishment of German music after the plundering, arson and unheard-of atrocities

And in New York there are two musical weeklies which still shout that German music is inexorable. There are still two weeklies in New York which stand by Wagner's music, forgetting the crimes of Germany. There is no race on earth that hates Germany as do the French, and the republic is justified in nourishing such sentiments. France has suffered and is still outraged wantonly. Her sons have a right to banish everything German.

What we need here is patriotism a la Rabaud.

"RAGTIME DOOMED," SAYS PAUL ALTHOUSE

Down in Birmingham, Ala., where Paul Althouse, the leading American tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, recently opened his concert season by singing to an absolutely sold-out house, an enterprising scribe interviewed the tenor on the musical topic of the moment, "What effect will the war have on music?" and discovered that, according to the Althouse experience, "the boys at the camps may whistle 'Over There' and 'Good-by, Broadway,' but they're strong for arias none the less and demand them almost invariably when an operatic artist appears for them."

Incidentally Mr. Althouse happened to hear just before his Birmingham concert that some members of the Foreign Legion were in the city and were to be guests at the Liberty Loan-Allied Armies dinner that evening, so on the way to his concert he stopped there long enough to sing just one song, "The Americans Come." What would have happened had he stayed long enough to sing another would be hard to tell, since they almost tore the roof off after this one.

THE LA SCALA GRAND OPERA COMPANY

By Joseph De Valdor

The country is thirsty for operas at popular prices. Some thoughtful and enterprising people have undertaken the task of providing such entertainments—the Aborns, the Savage Company, the San Carlo, and now a newly organized company which is to furnish grand opera at prices within the reach of the masses.

The absence of municipal opera houses, a regrettable matter for all music lovers, should make the La Scala Grand Opera Company a welcome asset to the musical life of America.

Thanks to Messrs. L. E. Behymer and Sparks M. Berry of the Golden Gate state, the inhabitants of our continent from coast to coast will have the opportunity to enjoy operatic performances which will rival the Chicago Opera and the Metropolitan of New York.

This may sound a bit exaggerated to our readers, but a glance at the roster of artists will cause skepticism to vanish.

J. R. Ellison, C. H. White and Lawrence A. Lambert are the trio which completes the western syndicate which is behind this newly formed organization, and they are the Alpha and Omega of musical entertainments, not only at Portland, Ore., but of the Pacific coast. The quintet which forms the business organization knows the wants of the inhabitants and therefore their enterprise should not only be an artistic success, but it will surely meet with good financial results without which the public would be deprived of grand opera.

There is no doubt that the music lovers will flock to the opera house when the organization arrives in any given town, and no one, when the hour of departure comes, will be disappointed at the performances, for international artists have been engaged—costumes and equipment will be so provided as to have no gaps in any department. And in spite of complicated transportation problems caused by the war, and notwithstanding the other enormous expenses of the company, the syndicate offers first rate performances at reasonable prices.

Some of the artists have been members of Mr. Campanini's company; others have graced the cast of the Metropolitan Opera House, and so the company is assured of artistic success. Following is the remarkable personnel of the La Scala Grand Opera Company:

Mme. Tamaki Miura, the only Japanese soprano in America, known specifically as the unique interpreter of Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" and "Iris" (Mascagni), will appear in these roles, made famous at Colon of Buenos Ayres and other cities, and Edith Mason, for several seasons with the Metropolitan, is another soprano assurance of artistic success. Evelyn Scotney, the American coloratura soprano, known since the days of Henry Russell's company at Boston, will be the heroine of the pyrotechnical operas like "Traviata" and "Lucia." Cesare Nesi, Giuseppe Corallo and Theodore Kittay, the Russian tenor, comprise the trio of tenors. Ada Paggi and Fely Clement, the mezzo soprano of Henry Russell's Company of Boston, will add to the brilliance of the list of woman singers. Carl Formes and Marion Green, both native baritone-bassos with high qualifications, will also aid in insuring a good interpretation of the invested operas. Signori Coronna and Santini are among the baritones, and among the bassos are Howard White and Signor Picchi. And last, but not least, the famous international conductor, Signor Fulgenzio Guerrieri, will lead all the forces at the baton.

The repertoire is also interesting, as the following operas are promised: Puccini's "La Boheme," "La Tosca" and "Madame Butterfly"; Gounod's "Faust," Verdi's "Rigoletto" and "Trovatore," Donizetti's "Lucia" and "The Daughter of the Regiment," Flotow's "Martha," Mascagni's "Iris" and an English revival of "The Geisha" with Mme. Tamaki Miura. The orchestra will be composed of thirty-six picked musicians and the chorus will contain forty fresh voices. To the new syndicate the writer wishes a deserved success. We allow ourselves to urge the public to unlimited encouragement. Music is the greatest factor of all times and no country can rank as a civilized community which does not patronize it. Our country loves music and our resources are immense, so we can easily predict success.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE

The audiences at the recitals in Ziegfeld Theatre on Saturday mornings have been electrified by the brilliant playing of one or more of the "Auer pupils."

This was no less true on last Saturday, when Amy Emerson Neill, the only violinist of the occasion, appeared, choosing for her numbers "Summer Idyl" (Burleigh) and "Scherzo-Tarentelle" (Wieniwaski). Miss Neill has a wonderfully well rounded and brilliant tone and the "Summer Idyl" in her hands was caressingly beautiful, while the "Scherzo-Tarentelle" was played with rare skill and agility. Miss Neill's interpretive qualities also are not to be overlooked.

The pianists on the program gave good account of themselves.

Marguerite Kelpsch and Cecilia Urman, pupils of Rudolph Reuter, playing respectively "Etude D Flat Major" (Liszt), "Polichinelle" (Rachmaninow) and "Impromptu, A Flat Minor" (Schubert), "Study, G Flat Major" (Chopin), were played in such a manner as to prove conclusively the worth of this excellent teacher.

Herbert S. Johnson, pupil of Alexander Raab, distinguished himself in playing the beautiful and difficult "Rigoletto Fantasie Paraphrase" (Verdi-Liszt).

The first movement of the "G Minor Concerto" (Mendelssohn-Bartholdy), closing the program, was played exceptionally well by Meriwether Lewis, a very young girl from Fort Worth, Texas, Mr. V. Mickwitz at the second piano.

Sylvia Loder sang "Eligie" (Massenet), and "By the Waters of Minnetonka" (Lieurance), violin obligato by Miriam Schmauss, in a very attractive manner, and Marie Herron sang the lovely aria, "Welcome, Sweet Wind," from "The Morning of the Year" (Cadman). Miss Herron has been heard before with great pleasure and again displayed a beautiful voice, and has gained very materially since last heard.

AMERICAN FOLK MUSIC

Some time ago the Outlook published an interesting editorial entitled "The Primitive Folk Songs of Broadway." It berated the essentially Teutonic qualities in American musical composition up to the present day. As an instance of this, it gave a criticism of Henry Hadley's Fourth Symphony in D Minor, presented in New York, which was designed to represent different phases of American national character as indicated by the title, "North, East, South and West." Its failure lay, said the editor, in the fact that the composer, though employing many instances of Negro and Indian music to build upon, failed to make any use of the American folk music which has grown up as an outcome of these two, perhaps, but which is more essentially national than either of them, namely, American ragtime.

It is true that spontaneity has not been an outstanding characteristic of our American composers, who have had German principles, with their conservatism and stolidity, so drilled into them as to make them ashamed of their own folk music. Is this not, however, a natural outcome of the great fad for foreign art and foreign study which has pervaded musical circles in this country for a generation or more? American music students have always labored under the idea that they must have the prestige of a foreign education. Nor was this altogether a delusion on their part, for the American public demanded it. Up to the last few years it was a rare thing to hear American musicians on the operatic or concert stage, not because they were inferior, but because the public stubbornly refused to pay to hear them. It is only lately, too, that American teachers of music have come into repute. Ten years ago any one who had had merely an American education was deficient in the most essential qualification of musicianship—foreign tutelage. Happily, that day is passing.

On the other hand, it is only within the last two or three years that this American folk music called ragtime has become formulated into something with a semblance of character and distinction, and has begun to assimilate qualities which are permanent. The war has made and undoubtedly will continue to make many changes in American music, but it is incumbent upon us now to show more insistent patriotism and give more support to our American writers than ever before. This is surely not done by denouncing the efforts of any sincere and worthy American composer for the sake of gaining an editorial point. For, after all, it would be a very difficult task today to satisfy a critical New York symphony audience by presenting a work based upon ragtime, even if it did not involve the sacrifice of musical ideals. The American public is not yet ready for such an invasion of its artistic tastes. After the war, when the people of our country will be better nationalized under more united purposes, then it will be time to look for "American musical genius in the musical Nazareth of Broadway." MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

ERIE, PA.

If present plans are carried out Erie will not lack in the way of concerts this season, for the musical fare offered by local managers is both varied and plenteous. Mrs. McCoy comes to the fore again with the Eighth Artists' Course and is to present during the coming winter a splendid array of artists, opening early in January with the sensational young violinist, Jascha Heifetz. This concert will be followed by a joint recital featuring Lucy Gates and Wynne Pyle. Much interest is shown in Miss Gates' forthcoming appearance, which will be her first in Erie, as the reports of her successes elsewhere are most flattering. John Powell, composer-pianist, will present a program, including some of his own works, some time in February, and Reinald Werrenrath will fill a return date. The series will close with a joint recital by Max Rosen and Sophie Braslau. This promises to be one of the finest concerts of the season, presenting two of the most successful American artists of recent years. Rosen's triumphs of last winter are well remembered, and the work of Miss Braslau at the Metropolitan last season, when she created the leading role in Cadman's "Shanewis," as well as her more recent appearances with the Ravinia Opera Company, has called forth warm praise from the critics of both Chicago and New York. Mrs. McCoy's series promises to be the most brilliant she has yet given us, and a noteworthy feature is that, with but one exception, her artists are all Americans.

Miss S. Gwendolyn Leo brings to Erie on November 4 the pianist who made the biggest impression of anyone heard here since Paderewski. I refer to Mischa Levitzki, whose work needs no comment. That he will provide one of the finest evenings of music for the season goes without saying.

Following Levitzki's appearance Miss Leo will present the French Military Band, which played a most successful week's engagement at Chautauqua this summer. The great number of Erie musicians who heard them at that time will constitute a self-appointed group of press agents.

In December Ethel Newcombe, pianist, formerly assistant to Leschetizky, will give a recital under Miss Leo's management.

Miss Leo's greatest announcement for the year is a two-day engagement of the Creatore Opera Company in January, which will be a source of delight to opera-lovers, as we have had no opera in Erie since 1916, when the Boston Company sang "Tosca." Miss Leo's patrons will be more than pleased with her offerings for the year, for they are all of first quality.

The Vincent Studio has re-opened for the season with Henry B. Vincent in charge of the piano, organ and composition, and Mrs. Winifred Eggleston at the head of the Vocal Department. In addition to his duties as organist for Simpson M. E. Church and the Jewish Temple, Mr. Vincent will be identified with many civic musical activities. He will have charge of a series of Neighborhood Sings which will be held weekly in the various public schools, and will organize the Liberty Chorus which is to take the place of the Community Chorus which has been doing such splendid work the past three years. The Liberty Chorus will meet once a week in the Central High School Auditorium, and a special choir will be selected from among the best voices to work on several big choral numbers which will be given in concert during the year. The monthly Community Sings which were so successful last year will be held in the Park Theatre on Sunday afternoons, under Mr. Vincent's direction. Mr. Vincent will have charge of all the musical activities at Central High School. A plan is under way to organize a Portable Theatre to carry on the work begun by the Little Playhouse, which institution was driven out of its quarters last spring, due to the necessity of providing greater sleeping accommodations at the Reed House. This Portable Theatre will continue giving one act plays in Erie and vicinity, enlisting the services of many of the former Playhouse players, Sylvia Russell, Dorothy Liebel, Mrs. Steinberg, Mrs. Chatham, Elizabeth Fassett, James Flynn, Clayton Yoder, Wilson Root Bushnell and Albert H. Dowling, Jr. Mr. Vincent will again direct these performances.

The Erie Conservatory is well into its fall and winter season, and the president, Mr. Peter LeSueur, announces the usual series of student recitals for the coming months. As director and organist of St. Paul's cathedral Mr. LeSueur has outlined some big things, including performances of Sterndale Bennett's "Woman of Samaria," Spohr's "Last Judgment," the Christmas music from Handel's "Messiah," and MacFarlane's "The Message of the Cross." Mr. LeSueur will continue his weekly organ recitals which precede the Sunday evening services, at which recitals he will be assisted by various vocal soloists chosen from the Conservatory classes. Albert H. Dowling, Jr., will again give monthly organ recitals at the First Unitarian church. Among the piano and vocal teachers who have opened their studios for the winter's work are Mr. and Mrs. Victor Vaughn Lytle, Miss Alice Sloan, Mrs. Runser, Mrs. C. C. Colby, Miss Gertrude Delano, Mrs. Reinecke and Morris Gabriel Williams.

DOING A VACATION "STUNT" IN COLORADO

The accompanying picture shows (left to right) Mrs. Lawrence Sturtevant, of Kansas City, Mrs. Frederica Gerhardt Downing, the Chicago contralto, and Mrs. Katherine Howard Ward, organist, Chicago, in Colorado and was taken during last August.

The Quartette of the First Methodist Church of Evanston, including Miss Lucille Stevenson, Mrs. Downing, Robert Quait and Charles W. Clark, as well as the organist, Mrs. Ward, and occasional visitors, such as Mrs. Sturtevant, wife of the former tenor at this Evanston church, spent vacation periods on the ranch of Mr. J. C. Shaffer in the mountains of Colorado and each of them has told Music News of the glorious rest and recreation afforded at this charming spot.

Miss Stevenson, Mrs. Downing and Mr. Clark went direct from Colorado to the American Musical Festival at Lockport, N. Y., and their splendid successes there have already been recorded in this paper.

Mrs. Downing is in the best of health, spirits and musical form this Fall and is anticipating a very busy season which will also, inevitably, be a successful one.

On Tuesday morning of this week she sang for the Mu Phi Epsilom girls at the Ziegfeld Theater and will later in the month appear at the Benefit Concert to be given by the Lakeview Musical Club for the American Soldiers' Hospital Equipment.

Mrs. Downing loves to sing for "The Boys" in Camp and has appeared many times at Camp Grant, at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station and at other points.

She is to appear in the great Des Moines Artists' Course (Des Moines, Ia.) on November 15.

CLEVELAND

Musical activities of the Cleveland Museum of Art are under the direction of Thomas Whitney Surette, a unique and most interesting musical educator. A recent museum bulletin contains the following prospectus:

1. The Appreciation of Music, a course of fourteen lectures to be given on each Wednesday evening in October and commencing with December, on the first Wednesday of each month.

Oct. 2 The Elements of Music: Meter and Rhythm.
Oct. 9 Melody and Harmony.
Oct. 16 Counterpoint.
Oct. 23 Form in Art.
Oct. 30 Form in Music.

2. Talks and singing for children, Saturday afternoons at 3 o'clock during October.

3. Informal lectures and singing for adults on Sunday evenings at 8 o'clock during October.

Miss Lila Robeson, Metropolitan contralto, is generously giving her services in behalf of Fourth Loan publicity, singing at various community rallies throughout Cleveland. She will not leave for New York until November. On October 15 Miss Robeson will give a recital at the museum for the opening of the Lecture-Recital Club, while during the month her Monday afternoon concerts at Old Stone Church will continue. At a recent concert at Windermere Church her rendition of the arias from "Samson et Delila" called forth rather unusually high enthusiasm, as did the pleasing "Quis est Homo" ("Stabat Mater"), with Miss Ethel Bagnall in the soprano part; and a group of French songs displayed artistic conception of the finest type.

From the nature of the case, music in Cleveland tends to take on a civic or patriotic significance. Mrs. Alice Bradley, president of the Ohio Federation of Musical Clubs, announces a "slacker record" movement; the Woman's Club is selling seats for the Russian Symphony Orchestra concert, while the Lovers of Italy Society has just concluded a successful sale for the October 13 concert in the Hippodrome, where Amato, Eddy Brown and others will be heard.

John Philip Sousa, with his "three hundred and five," headed a loan parade in Cleveland September 29, the parade being the largest in the city's history and lasting over four hours.

Nikolai Sokoloff, working with the Cleveland Music School Settlement, is giving training in appreciation and the understanding of orchestration to the amateur musicians of the city. Like Mr. Surette, he has musical uplift as his aim. As for an objective, Mr. Sokoloff aspires to the correlation of Cleveland talent and the organization of a symphony orchestra. He will be remembered as the former leader of several successful orchestras in this country and in Russia.

AT THE WARRINGTON

Last week, too late for earlier review, the Pyre Players were seen at the Warrington Theatre in "Which One Shall I Marry?" and it was found, in many respects, to be the most entertaining bill yet presented, and it certainly was given better than anything yet seen by this writer.

One says "entertaining," but should, perhaps, use the word "exhilarating," for the play, while frankly a sermon and exceedingly "talky," has yet a wonderfully vital idea at the bottom, and its working out is so good, so altogether convincing, that it holds undivided attention.

It is a clever conglomerate of "Every Woman" and "Eyes of Youth," and partakes of the interest of both.

If the Pyre Players give it again—go and see it.

For—they play it admirably.

This writer has never liked Bess Bennett so well in any part he has seen her portray.

Her work in this is so intelligent, so quiet and yet so altogether convincing as to be remarkable.

She looks the part of Agnes to perfection, she cares for the crucial moments beautifully and she speaks all the lines wonderfully well.

Kingsley Gordon, opposite her, is stilted and artificial, but shows, nevertheless, that he has much experience which in another part would stand him in stead.

Karl L. Way as Jack Hart is ideally cast and carried his part to resounding success, while Robert Valentine, usually cast for comedy lines, proved that he could speak serious ones just as convincingly.

Cora King is good in everything she undertakes and her Irish mother was no exception, the only fault being a semblance of youthfulness which she could not quite eradicate.

Harry B. Castle, on the contrary (playing the part of her husband) was positively fine in every detail, presenting a study of Irish brogue, wit and manners which this writer has never seen excelled on any stage.

Avis Wynne and Allen York playing "opposite" as usual, were again the young lovers and in their ensembles were fine in appearance and thoroughly intelligent in treatment of the parts.

Miss Wynne is pretty and painstaking and in each detail roused the appreciation of the audience, while Mr. York proved conclusively that he had made a very careful and an entirely convincing study of his part.

As the unscrupulous "Fast Young Man," he made the correct, disagreeable picture and he carried each succeeding scene admirably, culminating in a speech at the close which, while it vindicated the character he was playing, at the same time proved his own very correct feeling for dramatic values.

The House of Lies

The program of the Warrington this week does not state the author of "The House of Lies," and the item has escaped my memory for the moment, but unquestionably it is one of the most cynical and disagreeable of all the modern plays, while at the same time it is of clever workmanship and sparkling style.

There are four despicable characters in the play, that one who is frankly "bad" by calling being the only one who near the end shows a spark of decency—the others remaining positive in their unregeneracy to the end.

The chief of these pretentious, lying, avaricious and unscrupulous characters is the youth, Reginald Morton, the second is his silly and perfectly "vacant" mother, Mrs. Morton, and the third is his uncle, Barclay Mortimer—while the one filthy character who finally shows the decency spark is Fayette de Montville, an out-and-out adventuress with all the accustomed paraphernalia.

Reggie is played absolutely well by Allen York—he fairly revels in the part and in looks, manners and dress fits every scene to perfection.

Miss King is excellent as the mother and Mr. Gordon makes a striking study of the uncle.

Fayette, the scarlet spot of the whole play, is wonderfully well conceived and executed by Jean Cooper. She gives the exact ultra-Bohemian touch to the first scene in which she appears and gradually, and very skillfully, enlists the entire sympathy of the audience in the denouement which she cleverly brings about.

The two notes of contrast to the sordidness of most of this play are Rose and Dick—the first played by Bess Bennett and the second by Mr. Valentine.

Miss Bennett has the most engaging of appearance and style and is able to depict a high minded, clean mannered young woman to the very life. She has accomplished this task frequently but never more convincingly than on Monday night in "The House of Lies."

Mr. Valentine emphasizes her excellence and adds touches of his own, while Mr. Way, very popular with Oak Park Warrington audiences, held up to his usual good style as the foolishly suspicious husband of Rose.

Harry Castle is in this play assigned the part of Thomas Morton and is, as usual, responsible for a very distinctive and artistic creation. An asthmatic, good-souled but hopelessly submerged and hen-pecked creature he is, yet logical and interesting.

Oak Park should be proud to support so excellent a company in so well presented a play as this.

EMMA ROBERTS FOR LIBERTY LOAN

Emma Roberts, the well known contralto, was soloist last Tuesday on the treasury steps for the Fourth Liberty Loan meeting, and also appeared on the same platform with Rabbi Stephen Wise, the great orator, Thursday evening before an audience of 10,000. This meeting took place at the Cooper Union. Other speakers of the evening were Ambassador Elkins and Judge Ettinger, and a double quartet of Cantor's Association appeared.

Wrightson—Herbert Wrightson has opened a studio at 610 Fine Arts building, specializing in harmony and composition. As a pupil of one of the most famous European theorists and a writer and investigator of many years' experience, Mr. Wrightson holds a position of some authority in his field of work. A very recent composition is a song entitled, "The Widening Sea," text by John Howard Craig.

A REGENERATED STRADIVARIUS

By E. N. Doring Jr.

The following account will prove interesting to lovers of old violins, as it is in regard to a very fine Stradivarius violin, which, rumor had it, was almost destroyed some months ago in an automobile accident.

This occurred when David Hochstein, one of our well known American violinists, was returning to Camp Upton from a concert with his Stradivarius violin. The automobile had a mishap and the occupants had a good shaking up, but nothing further was thought of it until the case containing the violin was opened, when the consternation of Mr. Hochstein can be imagined on finding that his treasured Stradivarius had been most severely bruised! The breaks in the top, to one not accustomed to seeing any but perfect instruments, must have seemed most serious.

Being shortly to go on his journey "over there," and having the instrument fully covered by accident and other insurance, he decided that the wisest and best course for him to pursue would be to collect his insurance on it, which he forthwith did, placing the money in a fund with which to purchase another upon his return to this country after the war. Subsequently the violin came into the possession of John Friedrich & Bro., the well known dealers in rare old violins, of New York. A most beautiful piece of work was then done by Mr. John Friedrich, recognized as one of the finest violin makers of the present day, and, needless to say, when he finished, the instrument was restored to its condition previous to the accident. Not having had any thorough adjustment for years the instrument was now in really better condition and sounded better than prior to the accident, which fact has been attested by several fine performers who were well acquainted with the instrument while in the possession of Mr. Hochstein.

The violin was purchased for Mr. Hochstein from the family of a well known Boston violinist, who obtained it over thirty years ago in Berlin, it having been selected for him by Joseph Joachim from the collection of the dealer, Ludwig Neuner. To Boston the violin has again gone and is now the prized possession of one who recognizes and appreciates the beauty and tone of it. In appearance it would be difficult to conceive of a handsomer violin; it has the lovely reddish shade of varnish, and the back is of a richly grained maple seldom seen, the curl being very pronounced, showing off the beautiful varnish in striking manner. The date of the violin is 1715, recognized as the best period of the great maker, and the model is typical of that epoch in his work.

FRANCES FROTHINGHAM'S PUPILS FILL IMPORTANT POSITIONS

Recent students of Frances Frothingham's normal course in harmony, who are now occupying school positions, are: Miss Olive M. Gooch, who is teaching advanced harmony and piano at Springfield College of Music, Springfield, Ill., and Miss Elizabeth Dean Fickett, head of the theory and organ departments at Carthage College, Carthage, Ill.

Miss Fickett, who is also a piano pupil of Miss Frothingham, spent the late summer in a Chautauqua tour as accompanist for Miss Grace Wynne and the Schumann Quintet.

LOS ANGELES

The Gamut Club October Banquet

The opening of the season was a novel event. First, in giving a reception to its honored president, L. E. Behymer, on his return from a summer's vacation in the East. Secondly, in a welcome and reception to presidents of the Woman's Clubs, which take much interest in music as well as art, philosophy and science. The Prelude Greeting by Lummis to President Behymer was re-echoed by the Club in "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," etc. His reply was none the less interesting in a precursory glance over the past quarter of a century, as an omen for the coming prospective by the law of growth. Mrs. Estelle Heart Dreyfus of the Dominant Club was presented and sang a group of songs in most expressive style, with Miss Grace Andrews at the piano, in encore rendering "The Marseillaise," in French. Mrs. Robinson, president of the Ebell Club, and Mrs. Lobingier, president of the Friday Morning Club, each of the two clubs having near 2,000 members and rivaling as to which can do the greatest good work. Judge Bordwell spoke for the Ellis Club, an organization of male voices. Mr. Warren, for the Orpheus Club, which is holding itself together, though 75 per cent of its members are with the colors, now in France.

Cecil Fanning and his associate, H. B. Turpin at the piano, were special guests, giving us two French songs and a few camp and community songs, led vigorously by Mr. Fanning, with Cadman, another guest of the Club, at the piano. The consummate artist sang his own text poem to Cadman's musical setting.

Mrs. Grace Mabee, president of the Wa-Waii Club, sang MacDermitt's "Land of Mine," and several others to encore calls. Mrs. M. S. Anderson, president of Matinee Musicale; Mrs. Graham Putnam, president MacDowell Club; Mrs. Nannie Clayton, president Harmonia Club; Mrs. Goodfellow, president of the Lyric Club, all made well pointed brief responses.

Mrs. L. J. Selby sang several contralto solos very acceptably. Mr. Umberto Sisterelli played several of his own compositions for violin, which were worthy and quite artistic. Margery Morrison, at the piano, gave an excerpt from "Tosca," second act, in piano tabloid form, and a vocal reading which was quite unique and full of interest, if all the verbal explanations could have been heard above the piano accompaniment.

Mrs. Herbert of Santa Barbara, president of the Music Study Club, gave a short talk. Mrs. Abbie Jamison, of the Woman's State and National Woman's Music Club, mentioned the great endeavor in that field of unification to build up music. Mrs. Hennion Robinson, the able and ready accompanist for all the great artists, presented a song composition of much merit in construction, in a contralto solo, sung by Mrs. Selby, to the pleasure of all.

The Hollywood Community Chorus, to the full capacity of the High School Auditorium, under conductorship of Hugo Kirchhoffer, reciprocated a program given by the War Camp Service for Community Work. The artists were Cyril Dwight Edwards, dramatic baritone, who sang Damrosch's "Danny Deaver" and Garroway's setting of Charles Lummis' "Sun of the Sea," Mr. Garroway at the piano; George Cherniavsky, virtuoso violinist; Mrs. Heart Dreyfus, contralto, in "Home of Mine," a "Battle Song" and "Red Is the English Rose" and for encore "The Marseillaise." The group of artists were splendid in every line. Charles C. Draa is at the head of this work for camps and community in programs. Mrs. Cecil Frankel of Hollywood is the organizer of clubs for keeping music of a good order for the people at large,

The Arthur Farwell Community Chorus, formed in the summer, is rehearsing weekly, with Mrs. Gloria Mayne as director.

Miss Margaret Goetz, in the fourth of a course of ten Saturday concerts, gave a program of much merit. The Schoenefeld violin Murteau prize, "Violin and Piano Sonata," was given by Josef Rosenfeld, violinist, and May MacDonald Hope, pianist. It is in three movements and of 34 minutes' duration, equally masterful in violin and piano scores. A great musical conception worked to a poetic conclusion.

John Smallman, baritone, a late arrival from Boston, sang a group of "Three Songs of the West," by Charles W. Cadman; text by Charles Farwell Edson, both of Los Angeles. They were given with dash and discernment as to their text and character. Mr. Smallman's voice is well placed, pleasing in quality and he uses good diction.

Miss Grace James, a soprano of much promise, sang four new songs by Charles W. Cadman, the author at the piano. Mr. Smallman gave a second group, a Terharne number, "Pickaninny," and Crist's group of Chinese Songs, which were greatly enjoyed. This course will include Olga Steeb, pianist; Cherniavsky, violinist, and the Woman's Orchestra, under the skillful baton of Henry Schoenefeld. American composers are represented largely in the programs and a choice coterie of musical people patronize this weekly musical luncheon.

The Music Teachers met September 16th, the first time after their most successful State Assembly here, and they were entertained by splendid reports and a group of piano selections, played by Miss Ida Selby, a young artist of virtuoso timbre. H. D. Mustard gave two groups of songs and several encores, Miss Margaret Ray serving ably at the piano. The association gave a social reception this week at the Fowler Hotel parlors, and Mr. Fanning and Mr. Turpin were the guests of honor. They favored us with several songs and a very spirited talk given by Mr. Fanning. Also drills on community and camp song work, giving us Cohan's new song, "We Will Come Back," eliciting much enthusiasm. Other guests were a company of English entertainers on folk songs in national colors and costumes, with gesticulations peculiar to the song and custom of their day. Refreshments and dancing and games were enjoyed to a late hour.

varied in color and style that one would not likely think it was the product of the same mind. The list of about twenty pieces included soprano, contralto, tenor, baritone and bass songs; piano, and a trio for violin, cello and piano, and several recitations; the poems also written by Mr. Fuller, as he is quite as strong as a litterateur as a composer of music. Singer or pianist, at this concert he was a listener. His numerous artist friends contributed their art to present his works. Mrs. Grace Widney Mabee, in three soprano songs; Evert Woudsma, two tenor songs. Mrs. William Kirtty Chambers in recitations had repeated recalls.

Hague Kinsey, pianist, upon being encored played a third of Fuller authorship. Mrs. Blanche Avicestill Harriman, in contralto songs, being encored, sang other selections. Adolph Dahm-Peterson, baritone, sang in splendid style, with Violet S. Steinman at the piano. Edward J. Brandt, basso, was recalled and sang other selections. The instrumental trio were George Ewing, cello; Alberta Curry Zens, violin; Miss Pauline Allyn Long, general accompanist; Miss Brandt and Mabel Post-Hart, assistant accompanists. The "Romance in le," for trio, was most delightful. The piano selections chosen were works outside the ordinary in construction and showed genius in unfolding the tone and rhythmic mysteries of composition. The artists were of more than local fame and were highly appreciated.

The Matinee Musicale opened their season on their tenth anniversary. A few ambitious ladies met under the enthusiasm of Mrs. Lillian Ballagh and outlined a plan of work for some three or more years. The mother organizer after some years reheld the chair. It has now grown into a splendid woman's club and presents programs of the dignity of excellent professional concert companies. Mrs. Marshall Stookey Anderson, the amiable president, was in the chair and welcomed L. E. Behymer as the principal gentleman guest in a felicitous speech, to which the popular impresario replied in terms of cheer and good will. Mrs. Edith Lillian Clark is program chairman and presented John Smallman, a baritone, who gave in good voice and style the Prologue from "Pagliacci," replying to several well deserved recalls. Later he sang a group in English text by Cadman, Jewell and the Crist "Chinese Mother Goose Rhymes." He was given an oration and won good recognition. The other musical feature was the Stearns-Cregg Trio, violin, cello and piano. They gave Opus 32 (Arensky) in three movements, and "By the Brook" (Boisdeffre), and Widor's "Serenade." Their music was choice in quality and their playing artistically finished. Refreshments were served and social good will soared high. A great season is anticipated, with extra endeavor to make music help to win the war.

GARY, INDIANA

At a musicale at Gary, Ind., given by Clara Edmunds-Hemingway in honor of Marian Coryell, recently of New York City, Alice Geer Ferguson, a favorite soprano, gave two beautiful song groups. "Springtime" (newly published), and "It Is Enough for Me," (MS) both songs of Miss Coryell's newer work, with the composer at the piano, followed by a French song, and "Isn't It True?" (Browning-White), words by Mrs Ferguson. The composer was also accompanist.

Mrs. E. M. Pripps, contralto sang a fine Ms. song, also by Mrs. White, "I think When I Read That Sweet Story of Old," and Tosti's "Good-Bye." Both songs were charmingly rendered.

Miss Coryell gave a brilliant rendition of a Liszt "Rhapsody" and responded to the encore with more clever numbers from her "Cynthia Series," which had to be repeated.

Mrs. Hemingway, contralto, also gave a delightful group of Coryell songs, "There Is a Medlar Tree," "Li'l' Brown Berry" and "Dreamlandway."

Miss Coryell, Mrs. White, Mrs. Ferguson and Mrs. Hemingway are all ex-presidents of the Gary Musical Club. The seventeen guests included Eva L. Odell Diedell, the new president, and the new and old boards.

"Isn't It True?" words by Mrs. Ferguson (Browning-White), was given a beautiful rendition by Alice Geer-Ferguson at a recent Gary musicale. The composer was at the piano.

Clara Edmunds-Hemingway used "Isn't It True?" with most telling effect as an encore at a musicale at the home of Rev. F. E. Walton (Gary) September 20.

THE SONG AND THE SOLDIER

By HELEN M. BENNETT

Editor's Note.—The following article, which is not only a beautiful story but which should serve also as propaganda for a wonderfully fine cause—one appealing specifically to musicians, is given this place of honor out of compliment to the Boys in France, no less than to those workers both in France and America who are looking after their welfare.

Victrolas and bagpipes, pianos and songs are helping to win this war just as surely as are the khaki clad men in the trenches, the machine guns with their deadly content, or the aviators circling high in the air in their unbelievable battles above the clouds.

Soldiers sing. Women toiling in the munition plants in France grasp eagerly at the noon hour relief when in the Blue Triangle Foyers of the Y. W. C. A. they can listen to the victrola or to some one-time professional, now a factory worker, drawing dulcet strains from the piano or violin. The second line of defense in this country also sings. Boys in camp ask for musical instruments and sheet music. Glee clubs and banjo clubs spring into life before one realizes that the social spirit is abroad in the camp. And back in the quiet home towns, in the little cities and villages scattered far apart, but close in interest because of their boys over there, the older people and children get out their song books which the War Camp Community Service has issued and gather together for a community sing. Never was a war so vocal. The allied troops sing each other's songs. American boys with a French accent so newly born that it is unrecognizable shout the Marseillaise, and the French respond with their own version of our national anthem, singing vigorously "Le Drapeau Etoile."

At the Blue Triangle Foyers such as those at Lyons and Feysin, every kind of music is popular, but perhaps none more so than that of the victrola and the phonograph. At these foyers thousands of women employed in the munition plants find rest and recreation in the long evenings and the two-hour noon period. It is even said that when they are too tired to leave their rooms they lie close to the open windows so that they may listen to the phonograph down in the foyer. Old and young alike are cheered by it. The children line up in rows outside to hear the music. And one dirty, unkept little French baby, happily curious, ventures in and walks round and round the box looking for the "Petit Oiseau." The grandmothers love to stop at the door on their way back to the plant after the noontide rest, and say:

"The music—it makes us work with better courage."

Sometimes when the phonograph has given place to a singer or an artist on the violin or piano—for talent is given freely these days—the old women with lightened faces sigh appreciatively:

"Ca sort ennui."

Energetic young girls lead the community singing at these centers and want to learn the English words of Tipperary, or gather around the piano to beg for dance music. The magnificent French patriotic songs of the day always attract instant attention, and the women and girls gather quickly about the young American woman at the piano who leads in the singing of Le Reve Passe, the Hymne des Aviatours, or the Marseillaise. And it is not uncommon to hear the group singing the Star Spangled Banner in two languages.

Everything is wanted. Other people's music and one's own. The solo work of artists and the community voice of the workers. Often the soloists come from the workers themselves, for, just as men whose voices were known wherever grand opera was sung went readily and bravely into the army to fight, so women musicians, singers, pianists and violinists have joined the great ranks of the women making shells and bombs. Here is a woman who once in evening clothes and jewels with exquisitely coiffed hair and daintily kept hands charmed Parisian audiences as a pianiste. Now she walks wearily from the plant, her rough men's clothes hanging on her small frame, her hands roughened and discolored from work, her nails broken and stained. But there is a hush when she sits at the piano, and her today audience listens as breathlessly as did those of the gay pre-war times.

There is an interesting catholicity of taste in music both at the front and in the factories and here at home in the camps. This is not because there are such divers kind of people represented in each group, but because every man in the trenches and in the camp and every woman in the munition plant feels a distinct need for all sorts of music. Classic and popular, modern up-to-date stuff, and old favorites are all welcomed by everyone. The big man down near the front at one of the camp concerts who reveled sensitively in the rendering of some delicate evanescent child songs by M. Allin, one of the modern French composers, was one of the first to lift up his voice and hammer lustily with the crowd on "K-k-k-Katy," and then call for The Long, Long Trail or even Love's Old Sweet Song.

The songs of Elsie Janis and Harry Lauder, the

WHEN HE STARTED THE VICTROLA

IN FRANCE. BEFORE AMERICA'S ARRIVAL IN FRANCE THIS ROOM HAD BEEN USED BY FRENCH TROOPS AS A BARRACKS. IT IS NOW A Y. M. C. A. CANTEEN FOR OUR BOYS hymns of the church, the patriot anthems of different lands, the sentimental ballads of London and New York, the real music of the ages; for all of these the soldier boy longs and in all of them does he find his satisfaction. In his group are always to be met musicians and actors and entertainers, who work with the War Camp Community Service in organizing choral societies, glee clubs, and the college boy's old friend, the mandolin and banjo club.

Already the French have translated a number of our songs into their own language. The Star Spangled Banner was of course one of the first to appear in that dress. Particularly successful has been the version of Julia Ward Howe's stirring Battle Hymn of the Republic, which in the French version marches on with the same stately tread as in the original. They say that in order fully to appreciate it one must hear the French themselves singing—

"Mon Dieu, il marche en avant."

It is said that on city streets even at night, and when crime and trouble are rife, the police never stop or suspect a man who goes whistling or singing on his way. He who has crime in his heart does not come singing. And perhaps when this war has been won, as it surely shall be soon, the world will know that singing men and women, ivory piano keys and violin strings, and even music in a box helped in the winning.

PASSING COMMENT

In an article in the Des Moines Capital under the caption of "School Song Books Loaded Down With Songs of Germany," Dr. M. L. Bartlett makes the following statements:

"Mr. Miller, who represents the Soldiers' Fathers' League, has asked me to make a report of the number of German songs to be found in the series of music books adopted for use in our public schools.

"This series of music readers is entitled 'The Lyric Series,' and, if I mistake not, was adopted in our city schools about three years ago. I have known for a long time that music books formerly used in our schools were threaded through and through with German songs that sung the praises of Germany, and I have always fought against it. I had not thoroughly examined the series of music books now in use in our schools until yesterday.

"I have read Superintendent Thornburg's letter ordering the teachers to cut out 'The Watch on the Rhine.' He could have gone much further. My examination of the first, second and third readers reveals the fact that the first reader contains 26 German songs; the second reader, 34; the third reader, 45, making in all 96 songs of distinctly German origin. Some of these songs have the name of the composer, while others are noted under the head of 'German Tune,' 'German Air,' 'German Melody,' 'German Folk Tune,' 'From the German.' Some of the words have been composed to the music, while other words are translated from the German.

Very Little American Music

"I notice upon examination that neither England, France, Italy nor Russia is represented with their national airs, while Germany is so represented. Music of other nations than our own fills up the larger part of the books, such, for instance, as Scandinavian, Russian, Hungarian, Polish, Bohemian, Turkish, with a sprinkling of French and English.

"I take the liberty to quote the words of two German songs taken from the third reader, pages 88 and 89:

"MY FATHERLAND"

Franz Abt

The home of storied castles old—
All hail the land,
Of noble warriors strong and bold—
My Fatherland!

Refrain:

Spread from snow-clad Alpine land
Sloping to the Baltic strand,
Heroes' land, My Fatherland.

To you the peaceful arts belong,
My Fatherland.
The crown of tho't, the crown of song,
My Fatherland.

To you we trust our future fair,
My Fatherland.
The Father's hand shall guide us there,
My Fatherland.

"THE PATRIOT"
German Folk Tune

Second Verse:

By thus consecrated
By vows I'll abide,
To cherish e'er the country
Where patriots lived and died.

Fourth Verse:

May strength never fail me,
Of heart or of hand,
To live, or die, if need be,
For my dear Fatherland.

"These words are repeated over and over again to conform to the form of the music and to reinforce the sentiment.

"Draw your own conclusions."

Musicians certainly have had a lot of things to contend with the past year, and now, just as there seemed to be a widening rift in the cloud, the epidemic of influenza, with its attendant closing of all theaters and concert halls, has entailed a fresh list of disappointments and a heavy financial loss.

However, the indications in general are that this season as a whole is destined to be vastly better all around than was the last one, and musicians, proverbially hopeful and optimistic, will simply screw their courage up another notch and wait as patiently as possible for things to readjust themselves, hoping that in the weeks to come all the disappointments of the past few weeks will be turned into resounding successes.

In response to the criticism of several persons on our leading editorial of two weeks ago, in which they claimed that we used the word "diction" incorrectly, we can only refer them to Webster's Unabridged to prove that we were exactly right and that diction means "choice of words," and not their enunciation, as is so often stated by voice teachers.

Music News is glad to announce that Charles Lagourgue, director of La Chorale Francaise de Chicago, is taking charge of Le Courrier Musical of Paris as music critic and representative for Chicago. Le Courrier Musical is the foremost musical review in France, and among the contributors we read such names as Dukas, Erlanger, G. Faure, Vincent D'Indy, Saint-Saens and many other famed musicians. No finer choice of a representative could have been made.

The announcement of the birth of a daughter on October 4 to Mr. and Mrs. I. Willard Rockey carries with it more than passing interest to the musicians of Chicago, inasmuch as Mrs. Rockey is no one less, professionally, than Mme. Gilderoy Scott, the contralto. The host of musical friends she has made since she came to Chicago rejoice with her and Mr. Rockey.

Early last week there came to Music News office news of the very fine work which was being done by Jasper Ffrench, son of Mrs. Florence Ffrench, and of his recent promotion to the position as instructor in "stunts" at the aviation camp at West Point, Miss., where it was stated he had prepared hundreds of young "flyers" for service overseas and where he had at the beginning of last week a current class of 300 flying pupils.

This item was printed in Music News in the first form of the last issue, but before the last form went to press word had been received in Chicago of the sudden death in the field of young Mr. Ffrench, and notice of this went also in the same issue carrying the article written earlier.

But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint.

Isaiah 40:31.

Jasper Ffrench was a brilliant personality, and at the age of twenty-three had reached a success which presaged a remarkable career. The sympathy of the entire musical fraternity has gone out to Mrs. Ffrench in a peculiarly whole-hearted way, and her loss is keenly sensed by the many who know her and those who knew young Mr. Ffrench. And while they sympathize with her in her loss, they feel, even as she probably feels also, that if death must needs claim the young man at all, it was a glorious thing that it should come while he was in the midst of faithful service to his country.

In a recent conversation with Blanche Slocum, who recently appeared in debut recital at Orchestra Hall, some very interesting points were brought out.

"In his criticism in the Journal," said Miss Slocum, "Mr. Moore stated that Germany had been the land of my choice for music study. Far from this being true, I want to tell you that I am so staunch an American and believe so fully that some of the best teachers in the world are at work here in Chicago that nothing could have given me greater pleasure than to prepare for my career right here in the home city.

"But the attitude of the American public itself forced me to go abroad to study.

"My special predilection was for Wagner operas, and I would vastly have preferred to have prepared and sung these in English. But before the war, as you well know, the American public would not listen to Wagner in anything but German.

"Therefore the study abroad.

"But, as a matter of fact, my first choice was Paris, and I remained there for many months before I finally came to the conclusion that the real German pronunciation could be best learned in Berlin itself.

"Now that the war has put a taboo on German text, all my study of the Wagner operas in German has become useless. But if, after the war, my own countrymen will accept opera in their own language, and will give me a chance to sing Wagner and other opera in English, I shall not regret any of the sacrifice.

"And," continued Miss Slocum, "speaking of the obsession of Americans for hearing opera in any and every language rather than their own, I am reminded of an evening I spent at Ravinia Park some years ago, when an opera was being given in Italian and all the cast were native Italians excepting one lone American who did his best to sing the Italian language but who, being at a very distinct disadvantage, did not, of course, do it as well as the Italians.

"Did he get any sympathy from his countrymen in the audience? Not a bit of it. They simply laughed at him and ridiculed him for not being able to sing Italian as well as the others.

"Can you imagine a reversal of this circumstance in Italy, with Americans singing English at the opera house and one lone Italian being laughed at because he could not make good in that text?"

TO A VIOLONCELLO PLAYED BY HANS HESS

Passion thou art, thou thing of strings,
Thy wood-wrought casement swells and rings
With Soul on fire
That knows no higher
Art to express thy wanderings.

I think my soul lies hidden there
Within thy senseless form somewhere,
Thou hast such feelings—yet, ah yet
Thou dost not tear thy heart and fret.
Even as mine own heart is torn,
Bleeding with rapture, wan and worn
With ecstasy
To list to thee,
Straining up to the heights to win
When Hans Hess plays thee, Violin!

GEORGE CHRISTIAN STUCKER.

MORGAN KINGSTON AIDS THE LIBERTY LOAN

Morgan Kingston, Welsh tenor, of the Metropolitan Grand Opera, stirred big crowds at Liberty Loan campaign meetings and sang to thousands on the steps of the Subtreasury building. He sang "My Boy," by Bruno Huhn, and "Keep the Home Fires Burning," after which Mr. Kingston was conducted through the vaults of the Subtreasury to see the billions of gold collected there—a truly wonderful sight.

Mr. Kingston also sang for the Liberty Loan at Thirty-ninth street and Fifth avenue, for the Army and Navy Club, and on Friday for the Stage Women's War Relief on the steps of the Public Library, Forty-second street.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON STUDIO NOTES

Mr. Witherspoon has completed arrangements with Dr. Arthur Mees to coach pupils in oratorio. This will be a welcome and interesting piece of news to vocal students, as Dr. Mees is probably in a class by himself in this branch of the education of the singer. Dr. Mees is well known as one of the most learned musicians in America and is the conductor of the Worcester Festival and of musical clubs in Bridgeport and New Jersey.

Arrangements have also been completed with William J. Henderson, the well-known critic of the New York Sun, to lecture to the pupils of the Witherspoon Studios during February and March.

Dr. Mees will also give a series of lectures beginning October 30, and in addition to these two gentlemen Mr. Witherspoon will give a series of ten talks and musicales during the season.

Jacques Coini's class in acting will commence the end of October, as also the class of George Wedge in sight-reading and analysis.

HENRY B. RONEY

In the new and very interesting circular which Mr. Roney is sending out in announcement of the opening of his new studio at 633 Fine Arts Building, Mr. Roney treats of many subjects, including "Beauty of the Child Voice," "The Greatest Boy Singer," "Remarkable Voices Among Girls" and "Pageantry and Music Festivals," as well as the items connected with the practical conduct of the studio.

Under the head of "Unfounded Traditions," Mr. Roney has the following sensible suggestion:

"There is no basis whatever for the tradition one occasionally hears that 'girls should not be allowed to sing until they are 16 years of age, nor boys until after change of voice.' Where such an idea started no one knows. It is repeated from mouth to mouth by people with no knowledge of the subject, has not a shadow of foundation in practical experience, and has been disproved again and again. An incompetent instructor who does not understand the peculiarity and delicacy of children's voices can work harm to any voice, be it child's or adult's. Children's voices are never stationary. The rapid growth and development at that age of throat, larynx, vocal chords, diaphram, chest—of every organ which contributes to vocal tone, requires incessant watchfulness on the part of the teacher. In the case of the boy voice and its physiological change at about 14 years (due to the growth and thickening of the vocal chords), the need of care is still greater."

CHICAGO ARTISTS' ASSOCIATION

The initial program for the Artists' Association attracted a very large attendance to Recital Hall, Fine Arts Building. William Lester sponsored it and the participants gave of their best endeavor. It was a well pleased and gratulatory assemblage which dissolved in the late afternoon. To Ruth M. Freeman fell the honor of the first number, the G Minor Ballade of Chopin, done with taste and discrimination. Her associate in piano literature was Mae Doelling, who chose the Schumann "Symphonic Etudes" as the vehicle for expression. For some reason the printed program attributed the music to Chopin, possibly an outward deference to the intrepid Mrs. John Jay and her followers. This gigantic work is in the repertoire of every artist and admired so fully by them that it is a bold radical who, at this late day, questions the labors of love expended on it. It may be compared to the Thiele Variations which organists do so roundly attune. Each of these requires intelligence first in their unfolding and thus repay the intense study demanded. But the supplementary excellencies are expected of enormous technic, every shade of tone color, exacting poise and acumen of most severe vein and the power to illuminate hidden meanings that can seldom seem obvious. Miss Doelling has always stood so high in this writer's estimation that he finds inward satisfaction as a rule in what she offers. She brought a wealth of resource to the unfolding, was sumptuous and convincing to a degree and stood any standard of measurement that could be applied. But even she with all her superability, charm and competency couldn't change a long conviction that the work is padded.

Lillian Pringle, the cellist, used another of the large forms, the Boellman Variations Symphonic. These are readily convincing, interesting and musically enjoyable. Miss Pringle came to a first hearing, for this writer, and recorded a thoroughly good impression. She has a power quite unusual in lady 'cellists—her outstanding vigor and fervor remaining distinct in memory. But she is facile and fleet as well, with a sense for lovely shading and an earnestness which will carry her far. Besides the Boellman, she dashed off, spiritedly, a Popper "Tarantelle," Friml's "Spanish Dance" and Van Coen's "Scherzo," which unfortunately I did not hear. Her reception was cordial and the applause urgent. Louise Harrison Slade gave a group which accented her sense of the dramatic and aroused a moment of wonder why she had not found herself in opera. She made the "Che Faro" an opulent mass of splendid tone, bringing shades of vivid intensity into the phrases of the longing Orpheus seeking his mate. Rachmaninoff's "The Lord Is Risen" is big and rousing in its appeal, with wide emotional demands to make it effective. It touched a very high water mark in the afternoon under Mrs. Slade's remarkable delivery. John Alden Carpenter's "Khaki Sammy" went over the top, as the English say, "rippingly." That's the only way to describe how Mrs. Slade did it or how the audience insisted on a repetition, even better done.

The other vocalist was Albert Borroff. If he will not take offense at comments about age, the sincerest compliment that can be paid is that his voice and purity of style are even more admirable than they were twenty years ago. He has put into practice his theories of teaching, and the voice, always rich and mellow, has suffered no hurt. It is warm and pulsating with feeling, he never frets it, but it never fails to give the right inflection. And his taste and deftness in projection are masterly. He made glowing the impassioned phrases of the Israelite in a Dvorak Biblical song, and was blithe and merry in the Bantock "Jester Song," while ingratiatingly went Lehman's "Brother Sunshine." For encore he put over a cheerful bit of Elderly Person philosophy about now being a better time than yesterday or tomorrow.

All through the afternoon Isaac Van Grove did those things with the accompaniments which make for severe satisfaction. His name on a program carries its own weight and authority. There is no need to specify—it was all good and is always good.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

Foerster—Adolph M. Foerster's cycle of Greek Love Songs, Opus 63, were sung by Miss Mary V. Cunningham at Pittsburgh with excellent success. They were entitled, "Time's Revenges," "Love in the Wine," "The Light of Love," "Bittersweet," "Rekindling the Flame," "Purity of Love," "Kiss Within the Cup," "After the Revel," "Love Aflame." The intensely dramatic "Love Aflame" was redemanded. This cycle was sung recently in Paris, France, in a series of American songs.

ST. CHRYSOSTOM'S

Curtailment of all religious services on last Sunday was the direct result of the influenza epidemic, and the rule of the day was strictly observed at St. Chrysostom's, where, however, there was a good congregation and where the music was up to the standard self-imposed by Emory Gallup, choirmaster and organist, upon himself and his singers.

It is now so well known a fact that Mr. Gallup depends upon women and men for his singing instead of boys that the novelty of the situation has waned, but it remains true, nevertheless, that this arrangement is proving to be an ideal one and that the singing at St. Chrysostom's is far above the average of Episcopal churches of the city.

The service numbers on last Sunday morning, though fewer than usual, were sung with rare intelligence and definiteness of musical as well as ecclesiastical values, and the hymns were remarkable indeed for their vigor and their beauty.

Immediately following the processional, which was excellently managed, the choir, standing before the Star Spangled Banner and the Allied Flags, sang "America" with such fervor and emotional beauty as to make it notable.

Mr. Gallup skillfully colored each line and indicated wonderfully well the stress moments, the contrasts and climaxes, and when the line "God save the state" was reached there came, coincident with it, a burst of such genuine patriotic feeling as to fairly thrill all who heard.

Mr. Gallup has not a large organ to deal with at this church, but it is one of splendid tone, and he uses it wonderfully well.

This was shown in the superlative degree in the offertory anthem, which was a new American work and which, especially in the accompaniment, was remarkable to the last degree.

The work bears the unique title "Seek Him That Maketh the Seven Stars," and it is by James Rogers.

A solidly built but quiet first part introduced the full choir in beautifully sustained and modulated harmony of easily understood but positively original conception, broken for a brief but very grateful moment by an outspoken little soprano solo, admirable in its presentation, by Maude Lewis.

The second theme of the anthem rises to something of stress and is quite dramatic in tonal massing, but shortly gives way to a repetition of the first idea, presented this time sans solo, but still with the insistent beauty of tonality and movement.

Throughout there was a wonderful undercurrent of harmony and strength as well as flashes of color and sentiment, supplied most skillfully by the organ.

In a word, Mr. Gallup has made a "find" in this anthem, and in its preparation and presentation on last Sunday again showed those qualities of good judgment, musicianship and artistry which have always marked his incumbency of the position at St. Chrysostom's.

SACRAMENTO BOULEVARD M. E. CHURCH

The constant movement toward the west of the center of population of the West Side of Chicago has been responsible the past few years for the abandonment of many churches which once held a prominent place there.

The latest victim of this geographical phenomenon is the giving up by its old-time congregation of the Park Avenue M. E. Church at Robey Street and Park Avenue and the amalgamation with the Sacramento Boulevard M. E. Church, which is situated a mile or more to the westward.

This means the substitution of a rather indeterminate (as to value) organ for the remarkably fine toned Roosevelt which has been used at Park Avenue, but, fortunately, H. W. Owens, who has made so great a reputation and record as choir director at the older church, has been retained and will direct the music in the newer place.

The service of last Sunday evening, though a part of the first day under the new arrangement and still further hampered by influenza inroads, was yet very satisfactory from most standpoints and gave promise that when all the forces have been fully amalgamated the usual Owens results may be looked for.

At present the weak spot is the organist, who will, perhaps, be able to come up to a more authoritative and correct playing of chorus accompaniments when she has had a little more rehearsal.

The two numbers heard from the well chosen and quite well balanced chorus (perhaps forty voices) were "Lead, Kindly Light" (Hugh Evans) and "The Heavens Are Telling" (Creation), the first being distinctly best because of the ragged accompaniment furnished the Haydn number.

In the Evans piece there was solidity of tone, carefulness of accent and phrase and a general excellence in reading which made it a striking number.

Mr. Owens, always alert and successful in chorus manipulation, made a fine impression on the new congregation and it was easy to be seen that in this church he will add one more to his long list of West Side church successes.

There are only a few men who can draw the necessary singers to make a successful choir in any church, and still fewer who can mold the miscellaneous material into a fine ensemble—but Mr. Owens has proven in at least three Chicago churches that he can accomplish both these desirable ends and, further, that he can present programs of the widest significance as well as musical excellence.

There were two solo numbers given also on Sunday night, these being "Consider and Hear Me" (Wooler), William Turner, and "Fear Ye Not, O Israel" (Dudley Buck) by Mary Wood.

Miss Wood has a fine and resonant soprano with a thoroughly satisfactory control of shading and nuance, and these items, in connection with excellent musicianship and fine style, have made her already a singer whose work is always received with enthusiasm and which gives big promise for the future.

Mr. Turner is a young baritone who is just leaving for Government service. He has a good natural voice and style and on his return will find it worth while to take up the study of music seriously.

CHARLOTTE PENDRY

Miss Charlotte Pendry of the faculty of the Centralizing School of Music is a striking example of success resulting entirely from American training. Although she spent some time in Europe and investigated the leading studios, she was convinced of the superiority of the training she had received in Chicago and returned to the city to continue her studies and demonstrate the practicability of her instruction.

Miss Pendry is a young woman of charming personality, with a mind keenly alive to educational values that are enduring and a sense of humor that makes vivid illustration possible. She has an enviable patronage in the city of Chicago and in Hinsdale, one of the most progressive near-by suburbs. She has a rare sense of perception, which enables her to strike the keynote of the student's need and furnish the necessary suggestion for progress. Her enthusiasm is contagious, her courage indomitable, and her life is an inspiration to all who come in contact with her.

Sullivan—Eugene Sullivan, tenor, Milwaukee, has been Community Song Leader at the Empire in that city for the last four months and has scored an unusual success in work which has proved very congenial to his talents. With his sister, Miss Josephine Sullivan, soprano, he will appear in duets at the first concert of the Symphony Orchestra. The Sullivans have offered to give every available open date to singing for the sailors and soldiers, work they have been doing for months and in which they are exceptionally successful.

Trevisan—Vittorio Trevisan, baritone, is on tour with the Chicago Opera Association, singing in "La Tosca" and "The Barber of Seville." He will return to Chicago November 3 with the company, and will sing in a number of different operas during the season, including "The Barber," "Tosca," "La Boheme" and others.

His studio at 904 Kimball Hall is a popular place, and he may be found there when not in rehearsal with the opera.

CONSTANCE BALFOUR

Miss Constance Balfour, whose likeness is shown on the cover page of Music News today, is an American singer whose work will very shortly bring her into the greatest prominence

Miss Balfour is a Western girl whose early successes in this country were marked and who in Europe made such advances in her art that at the beginning of the war she had sung in many important events and was in line for some of the finest operatic positions afforded in the Old World.

Returning to America because of unsettled conditions in Europe, she went first to the Pacific Coast and there scored one great success after another with the leading Symphony Orchestras and other large musical bodies of that section.

Going to New York something over a year ago, she at once stepped into prominence, and during the past season, as detailed in Music News, she made a series of successful appearances and won a large following of enthusiastic supporters.

Her plans for the future, soon to be told in detail in this paper, are very important and it is only a question of a short time until the name of Constance Balfour has become a household word throughout America.

ANNA M. TOMLINSON

We have all been taught that music is made up of three great ideas or parts, viz., rhythm, melody and harmony, but when we come to study the reproduction of this music on any instrument Miss Anna Tomlinson says we must say rhythm, melody, harmony and technic, and in her normal classes, of which she held five in Chicago and one in Minneapolis this summer, she almost says "the greatest of these" is technic.

Of course, Miss Tomlinson means technic in its broad, modern sense, which not only aims for all possible development and control of the playing apparatus from the physical standpoint, but also applies that to the instrument itself. She takes every action of finger, movement of wrist, arm weight, relaxation, etc., into correlation with the tone it produces, thus giving us beautiful melodies with properly balanced accompaniments and all possible shades of tone coloring and dynamic effects. She shows how the proper physical control and the mental conception of its application gives a medium of interpretation, enabling one to express what his soul feels and hears in such a manner that others, listening, may also feel and hear the same story. Her correspondence with teachers who have studied her "Forty Lessons on Hand Development" and "Music Analyzed Technically and Interpretatively" is voluminous and full of praise and gratitude for the great benefit and pleasure it has brought the teacher, not only with her pupils' work, but also in the surprising advancement and development of their individual playing and musical feeling.

Miss Tomlinson introduces technic in the very first lesson, but, again contrary to custom, does it immediately at the keyboard. She says she has learned by experience of teaching many children of various ages that any one begins music on account of his love for the tones he can get or a curiosity regarding the instrument and to confine the pupil at once to paper or table work only quenches the eager enthusiasm, and when persisted in in many cases brings about an absolute distaste for music lessons. Of course every teacher knows how necessary the staff drills and finger development away from the piano are, but until the pupil himself sees the need and has become so enamored with his instrument as to be willing to "drudge" at the pencil and table work it is useless to present it. So the first lessons deal with the keyboard and its color scheme of black and white, its tone possibilities of harsh, soft, loud, gay or sad, etc. The pupil is encouraged to investigate and discover these things for himself and after this has been done at the beginning of music study he will have no trouble later with Nuance or Dynamics and the simplest piece or exercise will have a real musical appeal.

The following extracts from letters will indicate some of the special work Miss Tomlinson's normal classes cover, which is supplemented in private lessons:

I have a very large class this season and have a number of small children writing melodies as you suggested and I am truly surprised at the interest they are taking in the writing and the results I am getting with them.—Miss Alice Roe, Arthur, Ill., December 16, 1917.

Your new way of working out things is much better than I have ever seen them.—Orwin D. Shaffer, Danville, Ill., November 28, 1915.

My class is quite large this fall and the work I obtained from you is invaluable. The little folks are very fond of the poems and grasp the thought so readily. I can't tell you how much I enjoyed the summer with you and appreciated your interest in me. I only hope I may be able to come again.—Mabel Coleman, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, November 28, 1915. (Miss Coleman not only came again, but also this summer brought an advanced pupil with her and both went home enthused with their summer's study.)

All this day I have been thinking of you and your wonderful method of developing a piano hand. I must say that any teacher of piano who ever expects to teach beginners or children will find invaluable ideas in your talks and the use of technic as taught by you or outlined in your book, "Forty Lessons."—Irene M. Carroll, Youngstown, Ohio, November 14, 1917.

I have had such wonderful success with memorizing since returning home. Your very clever system, so simple and to the point, gets results. My reading at sight is also improving rapidly since I am learning to see groups and reading ahead. No wonder I was having trouble formerly trying to figure out each note separately!—W. A. Jokowsky, La Salle, Ill., July 26, 1917.

I have studied your books daily and have found so much I thought I knew but didn't! It is a revelation each time I open them to study again. The summer with you improved Vesta so marvelously. She played her Mozart splendidly in recital.—Mrs. J. T. Brown, Chelsea, Okla., February 5, 1918.

Have been going over the things you gave in class this last summer, where I found myself listening to you in amazement. Such really splendid things you have accomplished since we were in Vienna together. You have so thoroughly mastered the theoretical side of music, which explains your phenomenal success which you so richly deserve.—Mrs. J. William Carroll, Waco, Tex., December 21, 1917.

The foregoing program was under way when I reached the Whitney Tew Studios Sunday afternoon. Miss Werra Schuette had already sung a deep contralto song by Spohr, "Bright Star of Night," and the familiar Traviata Aria, which I am told she embellished with a high F in altissimo at the close.

Several debutantes showed the same loyalty and earnest devotion to the principle of the great art which Mr. Tew is gradually developing, which is the characteristic note of these studios.

Being familiar, through over two years of observation of Mr. Tew's marvelous teaching, with the jealousy of this teacher in guarding the idea that the principle involved in the amazing results is not "his" method, I must choose my words carefully in reviewing the work.

It cannot be summed up in usual terms and the familiar phraseology. They do not fit the case. The tone, the pronunciation, the interpretation, the feeling seem to come from a different source than one usually detects—there is an apparent ignoring of individual self—this seems lost in the motive to reveal the art itself as the thing of first importance. There is, therefore, in the work of beginners a completeness which is wanting altogether in those deficiencies one notices in the early stages of the average vocal student.

Tone is always heard, resonant, free, delicate; yet invariably the impression reaches the hearer that there is reserve power for the occasion when it comes.

The pronunciation in every case is clear as crystal and enunciated without effort.

Mr. John Alcott sang a high B natural in the cadenza at the end of "Rolling in Foaming Billows," from the Creation, which he delivered with a full resonant bass. He afterwards sang with the utmost delicacy the last of Maude Valerie White's "Three Little Songs," revealing powers of vocalization which I have never before heard. His "Ruddier Than the Cherry," with the ringing top G at the finish, was a revelation.

Mme. Colbran-Melius, who is announced to give a recital in the Tew Studios on the evening of the 29th, was particularly forceful in the big Tschaikowsky aria, and showed the high attainment of the pianissimo with full voice in her second number. A little more animation in facial expression will give her work more telling effect.

Mrs. John A. Alcott sang a fine song by Granville Bantock in a big contralto, rich in color, in which the pathos and despair of the text were easily revealed. Her second number she did with really exquisite grace of phrasing and worked a brilliant climax with a powerful D in altissimo.

Miss Dorothy Wood maintained the traditions of the old Italian "method," not sacrificing power when needed, but using her resources to support the pure tone.

Miss Pauline Bernstein shows steadily increasing volume and an enhanced quality in her lovely voice through gaining in breath control. Miss Elna Fredeen's tone is of an impressively beautiful character. Miss Bergstrom's manner is very attractive and puts her hearers immediately in her favor, and Miss Ardath Johnson showed none of the customary nervousness of the first attempt.

The older pupils steadily press towards a high mark.

It is difficult to write of this work without using terms which appear extravagant. One is never left cold, but always interested. The conventional feeling of boredom associated with the grim necessity of modern society to listen to pupils' recitals is unknown, and would be, I imagine, even to the most inert and blase critic.

Mrs. Alcott, Miss Wood, Miss Schuette, and others sang several numbers at the request of guests, and a few who lingered until after the program was finished were privileged to hear Mr. Tew, whose singing justified the utmost which could be claimed for the superiority of the natural principles which he advocates so untiringly and in every way successfully.

Mr. Tew chooses from the best musical literature, and arranges his programs in artistic contrasts, very little hackneyed material being used. The coloratura repertoire seems to be somewhat restricted, but Miss d'Oex stepped out of the usual rut in bringing forward the Berloiz aria, which she delivered with a tone of great volume and purity, the difficult rhythm being carefully maintained. She shows a marked improvement in linguistry.

One point noticeable in the distinctive and thorough work of this studio is the entire absence of straining for effects. If high notes are used, and many are, which soar far higher than any produced by the leading singers, they are never conspicuous; they are controlled, always full and pure, but never forced.

Perhaps the highest tribute which may be paid to an able teacher is the comment upon the freedom from any suspicion of affection, and the absence of cheap music designed to tickle the ear or appeal to false sentiment.

Miss Harriet Cartwright and Miss Lucy Levy accompanied with their usual tact and efficiency.

MUSIC IN CLEVELAND

Italian Benefit Concert

The Lovers of Italy, a society forming a large factor in Cleveland's interesting cosmopolitan life, negotiated a most successful concert on Sunday, October 13. The proceeds, resulting from a capacity house sale of Hippodrome seats, were added to by the stupendous sale of favors achieved by the pretty daughters of Italy in the lobby. Following the festivities of Friday and Saturday, Sunday was the climax of a great time for the Italians, and their exhilaration was something spectacular indeed. They were proud to be Italians and they were proud to listen to their own Pasquale Amato as he sang Italian songs.

Guiseppe Bamboschek accompanied Signor Amato and was to accompany Signorina Claudio Muzio, had she been able to attend. Eddy Brown was, of course, no less warmly welcomed than the artists of Latin origin, while it so happened that another American was to take her place on the program unexpectedly. Having just heard of Signorina Muzio's illness with influenza, Signor Amato was entering the Hippodrome when he chanced to meet Miss Lila P. Robeson, a Clevelander, and one of his confreres in the Metropolitan Opera Company, and at his request Miss Robeson graciously consented to sing. Charles T. Ferry, the composer, accompanied her.

Eddy Brown had not been heard in Cleveland recently, so his numbers produced a feeling of overjoyed surprise. Throughout, he played delicately, and though he was sprightly enough, as in the lightning intricacies of the Paganini Caprice, there was ever that easy, ministering gentleness that is so essentially Eddy Brown. His playing is unusually free from loose, foreign noises. The more singing passages had an almost whistling quality, while one felt that there was more music in his very pizzicato than in the sustained notes of many another violinist. His needed background was well supplied by Max Terr at the piano.

In addition to his vocal eminence, Signor Amato's dramatic interpretation charms anew with every performance. One thinks longingly of his former days, to be sure, but he is still to be enjoyed and cherished as one of our first singers. He was literally forced to sing two encores after his second number.

The program follows, with the substitution of Miss Robeson's (impromptu) program for that of Muzio's. And be it said that Lila Robeson may well look forward to a surpassingly successful season. Her rapid notes are worthy of comment for being so thoroughly and clearly intoned and yet possessing a newly gained lightness and freedom, the more remarkable for belonging to so large a voice. Program:

Larghetto ..... Handel
Rondino ..... Cramer-Brown
Hebrew Melody and Dance ..... Eddy Brown
Eddy Brown
Prologue from I Pagliacci ..... Leoncavallo
Signor Amato
Blind Woman's Song from La Gioconda ..... Ponchielli

ADVENTURES IN PAGEANTRY

An Account of H. J. Smyth's Work in Cleveland

War almost always hastens natural, inevitable movements, and under war conditions the community chorus idea has grown into a veritable institution and is prophetic of interesting developments. Mr. Harper Garcia Smyth is its exponent in Cleveland, Ohio. His official capacity is that of supervisor of music on the Extension Board of the public schools, probably the only office of its kind in the country. Working with the War Board, and the Board of Public Parks, Mr. Smyth produced a brilliant pageant last June, and has written and planned another for October 23.

The rising ground about Wade Park lake forms a spacious amphitheatre where pyrotechnic displays have often been given. Mr. Smyth's consuming idea is to utilize the opportunity for the production of something not only spectacular but impressive, and pregnant with meaning, ideas and patriotic inspiration. This can best be done by choral singing, coupled with well worked out tableaux. And let us digress a moment to say that he is no novice in song-leading. Harry Barnhart has nothing on him. As far back as the days of Chapman, Harper G. Smyth toured with evangelistic groups and learned that an audience would rather sing than be sung to. He is a genius at making people sing, and for some time past his occasional appearances before the curtain at the Hippodrome have been very popular. He leads the audience in popular war-songs and his results are most commendable. The other people on the bill always notice the increased life in the audience after they have sung together.

To go back to the pageant, twenty-five hundred people, in twelve units, form Mr. Smyth's organized community chorus, meeting weekly, and ready for just such an event as this. There is now a grand stand for them in Wade Park, with a sounding-board at the back, and a space for the fifty-piece orchestra which is used.

Well known songs are employed, together with some new ones written by Mr. Smyth. The chorus, as well as the fifteen hundred performers, are in costume, "for everybody likes to get dolled up, you know; they're all like children, they like to play. We all like to play."

When Cleveland's new municipal auditorium is built Mr. Smyth hopes for some pageants that are important musically. Until then, and as long as all out-of-doors has to be sung into, it's the psychology of the thing that spurs him on, as in Mr. Barnhart's case.

As for Claude Bragdon's counterpart, Cleveland is fortunate in having a Dr. Lucas of the National Lamp Works of the "General Electric." He has arranged foot-lights and flood-lights and spot-lights and searchlights with special attention to the blending of colors. The largest light in the world, four million candle power strong, is lent for the purpose, while two new inventions, red, white and blue prisms for under water effects, and large, disappearing letters, the last Mr. Smyth's own invention, will be used.

Like the spectacular "Everything" in New York, this pageant, "The Supreme Sacrifice" does not rely on the spoken word. Every bit of it is picture and music. Birchard himself, of Boston, is said to have remarked, "Smyth, you've done just what all of us have been trying to do." And from the Federal Reserve has come an urgent request for the standardization of Mr. Smyth's two patriotic pageants subsequent to their production in other cities. May he have continued success.

The Elderly Person

The time to see the adorable Jackies is of a summer Saturday or Sunday night from 10 to 12 at or near the points converging in the Northwestern depot. Trains leave for the Naval station as fast as they fill up, and that is a continuous performance. No one thing more resembles bees and a hive than the big building and the flutter of that white clad youth and energy. All week long the lads work and drudge and march and study in order to obtain that "shore leave" of Saturday and Sunday. If they wear "the blues" they may be gone for thirty-six hours. If "the whites" are used twelve hours is the limit. As a rule they seem to like "the whites." So does nearly every one else, including the Elderly Person. The snug fitting thin blouse and trousers are about all that are between their flesh and daylight. Somehow these bring them bodily close to the onlooker. And the intimacy grows into a desire to embrace them—they seem so full of vitality, vigor, and the irresistible puissance of youthful fire. These "whites," which are so immaculate, have been through much suds and rubbing to make them so. Any day is wash day. In the freedom of shelter it is a jolly good healthy sight to behold the lads, innocent of much raiment, scrubbing and pounding away at this unusual masculine task. They don't spare soap, and the muscles play freely under the shining skin, and the perspiration is on tap. After the garments have gone through the process and every sort of precaution has been taken to pass the dreaded "inspection," there is still a bad two hours or so, on a Saturday morning, waiting to see if they "will get through." Lads who have never known what it was to put away their own clothes, relying on mother to clear up the room so that it will pass domestic inspection, suddenly find that the least particle of untidiness is an infraction of the "regulations" and punishable. To lose the hard worked for "shore leave" because a garment is not perfectly clean or has a button missing or unbuttoned, a boot unpolished or imperfectly laced, the leggins the least bit awry or wrongly put on, the kerchief not properly knotted, or the slightest flaw in makeup of hammock or the neatness of mess dishes grows to be a nightmare. Fellows who have had to be called several times for breakfast bounce out of bed at the first sound of that reveille at 5 a. m. They know by experience that if they delay five minutes, hoping by speed to catch up with the slower ones, that before the day is over they will be put on "dog watch," and that means guard duty from 12 to 4 in the deep, dark night, and that when they turn in at 4, they will have to get up at 5 just the same! It is really too bad that long-suffering mothers should not have the reformed lads at home for a period after these habits are fixed and taste the joy which present immaculate orderliness would inspire. The boys have a song saying "Some day I'm going to murder the bugler."

All this has been forgotten in the delightful freedom of the afternoon's leave. They have done all sorts of things with the precious hours. Some have been able to make a lot out of the time and some have wasted every delicious minute. But every chap is indubitably happy and comes toward the station and the train which will get him home in about an hour with the gratified sense of pleasure found in a holiday. It is easy to single out those who have relatives or friends in the city and those who have had to depend on general amusement or the many diversions planned to occupy their time by those blessed women who seem never to tire of using a willing spirit and a generous hand. Those who have been home have grips and bags and bundles and you can figure that these contain clean linen and well darned hose and other little comforts, to say nothing of some home cooking souvenirs to fill in the chinks between the "chow." And quite as a rule these chaps will have some one or more of the home folks along for the last minutes together. Other chaps have from one to three girls on hand, with all the variations from slight acquaintance to sweethearts. There is no explaining it, but a uniform is a winner with the girls. And the fellow inside the uniform is just as eager. The disciplinarians and the psychologists give it up. The boys want to see the girls on these holidays more than any one other thing. The good-bys are said in such all sorts of places that they really resemble the old idea the ostriches have of sticking their heads in the sand when they want to hide. The young folks are no more hidden despite the search for quiet corners.

In the station the Jackies swarm in groups, trios, couples and singly. They are talking, singing, laughing and smoking while they surge restlessly. There is an orderly aimlessness in the way they crowd together only to dissolve. It is as if every chap was expecting to have something happen, didn't know where or when, but had plenty of time to wait while looking for it. The girls are pretty well dropped by the time the rotunda is reached, and it is a shifting, pulsating, mobile mass of black and white below eager, flushed, happy faces and under the round white cap at all angles, from sedateness to rakishness. Continually the integers detach themselves and go up the stairs to the waiting trains, but there never seems any reduction in numbers. When you tear yourself away from the unceasing fascination which grips your very heart and makes you smile widely while you feel your eyes moisten, there is seemingly no end to them.

On the street they are just as thick and have driven the civilian into the background save as an adjunct. They are buying papers. They are in the cigar stores. They are in the shoe shining "parlors." They are lounging on the bridge and sitting on the rails. They are on the street cars, automobiles and taxis have them for passengers. They lean against building corners sometimes singly, as often in a group. In front of every lighted window they stand looking at everything. The pet animal shops have a crowd in front watching monkeys and prize breeds of dogs. But there are nearly as many in front of the flower shops or where premiums for merchandise stamps are displayed. The fruit shops are jammed. Every fellow has loosened that belt where he keeps his money. Nothing is too good for him. He is loading up if he is not standing outside eating peaches or plums from a sack. The candy booths are full too. No use to say the chaps are buying candy for girls. It's for themselves.

But where they are thickest is in the restaurants. All the functions of the ladies and the many families who have "entertained" the boys have included "something to eat" and by all tokens all was fully cared for. But here they are in every shade of a restaurant, with a bit of preference for those where they can straddle a stool. And they are putting away the most substantial of meals and cleaning up the platters as if they had been on a fast for all day. The Elderly Person was so loth to part with the fine fellows, one night, that he straddled a stool himself just to be with them, watch them express themselves so simply and directly and to sort of wish that the fathers and mothers who had given them up so loyally could see how the lads were manifesting themselves, after all, as only grown up boys. For a boy is always hollow when he is happy, and about as good a way as any for him to show to others that he is feeling first rate is to fill up on beans and pie and fruit and ice cream. And to drink coffee offhand when he knows that bedtime is close at hand and there is only a few hours' sleep between that and the dreaded bugle call of the morning. And does anything do anybody more good than to watch a good healthy chap eat? To think that from such specimens the dyspeptics and health food cranks can eventuate!

As you get farther away from the station the numbers lessen, but you don't lose them. They are on the elevated platforms going southwest and north. They are going away from the city, but they are on the trains approaching the loop. Looking out of the window you can see them on the pavements below, on the cars, at the corners and at some places where it makes you heart-sick to think they could prefer to go when so many clean hands are stretched out to be friendly to them. Some of the white uniforms are smirched and you fret lest they fail to catch the last train and pay the penalty of six days in the guard house. But there is not much of this and you turn to the inside of the car where the well built chap sits talking to the pretty girl he is taking home. He will have to hustle to get back to the station, but he isn't allowing that to trouble him in the least. In fact he looks so content that he may even not care should he find the last train gone—but the Elderly Person won't allow himself to think of such a contingency and is glad when they get off at a station which will allow the lad to make connections all right. May she be loyal and he be stanch. God bless them.

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

Hallett Gilberte: His Summer Home, His Personality and His Songs

BY CHARLES E. WATT

Constant readers of Music News have but to turn back to the issue following the American Music Festival at Lockport the first week of September last to be reminded of the fact that the songs of Hallett Gilberte were used every day of that remarkable convention and that there were as many of them on the programs as of any one other composer, perhaps, indeed, more than of any other.

And those of us who were present at Lockport at that time will recall, in addition to the musical joy of the songs, the vividly glowing personality of the composer himself, for Mr. Gilberte was at every session and proved himself, morning, noon and night, a splendid item of the audience at those moments when he was not on the stage; for, in very truth, there were few of the many recitals when he did not add his musical and brilliant accompaniment to the work of some artist presenting his songs.

A request for information about his work always found him too busy for a regular interview, but at odd moments he told some interesting things about himself and his Summer home in Maine, which he was loath to leave in September even for an American musical festival, and he was able to give some items about his songs which are here reproduced.

The Lewiston (Me.) Journal, in an August issue, had a series of pictures of Mr. Gilberte's Summer home and of himself in connection with an article which we are privileged to reproduce, in part, as follows:

(Written for Lewiston Journal)

How few of the thousands who hear Hallett Gilberte's new songs which are part of many an American concert program know that Gilberte (pronounced Gilbertie) is a Maine boy, born in the little town of Winthrop, and that he has a summer home at Lincolnville Beach. On the highway between Belfast and Camden, over which thousands of admirers of his songs travel each year, without knowing they are near the residence of Hallett Gilberte, is Melody Manse, and here he is at present with his charming wife and a houseful of delightful friends, musicians and artists, for he is ever surrounded with people talented like himself.

Gilberte spent his childhood, or at least part of it, in Winthrop and many in the village remember him as boy and youth. He lived with his grandmother and a number of relatives still remain there.

At an early age he showed considerable talent and he has always idealized music. He even says that he selected the finest place in the world in which to be born, a spot half way between the homes of two of Maine's greatest musicians, Anna Louise Carey and Lillian Nordica, both of whom he has admired all his life. This is not, however, a biographical sketch and so it sufficeth to say that he was born, grew to manhood and married. He was most fortunate in his choice of a life companion, for Mrs. Annie Gilberte is an artist of no mean ability. She has written many of the lyrics of his most successful songs and frequently assists him in his recitals, reading poems, original or otherwise, to which he has written charming accompaniments.

MUSIC ROOM AT MELODY MANSE, SUMMER HOME OF HALLETT GILBERTE

Their summer home at Lincolnville Beach is called Melody Manse. Isn't that a most appropriate name? House of Music. It is all that, for it is always filled with musicians who are having their playtime and the songs they sing are songs of sheer happiness. They wear their oldest clothes, dance and sing and pitch hay and attend country dances, go fishing, swim, and are just a lot of kids at a continual picnic. Their names would make a long list and are familiar to all music lovers.

One of the first visitors to Melody Manse and one who loves the place almost as much as its owners do, is Edmund Breese—"Eddie" his friends call him. It was he who painted the quaint old weather-beaten sign which hangs at the entrance to the grounds, up on the highway, where tourists often remark on it, little knowing that the "John Burkett Ryder" of "The Lion and the Mouse," whom they so well remember, is the artist. Breese is never happier than when visiting at Melody Manse.

Mr. Gilberte, while making his home in New York for many years, never loses an opportunity to visit Maine, and it was when visiting friends along the coast that he was taken with the beauties of Lincolnville and purchased several acres of wild lands. It was mostly alder bushes, but these he has gradually cleared away until he had a fine young farm under cultivation, attractive lawns surrounding the house and a view which is unsurpassed.

Melody Manse is just what its name implies, a house of music, and many of his most famous compositions have been made there. His music room is a delightful place, the walls lined with photos of past and present musicians, many of them autographed and of personal friends. Another spot is the den, an oriental room, where rainy weather is spent in absolute comfort. When the weather is pleasant the household is out of doors from morning until night.

One of Gilberte's best known songs, which have been made famous by artists of international reputation, is "The Devil's Love Song," dedicated to Louis Graveure, and sung by him with great success. The words of this song are by Maurice V. Samuels, who wrote "The Wanderer." It is very dramatic, ending with a sardonic laugh as the accompaniment rumbles away chromatically down into the infernal regions.

Other compositions very well known to the public are: "Forever and a Day"; "Contentment"; "A Rose and a Dream"; "Spring Serenade"; "Evening Song"; "Ah, Love but a Day"; "The Little Red Ribbon," with words by James Whitcomb Riley; "The Waltz Quadrille," words by Ella Wheeler Wilcox; "A Maiden's Yea and Nay"; "Les Deaux Roses"; "Moonlight, Starlight."

Among the artists who include Gilberte's songs in their repertoires are Mme. Jean Jomelli, Marie Rappold, Frances Alda, Vera Courtenay, Florence Otis, Florence Macbeth and many, many more, who have been reared in these compositions in Maine.

He has been very successful with his four-part songs, quite as much so as in his other arrangements, and clubs all over the country have featured them on their programs. These are as frequently heard on Maine programs as are his other songs, but many do not realize that they are compositions of a Maine artist.

Of Gilberte's "Ah, Love but a Day" Mme. Jamelli says: "It is such a great song that if I were to sing it in a foreign language there would be very few in the audience who would recognize that it was not a big operatic aria."

Gilberte does not believe in rushing his compositions into print. While he could, if he wished, bring out a large number and great variety of songs each year, for he is versatile and no laggard, he believes that it is much better to go slowly, to give his singers an opportunity to get one song over, to love it and make their public love it, before he springs another new one. Some composers bring out twenty or more songs in a year and expect their publishers to have time to properly produce them. This is impossible, for, in Mr. Gilberte's opinion, no publisher can do this by any one composer and act fairly toward the others for whom he publishes. It is often from one to three years after a song has been composed before Mr. Gilberte puts it on the market, but when he does it is sure to make an instant hit.

In his recitals he not only does splendid piano solos, but accompanies the artists who sing his songs. The combination is ideal.—Anne M. Kittredge.

A clipping from an eastern paper gives the following information as to the use of four-part songs from the Gilberte pen:

"Hallett Gilberte, the popular American song writer, is having great success with his four-part songs, as a number of clubs and choral societies have been featuring these on their programs the past season. The Bertha Barnes Ladies' Glee Club of Boston has been singing with much success his four-part songs, 'Two Roses' and 'There, Little Girl, Don't Cry,' on all its programs. The Southland Singers made a great success with his new four-part song, 'A Dusky Lullaby,' at their last concert, and the same charming song was the hit at the Wanamaker annual May concert in Philadelphia at the Metropolitan Opera House. It was sung by 400 male voices before an audience of 5,000 persons, who applauded so heartily that Composer Gilberte was called out twice to bow his acknowledgments. The same thing occurred when the Mundell Choral Club sang his 'Two Roses' at its Brooklyn concert.

"Other societies to honor Gilberte by programming his songs are the Eurydice Club of Toledo, Ralph Everett Sapp's Ladies' Choral of Cleveland, the Music Lovers' Club and Arts Club of Boston, the Orpheus of Poughkeepsie, the Amphion Male Chorus of Seattle, Tuesday Musical of Pittsburgh, and Fay Foster's Choral Club. A number of choral societies are planning to devote half of one of next season's programs to the compositions of Gilberte, with the composer and a vocalist to assist.

* * * * * *

Two newspaper clippings which have recently found their way to Music News office detail concerts at the Hotel McAlpin in New York and at Lincolnville, Me., in both of which only compositions by Hallett Gilberte were used.

The New York recital was given by Florence Otis, Bernice Mershon, Frederick Gunther, Charlotte Lund and Mme. Gilberte, with Mr. Gilberte at the piano.

The second was a benefit concert and enlisted the services of Ellison Van Hoose, Charles Norman Granville and Mr. Gilberte.

In a recent interview in Musical America Mr.. Gilberte spoke glowingly of the Lockport Festival and of the artists there who presented his songs, the list including Charles W. Clark, Mabel Corlew-Smith, Marguerite Potter, Emily Beglin, Clarinda Smith, Meta Christensen and Isabel Cline.

CHARLESTON, W. VA.

The season of 1918-19 seems to have opened with a very poor exhibition of musical comedy (so called) at the Plaza, about which "the least said, the soonest mended" would seem to fit admirably. It is strange that managers persist in foisting such trash off on an unsuspecting public.

We are promised a good company in "Very Soft for Eddie" at the Burlew soon, and have had some of the big "pictures" in the past two or three weeks. But there does not seem to be much of a prospect for anything really edifying. Perhaps we are growing pessimistic, or maybe this is what we need to keep our minds off the war conditions (?).

Mr. Cornelius M. Estill, organist and choirmaster of St. Peter's church, New York City, and formerly of St. John's, Charleston, was here for a few days, visiting relatives and friends, and on Sunday evening, September 28, following the regular services, gave a short organ recital consisting of these numbers:

Marche de Processione ..... Francis
Romance ..... Debussy
Will o' the Wisp ..... Nevin
An Evening Song ..... Johnson
Prelude and Fugue in D minor ..... Bach
Marseillaise Hymn ..... De Lisle
The Star Spangled Banner

On Sunday evening, October 6, also in St. John's Church, the choir gave a special musical service, announcement of which brought out an unusually good attendance, despite the influenza scare. The following numbers made up the program:

Prelude—Chansonette ..... Francis
Processional hymn—The Son of God Goes Forth to War ..... Francis America
Gloria Patri
Magnificat in E flat ..... Kimmins
Nunc Dimittis in E flat ..... Kimmins
Anthem—Tarry With Me, O My Savior ..... Baldwin
Hymn—Jesus Calls Us ..... Jude
Offertorium—The Splendors of Thy Glory, Lord .. Woodward
The Star Spangled Banner
Benediction hymn—The Shadows of the Evening Hours ..... Hiles
Recessional hymn—Fight the Good Fight ..... Parker
Postlude—Te Deum ..... Claussmann

Gannon—Rose Lutiger Gannon, contralto, is announced for appearances at Monroe, Wis., and Clinton, Iowa, this week.

Sherwood School—The faculty concert announced by the Sherwood School for last Thursday evening was postponed because of the influenza epidemic.

Burton-Link—Charles Link, an artist pupil of Arthur Burton, sang with great success in a concert at Mortine Hall early in October.

The following significant comments from the New York press testify to her great success:

FAY FOSTER'S "THE AMERICANS COME" THE MOST POPULAR CONCERT WAR SONG

The patriotic song that is making history for itself is without doubt Fay Foster's "The Americans Come." On occasion of the thousands of meetings and gatherings held in the interest of the Fourth Liberty Loan it was heard sung everywhere. In New York Arthur Middleton, the renowned baritone, sang "The Americans Come" in Wall street from the steps of the Subtreasury of the United States to a noonday gathering such as one can bring together only in the now most famous financial district in the world.

In the New York Hippodrome John McCormack succeeded in working an audience up to a fever pitch. Yvonne De Treville seldom sings "La Marseillaise" without taking on "The Americans Come" as her "b" number. At the concert given Sunday, October 13, under the auspices of the American Society of Singers, Mme. De Treville again sang "The Americans Come," with Fay Foster as accompanist, and received such "riotous" applause that a repetition was compelled.

In the Northwest one of the most active of admirers of "The Americans Come" is none less than Kathleen Hart-Bibb. Judging from programs that come to hand, Mrs. Bibb must be singing Fay Foster's song almost daily. Amparita Farrar writes from France that "The Americans Come" was literally a howling success and that she is singing it in every camp, where the boys greet it with yells and cheers.

Frances Ingram is singing "The Americans Come" at every camp which this clever artist is visiting. Hartridge Whipp, the young baritone from the far West, now in New York, included "The Americans Come" on his two Maine Festival programs. Werrenrath sang it for a Victor record.

We notice that "The Americans Come" appeared on the October 15 program of the Chicago Artists' Association.

In its various different arrangements as a part-song "The Americans Come" will find a prominent place at many concerts to be given during the season of 1918-19. The Mozart Society of New York, Mendelssohn Glee Club of New York and the Rubinstein Club of New York have accepted it, not to speak of the many renditions that have already and are still to be given by the four-minute men gatherings throughout the country and other organizations formed especially for patriotic purposes. ## THE VICTORY DRUMMERS

George B. Nevin, the composer, has organized The Victory Drummers, thirty of the leading men of Easton, Pa., men of 50 years or over, and as far as known, is the only organization of its kind in America.

It consists of a drum major, color bearer, two fifes, two bass drums and twenty-four snare drums, and they intend to drum "'till it's over over there."

MAKING PLAY OUT OF WORK

The Clarkes of Chicago—Edward, baritone, and Rachel Steinman, violinist—have recently returned from another long Chautauqua tour taken in their car. These artists, together with Earl Victor Prahl, their accompanist, have toured in this field for five seasons and are already booked for another tour for the summer of 1919. They are all hard working musicians. Mr. and Mrs. Clarke are both connected with the Lyceum Arts Conservatory, while Mr. Prahl teaches at the Bush Conservatory. They are amongst the foremost of Chicago's artists in giving recitals and concerts, and Mr. Clarke's unique lecture recitals, under the University Lecture Association of the University of Chicago, have won for him a wide circle of admirers during the past three seasons. When summer comes, then, they claim that the change of occupation afforded by the Chautauquas is just what best suits them. When you tell them that the work is hard, travel difficult, living conditions are not of the best, they will not agree with you. They claim they thoroughly enjoy the roving, half gipsy, half circus life of the circuits. The past season is the second one in which they have made the trip in a car. They traveled 5,000 miles and appeared at 75 Chautauquas and gave two concerts at each, making 150 appearances. Far from being tired of the experience, they made a 1,500 mile pleasure trip at the end of the tour. A new feature was added this season, that of camping out. This was tried with such success that next season they hope to live out of doors all season. In spite of the long trip they seem to come back to the city looking as brown and healthy and refit as the rest of the musicians that have spent a month or so just resting up. Already these artists have given a Chicago recital, several concerts in Michigan and are busy at their various studios with their classes.

TEACHING THE CHILD MUSIC

HERBERT J. WRIGHTSON
in the Pacific Coast Musician

When we think of music teaching in general we perhaps recall the names of many methods and more or less faddy "systems" of which we have heard. One says "I teach the so-and-so method," another "I use the ——— Technic." And so it goes—so many different "proprietary" schools—like the thousand and one nostrums found in a drug store, each one claiming for itself absolute superiority over all others. In beginning the instruction of a little child, however, in the art of music many of these unique methods are like so many elaborate surgical instruments as compared to a spoon when it comes to eating our cereal. When we know just what we want to do, the way is very simple, and any complicated means is only a hindrance. Doubtless many fail to see clearly what is the essential object in the giving of lessons. They are so occupied with using the complicated surgical instrument in exactly the right way that the food never reaches its destination.

There are some radical differences between the kind of teaching necessary for the child mind and that suitable for the mind of a person of twenty-five. Compare the kindergarten with the college class. In the latter the students are accustomed to dealing with abstract propositions. The developed mind can deal with an extended train of thought, passing logically from one idea to another. The child mind cannot do this. The perceptive faculties are in the ascendant; we say they are "quick to notice things." That is, indeed, their chief function; they are noticing things and getting in a store of ideas. Only after the ideas are distinct and familiar do they attach any names, any abstract ideas, to them. Were this not so we would expect the infant to be endowed with a large vocabulary and eagerly trying to find the objects of which it already knew the names. As it is, the infant has no words at all, and gets well acquainted with many things with utter indifference to what they are called. If these things are sufficiently interesting it will later take notice of the words connected with them and finally use them by individual mental effort.

The young music student is in the same position with regard to the facts of music. Interest the child, make it familiar with things which have a real existence either to the eye or the ear, and a foundation is laid which can be classified and labeled afterward. The systematic application of such a manner of teaching is generally called "musical kindergarten." It makes the facts of music notation—so familiar to the musician that he can hardly realize their meaninglessness to the child—concrete instead of "double dutch," as they would be when merely stated to the young pupil. It teaches him notes only after he loves the tune which the notes stand for, and how to play the keys of the piano when he first has some musical idea in his head that he desires to hear sounded by the instrument. There are many "methods" in carrying out this work, but the principle in all is the same. The child seems to be merely playing and having a pleasant time, and unconsciously gets all the groundwork of music study—without the "study."

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. ### The American Public's Opportunity

According to the announcements of Selby C. Oppenheimer, San Francisco's energetic young impresario, not less than seven artists of international reputation and American by birth will be among the distinguished representatives of the art of music who will appear before us during this season. Now is the time for our musical public to show whether all this talk about patriotic preference for American music and musicians is based upon a sincere conviction or is the result of mental hysteria. Do our music lovers really mean to be serious with their determination to regard our able American artists from the same standpoint as those coming from Europe, or are they only getting rid of a lot of words that do not mean anything to them? The present season will determine this fact.

If you really mean what you say, and you actually are convinced that the art of American vocalists and instrumentalists and the compositions of American writers should be encouraged in the same degree as those of foreign artists and composers used to be in the past, then you will attend the concerts of the seven or eight American artists announced by Mr. Oppenheimer in a body and pack the Savoy Theater to the doors. If you do not do this, all your talking about this will not change the fact that in your heart you have not convinced yourself. And that is about the worst kind of patriotism we know of. It is no patriotism at all. It is simply camouflage to cover up your real opinion.

And by this assertion we do not mean that the American public should neglect listening to foreign artists. By no means. Hear all of them if you can afford to do so, but if you can only afford a few, hear the best, whether they are American or foreign artists. But above all, keep the names of the American artists in your mind, and go to their concerts with the absolute conviction that you will hear vocalists and instrumentalists who are just as pleasing and know just as much about the art as anyone who has studied with the same facility, industry and natural ability as they have.—Pacific Coast Musician.

Music's Effect on Morale of Soldiers

What we need to win this war is a flaming patriotism instead of an amiable and acquiescent tendency to academic discussion; and music arouses men to do their utmost, to go through hell itself, more than any other tonic available. Both mythological legends and historical records corroborate this statement; and when we consider the effect of music upon the so-called lower animals there is no reason why man, the highest of all the animals, should be an exception, says the Outlook.

On a tour of inspection we would often pass a paddock crowded with tired-out horses with heads down and drooping tails; but let a few buglers pass by, when—presto! The horses would neigh, prance about, and act as if entirely made over. The newspaper accounts of the war have spoken often of the great inspiration music has given to the allied soldiers both to key them up for a charge and afterward, often when on retreat, to infuse them with new strength sufficient to reach a place of safety.

During one of the battles in France a large body of retreating men were so exhausted that they were on the point of lying down, when one of the commanding officers rushed to a near-by village and bought all the toy instruments, such as mouth organs, available. By means of tunes on these humble instruments the spirit of the men was so revived that they pulled themselves together and marched ten miles to a safe line of defense.

Everyone must have read of the stirring effect upon the Italian soldiers during last autumn's campaign when a large military band stationed upon a high peak, under the leadership of our New York conductor, Toscanini, played fiery marches while the men were charging in the valley below.

General Pershing has sent back from France an official recommendation that our regimental bands should be substantially enlarged and trained to the highest point of efficiency, for, in his opinion, nothing contributes more to the fighting morale of the men.—Pittsburgh Sun.

Echoes From the National American Musical Festival, Lockport, N. Y.
Ida Geer Weller

Mrs. Weller combines a mezzo-contralto voice of rare beauty and artistic interpretation with a gracious charm of manner that makes her singing altogether delightful.—Union Sun and Journal, Lockport, N. Y., Tuesday, September 3, 1918.

Mrs. Weller has a beautiful voice. It is rich and full and has a wonderfully sympathetic quality. The songs selected by the artist gave many opportunities to show dramatic feeling and intensity of expression. Especial mention should be made of Mrs. Weller's upper tones, which were well placed and brilliant.—Union Sun and Journal, Lockport, N. Y., Wednesday, September 4, 1918.

A rare gift of temperament is that of Ida Geer Weller, mezzo-contralto, whose song group was listened to with absorbed attention and rewarded with storms of applause. Mrs. Weller is well equipped vocally and her fine diction, gripping dramatic delivery and magnetic personality make her a very convincing singer.—Niagara Daily Press, Lockport, N. Y., Wednesday, September 4, 1918.

Alice Sjoselius

Recent press comment:

Alice Sjoselius, a soprano who has sung with success in European opera houses and concert halls, sang for the first time in Boston yesterday. Her voice is inherently a noble one, having sensuous color and brilliancy. It is a big voice and a beautiful one. Singing the Siciliana of Scarlatti, Miss Sjoselius showed her appreciation of a broad melodic style, and she sang the Mozart with real feeling. In the Swedish songs she was simple, natural and pleasing. The sincerity and innate vocal capacity of Miss Sjoselius were evident. The audience applauded her cordially and the novelty of her program was enjoyed.—Boston Post, April 10, 1918.

Alice Sjoselius, soprano, gave her first recital in Boston yesterday afternoon at Steinert Hall. The singer's voice has color, body, flexibility and smoothness. She has evidently been carefully trained and yesterday displayed technical authority which is the result of experience. The Italian airs were sung fluently, with expression and a nice observance of traditional style. A naive sincerity is a characteristic of her singing.—Boston Herald, April 10, 1918.

Alice Sjoselius made an unusually pleasing impression. She proved to be the possessor of a voice of quality, excellent volume and range—one which she employed with admirable flexibility. In Mozart's "Deh Vieni nin Tardar" she disclosed a feeling for style and a command of legato. She showed throughout taste and interpretative intelligence. Miss Sjoselius is a welcome addition to our concert halls.—New York Tribune, April 12, 1918.

Alice Sjoselius disclosed a voice of quality and power. In her singing there was much variety of spirit and effective details in interpretative method. The voice is well worth devotion.—New York Sun, April 12, 1918.

Kathryn Lee Scores Operatic Successes

When Miss Kathryn Lee appeared recently at North Adams, Mass., with the Loubet Opera Company the following comments were bestowed upon her singing of "Nedda" and "Santuzza." Miss Kathryn Lee took the part of Santuzza in a most admirable manner and her interpretation was truly wonderful and gave her an opportunity to use to advantage her beautiful and powerful voice.—The Herald, September 28.

Miss Lee as Nedda was superb in her role.—The Herald, September 28.

One of the pleasing features of the evening occurred after the presentation of "Cavalleria," when Miss Lee was presented with a beautiful basket of flowers. The young woman won the hearts of all in her interpretation of the character role and her sweet, pure notes, almost birdlike in quality, made her a favorite with the audience and every appearance during the evening met with an enthusiastic greeting.—

A Cycle of Song for Baritone

POEM BY VACHEL LINDSAY
MUSIC BY ARTHUR BERGH

Price, $1.15, postage extra

Not so much a song cycle as three graphic and picturesque musical scenes, in which a virile baritone voice will find play for humorous, dramatic and weird expression. The poem is startlingly original, united with music of striking power, in which negro tunes are thematically employed with modern resourcefulness. The result is a bizarre but sympathetic interpretation of racial traits of unique interest in American life and art.

"In many ways it is the most admirable cycle that has been done in our country in many a day. Mr. Bergh has melody, he is harmoniously sensitive, and his workmanship is flawless."—A. Walter Kramer in Musical America.

What the Press Says of the Gilberte Songs

Clear and distinct was Mme. Jomelli's rendering of "Spring Serenade" and "Dusky Lullaby" was as a lullaby should be, smooth, quiet and sung with such ease that even the audience was lulled, to be stirred anew by the love message of "Ah! Love but a Day," a fitting climax to the trio of Hallett Gilberte's compositions.—Duluth News-Tribune.

"Moonlight-Starlight," Gilberte's waltz song, was Mrs. Otis' most brilliant achievement. Her voice sparkled and scintillated in its elaborate colorature and the way she took the high E called forth many admiring comments. This number was a triumph for the composer no less than for the singer.—Lewiston (Maine) Journal.

The creation that undoubtedly will impress more strongly the public to which he appeals is the "Devil's Love Song." This is one of the few outstanding achievements in dramatic, colorful and stirring writings by native song composers. Mr. Granville set forth its amorous passion and its mocking spirit with vocal opulence, a sense of its character and an intense feeling that exacted great enthusiasm.—Newark Evening News.

An evening song by Gilberte was an exquisite little number sung by Miss McConnell, reaching a climax and finale even before the end is looked for.—Bangor (Maine) Daily Commercial.

"You Is Jes' as Sweet" and "Spring Serenade," sung by Leon Rice, caused such a storm of applause that they had to be repeated. Gilberte writes in a highly brilliant vein and his songs make an instant appeal. Melody of an infectious kind is the dominant characteristic and his songs should have a wide appeal to singers.—Atlantic City Evening Union.

Perhaps the greatest of Mme. Sharlow's ability was in Gilberte's dramatic song, "Ah! Love but a Day." Her rendering of the music and her interpretation of the spirit of the song revealed the soul and temperament of the true artist.—Louisville Herald.

Famous Composer Sings at Syracuse

"Over here in the trenches and in the crowded hospital wards, we do not sing 'There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight,'" wrote a member of the "Shrapnel Quartet" "over there," to Mrs. Carrie Jacobs Bond, American woman composer, who sang at the Kiwanis Club luncheon yesterday noon. "We sing the song that has become the inspiration of the trenches, 'The End of a Perfect Day.'"

Mrs. Bond was passing through Syracuse yesterday, and, besides reading the above letter, sang two of her new songs, "My Boy," which has been adopted by Mme. Schumann-Heink as her "mother" song, and "Allegiance," which is yet in manuscript form. The composer did not sing her most famous song, but exhibited to the Kiwanis a valuable collection of letters and cartoons from all over the world, telling how the inspiration inculcated in "A Perfect Day" had become the hearth-song of all nations, and how each nation had interpreted the phrase.

The most artistic cartoon, and the one which is most comprehensive and detailed in its idea, was drawn by a French cartoonist. It is a series of composite photographs showing the Hun poisoning wells, bayoneting women and children, burning homes, bombing hospitals and churches. Over the last picture, that of a Hun resting contentedly on his bayonet, is the motto, "The End of a Perfect Day for Me und Gott und Kultur."

The American boy's "Perfect Day" is represented by the picture of a satisfied Yank, squatting complacently on the swollen stomach of a member of the "Limburger cheese gang." The Yank is contentedly smoking a cigaret, and on his bayonet dangles a Prussian helmet, while a smile of absolute satisfaction overspreads his face.—Syracuse Post.

Organ Recital at Warsaw

On Tuesday last George W. Barnes, who recently accepted the post of choirmaster and organist of Christ Cathedral, Salina, Kan., and who for the past three years has filled the position of organist and choirmaster of St. John's Episcopal Church, Keokuk, Iowa, played an organ recital at the Presbyterian Church at Warsaw, Ill.

Those who attended were privileged to hear in Mr. Barnes a masterly musician. Mr. Barnes sits surely at his instrument and his program, which was rich and varied, was presented with a nice sense of artistic values. Numbers deserving special mention were Prelude and Fugue in D minor (Bach), Preludio and Andante from the Guilmant Sonata in C minor, Chautique D'Amour, Gaul, and Peau (Matthews) which with its many moods rendered a noteworthy impression upon the audience.

Assisting on the program was Miss Lynore Rich, soprano, an artist pupil of Mr. Barnes, who exhibited a smooth velvety tone and a perfect legato in Haydn's ever beautiful aria, "With Verdure Clad," from his inspiring oratorio, "The Creation."

To her second group of old English airs Miss Rich gave a tender and sympathetic interpretation. Though unannounced on the program, Miss Rich opened the recital with the French National Anthem, which she rendered with a fervor which immediately touched the popular chord of her audience, who greeted the number with enthusiastic applause. The program:

Prelude and Fugue, D minor.....Bach
Andante and Freludio (C minor Sonata).....Guilmant
Mr. Barnes

Carl Craven in Austin

Mr. Craven, well known in musical circles, led the community singing of popular airs, accompanied by the Naval Liberty Loan band. The audience joined in the singing most enthusiastically and in a manner which left no doubt as to its complete sympathy with the national cause. If you think the people of North Austin cannot sing just ask the janitor, who was in the basement at the time, and came scrambling upstairs to learn what was shaking the building! Mr. Craven rendered two solos, which were well received.—The Austinite.

Something About Mme. Schumann-Heink

If an inspiring message could put over the Liberty Loan, then the fourth should have been put over on Saturday night, when Ernestine Schumann-Heink lifted her great voice in an ecstasy of song. An elderly woman in the hearing of the writer said: "I have heard 'The Star Spangled Banner' all my life, but I have never heard it sung until tonight." And the vast audience which jammed the historic Auditorium was evidently of the same opinion, for never is there recalled an ovation such as that given Schumann-Heink after her noble singing of the National Anthem. She was not permitted to leave the platform until she had given Oley Speaks' song, "When the Boys Come Home," and there occurred a most extraordinary thing, for the entire audience stood during her singing. Such an experience is not recalled in a lifetime of varied incidents. Round after round of applause and wave after wave of cheering followed. There was a remarkable demonstration of feeling for a great woman and a great artist—one that can never be forgotten by anyone present on this memorable occasion, for the visiting speaker of the evening was Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo, who came from Washington to help Chicago make its quota of the Fourth Liberty Loan. Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois took particular notice of the words in Mme. Schumann-Heink's song, for he said: "I was especially impressed with the wonderful words just sung by Mme. Schumann-Heink. There was a phrase in it about the 'boys coming home.' How can we face the boys coming home if we don't do our part?"

Surely fitting was it that two such distinguished representative men should have as complement in their appeal so distinguished and so representative a woman. Mme. Schumann-Heink is doing her part for the Government and is continuously in the public eye, for she is appearing at all the great rallies. On Monday night she was the sensational figure at a colossal gathering in Grant Park and she sings for several other affairs this week.—Musical Leader.

MUSICIANS' CLUB OF WOMEN

The program on Monday, October 14, opened with a "Quintette for Piano and Strings, Op. 81" (Dvorak), played by Zetta Gay Whitson, Leta Murdock, Wally Heymar, Sylvia Bargman and Elizabeth Olk-Roehlk.

The quintet, consisting of four movements, Allegro, ma non tanto, Scherzo and Furiant, is intensely interesting, with beautiful themes which are cleverly worked out, and in the hands of these young artists was made to glow with beauty.

Leta Murdock again proved her musicianship and adaptability in substituting on short notice for Malvina Neilsson, programmed and who was called out of town.

Another ensemble number on the program was a "Trio for Piano and Strings," including the three movements, "Prelude," "Minuet" and "Finale" by Horatio Parker, played by Wally Heymar, Elizabeth Olk-Roehlk and Sylvia Bargman. Both numbers were played with excellent ensemble and understanding. In the Parker number, however, the piano predominated perhaps a little too much.

The other instrumental group, consisting of "Reflections in the Water" (Debussy), and "Polonaise" (Chopin), were played in a sincere and musicianly manner by Mathilda Rose.

An interesting number was the group of songs given by Myrtle Moses Alschuler, consisting of "Voici que le Printemps" and "Aquarelles" (Debussy), and "Les Silhouettes" and "Light" by Carpenter. Mrs. Alschuler has a beautiful dramatic voice, rich in color, and she sang with excellent understanding and interpretation.

Perhaps the most distinctive number on the program was the group of French songs which were sung by Emma Patten Hoyt, consisting of "Serenade Francaise" (Leoncavallo), "L'Attente" (Paldowski), "L'oiseau Bleu" (Jacques-Dalcroze), "Levieux Moulin" (Fourdrain), and "Noel des Eufants qui n'ont plus, de maisons" (Debussy).

Mrs. Hoyt has a beautiful lyric voice excellently schooled, and good French pronunciation and enunciation. She also showed fine interpretative ability.

The president, Mrs Harriet Smulski, in a neat address rather confined her remarks to facts and figures concerning the "War Problem and Conduct of the War." She also stated that the club expects to make the "Social Hour" a special feature during the current year.

THE MUSICIAN DURING THE WAR

By T. CARL WHITMER

Prelude

A Pittsburgh judge recently said to a proposed juryman, a professional musician: "What good is music during the war? It is a non-essential."

The Mayor of the same city said to the writer during an interview on municipal music: "Say! No high-brow music for me. Winter or Summer, me for the 'Yankee Doodle' stuff."

The School Board of an adjacent borough cut out the position of music supervisor a few days ago as "a war measure."

So we live, move, and have our more or less musical ways. All of which suggests what the musician should do during the war.

I was interested in the following letter to a large Pittsburgh paper some time ago:

Sir: You say, "Borglum, who reported on the airship program for the President, is a sculptor. Wonder if we couldn't get a portrait painter to look over the ordinance situation?"

This isn't really such a subject for joking. There is something about the art school training that makes a naturally practical man exceptionally clear-sighted. It teaches him to eliminate unessential details and to get right down to the basic facts of structure and appearance. It is really one of the most utilitarian forms of education. Through no mischance have so many important inventions and processes been devised by trained artists, beginning with Fulton, who invented the steamboat, and Morse, who invented the telegraph.

F. OGDON CORNISH.

Our people forget that many of the greatest men in all periods have been men with artistic training. Also, that art life is but one phase of general life, just as any other work. Leonardo da Vinci was an engineer as well as a painter, a painter as well as an engineer. He and Michael Angelo did the day's work for their government, as well as the eternal work of the world.

There is no phase of art which is unessential to the world's work. The art group is always a small group, but spiritually strong, spiritually independent, morally a righteous force which shall crush as it always has crushed anything and everything mean, low, brutal, vicious, and put in its place the permanently noble and inspiring. "With the God of Heaven it is all one, to conquer with a large number or a small one," as a great Hebrew said.

Harriet Monroe, a poet and editor of "Poetry," said not long ago, "All other issues seem small beside this heroic issue on which we stake these infinitely precious lives. If agriculture and commerce become the feeders, the toolmakers of war, the arts at first glance seem to be a pottering with toys, a lisping of words, out of relation with these marching armies, out of the current of great events. . . . But poets have made more wars than kings, and it is for them, and not for kings, to make an end of war by removing its veil of glamour. Kings are, after all, impotent. It was men's imaginations that once gave them power and splendor; but for a century or two men's imaginations have been dethroning them and stripping their pitiful figures bare.

"War remains what it always was—a contest not so much of material forces as of spiritual forces. And the poet and the artist are makers of spiritual forces, leaders of men's imaginations.

"For years the poets, the artists, have been dictating terms of peace to the next age. Every painter of his own wood lot, every poet singing the beauty of working girls instead of queens, or the bravery of common men instead of princes, has been doing his bit to democratize the world. This work has been done not only by Titans like Whitman, but also by the sheer mass and weight of lesser men moved by the same spirit and leading their neighbors and admirers in the same direction. The Kaiser is a man of straw against a force like this. Whitman and Millet beat him before he was born—our soldiers but have to finish the job."

Reference to Walt Whitman reminds one that his personality and sympathy during the Civil war was a fine force in the hospitals, but his poetry has been a constantly increasing surge and power, affecting the nations aside from our own, around the world and back again. Whitman said, "I say that democracy can never prove itself beyond cavil until it founds and luxuriantly grows its own forms of art, poems, etc. It is not generally realized, but it is true that the genius of Greece and all the sociology, personality, politics and religion of those wonderful states resided in their literature or aesthetics; and what was afterwards the main support of European chivalry, the feudal, ecclesiastical, dynastic world over there . . . holding it together for hundreds, thousands of years . . . was its literature, permeating to the very marrow, especially that major part, its enchanting songs, ballads and poems."

Immediacy of the militarily essential work caused the vulgar mind, the superficial thought, to overlook the problems of morale, or spiritual force, in any systematic way until the present war. We are pushed into it now by the overwhelming energy and far-sightedness of the Y. M. C. A. and kindred agencies, by the farseeing and inseeing character of our American officers, and by the spurring on we have had through the conditions demanded by our Allies, who are so dependent upon music.

I was interested by the comment of a French writer who said about us: "It never occurred to the Germans that the practical spirit of the Americans could not only rise superior to the gross materialism of the Prussians, but that this spirit was dominated and, in fact, directed by moral and religious idealism."

And what is this but spiritual force, the greatest of its ingredients being solidified by the arts? Don't you see it?

An art work always comes back to the people. The composer may live in solitude. He may not seem to contribute his quota to the war, but like the lonely chemist, working night and day in some isolated laboratory, he becomes over and over again the nation's savior.

I repeat that an art work comes back to the people. Do not make the mistake in thinking that the man who serves his country right off, instanter, in a physical way, is the only one who serves. We cannot live without our music, without our arts. President Wilson recently spoke of keeping the fount of sentiment fresh. And that was but a reference to the immediate effect of singing. From this moment on America stands for the finer morale. It is the only kind the nation will consider. We know the theater is essential. We know that humorists are essential. Mark Twain "shot" more enemies than a regiment of men with machine guns. The value of an ardent art-worker is greater than any other agency towards unification of attention and sentiment.

Recently it was part of my duty as member of the Civic Club music committee to speak before the city council, leading to more and better music in the parks and highways and byways of our city. I told them that music could teach patriotism in one hour and mold the spirit of the people towards our national viewpoint that by other agencies would take two months; and better at that, striking while the soul is hot. This now is becoming the universal feeling about both vocal and instrumental music.

A good many musicians received much excellent training in Germany. That is one reason that some—very few, it may be said—were slow to take a distinct part in the war; why some failed to respond with the amazing rapidity and boundless enthusiasm of the vast majority. But if those few will recall the words of Dr. Hornaday of the Council of Defense they will become active instead of passive (a transition being made very rapidly, be it noted). He said, "The Germany that we knew and admired so much and that many loved up to 1914 is dead and gone. And the new Hun—what of him? With his mask and his cloak contemptuously thrown aside, his misshapen and ugly form now nakedly stands forth."

In the past, German propaganda has had much to do and say against American music until many people believe that we have no American art. I have said so much in other places about our Americanism in music that I shall here remind the reader that the only persons who have said that, in my hearing, at least, or that I have heard of, were the kind who did not know; for example, more than one fine song out of a possible twenty-five; who placed on programs a commonplace American song because it was too much trouble to look up the rest, and, incidentally, spoiled their story of "no good" music. Almost all lack of musical patriotism has been due to lack of knowledge and lack of willingness to search the records of achievement. In this connection the people who have been too Prussianized or too lazy to look up what America has are the "same gentry who, when we propose to deal promptly and properly with a Doctor Muck, oppose sentence with gas bombs of lachrymal stuff about there being no nationality in art. The truth is that there is no art that is not primarily and fundamentally national."

And now, having covered the general aspects of art-force, I would say what may be done in a direct, personal and immediate way, like soldiers.

In the first place, the musician in general can be the mouthpiece of his government, privately and publicly, by giving accurate information on the many subjects before us. The present writer is a four-minute man in the moving picture houses, speaker for the Red Cross, and so on. If one finds he is not a good public speaker he still can get information from the department of the government devoted to that work and give it privately, also of the greatest importance.

The teacher will see to it that his pupils learn to play from memory all the national songs and the "people's classics," so that he can be at any time the playing center where there is any community work to do. The teacher is always in a position to urge his pupils to back up the government in its numerous enterprises, as well as to play anywhere and everywhere.

The pianist (or other instrumentalist) will kindly step off his pre-war pedestal and become a factor in the people's life. If his art is not profound enough to make his recitals a drawing card toward money getting, let him become a community pianist in a broad sense never thought of before.

The singer must do the same thing. And let it be said that practically every singer of any prominence and thousands without prominence have become centers for the waging of drives leading towards all the vital issues of our war and mercy. It has been pointed out that music has been the chief driving force, the most overwhelming power for generating enthusiasm in the unprecedented campaigns for billions of dollars.

The conductor always has his work so clearly cut out for him that indication of his privileges in the nation's life would be superfluous. He should lend, has given, and will give his services as a community leader in camps and field, to say nothing of his high value in "keeping the home choirs burning" with national enthusiasm.

The poet-composer is always needed. Let him not lose his poise. Let him not be persuaded to forsake his independence of view and do things he cannot do well, but let him write, Write, WRITE. To keep the fires of art always alive is the greatest of all permanent essentials, for the arts are among the few eternal forces of the world's activities.

In conclusion, I am aware that Tolstoi says somwehere that "People, who for the sake of art, are spoiled for life, not only do not render service to their art, but, on the contrary, inflict the greatest harm on it. They are taught in academies, schools and conservatories how to counterfeit art, and by learning this they so pervert themselves that they quite lose the capacity to produce works of real art, and become purveyors of that trivial art which floods society."

I know that many mediocre people are spoiled by artificially blowing up the art embers, but I know that our arts have never spoiled a man who was a real man for any life except the so-called life of the street in its narrowest and most commercial sense. It is immaterial that Beethoven was an unsocial man personally. It was only a short life he lived as a man compared with the century of his music healing the wounds of life of all peoples.

Michael Angelo's personality and what it accomplished was important, but his art work has given him the cross of courage of life, of beauty, of humanity.

Jesus was not a business man or a scientific celebrity, but all the constructive work of mercy, healing, hope, surgery in this war was due to one whose beliefs "spoiled him" for life.

Debussy might not have been a great force in camp music, but his Pelleas and Melisande is a molder and unifier of nations. He made articulate the modern French spirit.

Whitman seemed a loafer to some people. He just sat on a ferryboat and was humanly congenial. But he is the greatest of expressers of American life, the most vital force in democracy.

Brief Notes

Marguerite Namara, a recent addition to the Chicago opera, gave a recital at Aeolian Hall on Sunday, October 13. In the evening the American Society of Singers gave its usual Sunday entertainment at the Park Theater with the following soloists: Emily Gresser, violinist; Yvonne de Treville, soprano, and John Campbell, tenor. Sam Franko conducted the orchestra. Max Rosen, after an indisposition of some days, reappeared before the public on Tuesday evening, October 15, under the auspices of the Humanitarian Cult. On October 19 Harold Bauer, pianist, gave a recital at the Carnegie Hall.

Nelli Gardini an Ideal Grieg Interpreter

Not since the writer established himself in New York has a recital impressed him more deeply and for several reasons. Miss Nelli Gardini, whom the war compelled to remain in this country, gave most happily a recital consisting of nineteen songs by Edward Grieg. War will have done justice to many a composer whose songs were neglected because every recitalist formerly indulged only in programing compositions by German composers. How many treasures of songs were buried in the old continent because all recitalists seemed to have had a mania for the German. From the catastrophe many a composer from the Allied lands will be exploited wherever a concert is to be given. Perhaps Miss Gardini has in store many surprises, but one of them she revealed on the evening of October 15. It isn't sufficient to bring to the fore one composer only to prove the artist's taste for music. The program must be substantiated by voice—voice and voice. In both branches, in art of interpretation and in voice, Miss Gardini disclosed gifts above the average recitalist. A third quality, and very essential, which Miss Gardini possesses is "savoir chanter." This Norwegian lady is the owner of a pure lyric organ, well sustained in the upper, clear and pure in its lower register. What delighted the listeners was her exquisite, artistic employment of the mezzo voce. In every song heard by the writer there was the native expression of the Norse's feelings. In the "Turisten" Miss Gardini gave us a vivid description of the beautiful "fjords." She made us wish for a tour through poetical Norway. She revived our ambition to plunge into a whirlwind of the Scandinavian country. It would be superfluous to name every song she interpreted—they were all Grieg's. It was whispered that the lady, who has also a personality rarely to be recorded, is to give a spring recital of French songs exclusively. This is ingratiating news and if it is true we expect to pass a most enjoyable evening. Richard Hageman at the piano was an artistic help to Miss Gardini. Such exact accompaniment is rarely noted; such harmony between singer and pianist is a rarity in the concert hall. There was warm applause for the recitalist.

The Death of Liza Lehmann

Death has claimed another musician, in the person of Liza Lehmann, the composer. The gifted song writer died at London at the age of 50 years. She studied music in Rome and Wiesbaden. She was known as a soprano singer when she first appeared. In 1895 she produced her cycle of songs, "In a Persian Garden," with verses from Omar Khayyam (after Fitzgerald). Other works from her pen were: "The Daisy Chain," "Alice in Wonderland," the light opera "The Vicar of Wakefield," and a musical comedy "Sergeant Brue." She composed songs with Shakespearean texts, piano pieces and incidental music for plays.

Sue Harvard Sings

On October 18 Sue Harvard, soprano, gave a recital at the Aeolian Hall. Owing to the lengthy correspondence, comments are postponed for the next issue.

Walter Damrosch Engages French Forces

"Le malheur, fait le bonheur des autres." Morally the Germans have lost so extensively. That they are being replaced by allied musical forces—and we are not at any loss thereby—for the subtsitutes will prove that places held by Germans can be easily filled by French, Americans and other nationalities opposed to the central powers. Walter Damrosch, the conductor of the Symphony Society of New York, has appointed as his concert master Gustave Tinlot, in place of Alexander Saslawsky, who resigned to establish himself somewhere in California. Mr. Tinlot was formerly a member of the Societe des Concerts du Conservatoire de Paris, which is now touring the United States. He was also a member of the Concerts Hasselmans and first violinist of the Opera Comique. Among new members of Mr. Damrosch's orchestra belonging to the Gaelic race is Rene Pollain, formerly conductor of orchestras at Nancy. The new flutist is Daniel Maquarre, formerly with the Philadelphia orchestra. The season will open on October 31 at the Carnegie Hall in the afternoon, with Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the Russian pianist, as soloist.

Daniel Mayer's Son a Victim of War

Word comes from England that the eldest son of the popular musical agent, Daniel Mayer of New York and London, has died of pneumonia in a hospital at Portsmouth. Emile Nicholas Mayer was a captain in the British Army and after being gassed in a fierce attack was taken to a military hospital. There is a consolation for father Daniel that the son has died in the service of his country.

Aurore La Croix, Boston Pianist, Makes Striking Debut at Aeolian Hall

It is a curious coincidence that, just when the Spanish epidemic has affected the musical life of the country in a way which the war in itself has never done, debutants this season seem to attract more than a passing interest. On Thursday afternoon, October 17, a Massachusetts girl won a complete triumph at the keyboard. Not since the young Levitzki overturned the table on his elder colleagues some three years ago has a pianist left such an impressive artistic impression as Aurore La Croix, a American girl from the state of Massachusetts. The playing of Schubert's Sonata, Opus 42, disclosed in an unusually striking manner the perfect technic of the young lady. Imbued with temperament the work expressed unbounded musicianship and an imagination rarely to be noted in so young a player. Poetical, sentimental instincts are part of the young lady's list of assets. With a facile touch, a liquid tone, a clarity which was admirable, the "Slumber Song" of Weber-Liszt was an ideal interpretation. There was that fire in the execution which so many pianists lack. I was told that Miss La Croix studied, or rather coached, with Ethel Leginska and Leopold Godowsky, which explains the fact that she has Ethel's fire and Leopold's perfect technic. Miss La Croix is a "made-in-America" artist and furnishes one more irrefutable proof that our girls have talent and all the other qualities which form the body and soul of artistry. Other numbers played were Etude de Concert (Liszt), Serenade and Scherzo (E. R. Blanchet), Theme and Variations (Royce) and Espana (Charbrier-Chevillard). Miss La Croix is destined to become the star of two continents and we entertain the hopes that she will soon return to New York.

First Concert of the Societe des Concerts du Conservatoire de Paris

A glorious page for French art, a magnificent record for the French artists, a great tribute for Andre Messager—such can we characterize, define and describe the evening of October 15 at the Metropolitan Opera House. Let me tell you beforehand that we in America possess great orchestral bodies from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but let us be just to the visiting French organization and its leader, Andre Messager, and acclaim them as without superiors. Every member of this organization is a first prize winner and every one is a master in handling his instrument. The program was not a classic one, save for Cesar Franck's Symphony. But what they extracted from their instruments gave ample reasons to believe them capable of rendering "sans fante" the classics of the great orchestral masters. Such an ideal rendition of Franck's Symphony we have never heard since the days of Arthur Nikisch's visit to our shores. Our Boston Symphony, in which we take just pride, has never attained the equal artistic results which the French orchestra proved at its initial concert. Chicagoans will have the rare opportunity to listen to it some time in December and I am quite sure that no listener, whether layman or critic, will be able to find any fault. The strings are wonderful; they give us the sounds of the beautiful organ played by a master—no scratching, no sound which would offend the ear. It is the playing of celestial instruments. What results the musicians gave us in the rendition of Paul Dukas' "L'Apprenti Sorcier," what magnificent effects in the Rhapsodie Norwegienne by Ed. Lalo, what rhythm in the Debussy's "Nuages and Fetes," what delight in the "Benvenuto Cellini" by Berlioz! Where have we heard such effective renditions, where have we heard such playing of the brass instruments? What orchestra has ever played the "Star Spangled Banner" as this one and what of the "Marseillaise" and the "Rouet d'Omphale" by Saint-Saens? They are going to play Eroica. What a divine rendition Beethoven is to receive. What pride and how much glory for our musical life. France knows how to make musical propaganda. We salute our noble allies. We greet them on our hospitable soil, and we shout sincerely, "Long Live France and Her Arts." To this eventful evening Andre Messager, not a newcomer, completed the joy by a masterful handling of eighty-five fine players with his finesse and grace, with his authority and complete knowledge at the baton. No French music has ever been played as on this occasion. Each composer Mr. Messager gave his interpretation as if he himself was the author of the music. And with what simplicity he accepted Otto Kahn's tribute to the visiting organization—a silver lyre. Devoid of mannerisms and affectations, the French conductor responded to the large audience's ovation. Otto H. Kahn, to whom we are grateful for having brought this magnificent orchestra, delivered a brief address, saluting our allies who came to give us a proof of their musical standard. The concerts are given under the auspices of the French government and the Franco-American Association for Musical Art. When they get to the Windy City don't miss it or you will regret it.

THEATERS

"Sometime" at the Shubert

When Rudolf Friml undertakes to write music to a play, if your expectations are not great concerning his inspirations, at least you may feel confident that "some time" during the performance some sweet tune will come out of his score. In "Sometime" the very song by this name is sweet, melodious and away from the path of cheap tunes. The book by Rida Johnson Young is a simple story about a girl who loves and who acquires fame on the stage and the rival who pretends to love for the sake of winning fame before the footlights. Naturally the first wins back her lover, who quits the field because of mutual misunderstanding.

"Le Secret" at the French Theater

The offering of Jacques Coppeau's (for the second season) French players was "The Secret," by the author of the successful "Thief," Henri Bernstein. The French dramatist psychology of a secret concealed in order to avoid the breaking of an engagement is not so interesting. Many scenes overtax the listener's patience by an overabundance of emotionalism. Though some of the dialogues are amusing and characteristic of Bernstein, the play is monotonous and dry in many of its developments. Lucien Weber was excellent as the timid fiancee; Mlle. Bogaert, the woman who meddles, was charming and interesting; Mlle. Bing, the holder of the secret, was correct, and the exasperated husband, Jacques Coppeau, was admirable.

"The Maid of the Mountains" at the Casino

Messrs. Elliott, F. Ray Comstock and Gest are the so-called American impresarios of London musical comedies. After "Chu-Chin-Chow" they imported this musical play in three acts from London, where it still runs successfully at Daly's Theater. No matter where the composer, Harold Fraser Simson, got his inspiration—whether original or copied a bit from other sources—the music is charming, touching, sweet and melodious. "Farewell," sung by Teresa, who loves ardently Baldasare, the brigand chief, is inspiriting, and to its charm Miss Siolonie Expero's voice contributed. William Courtenay in the leading part (Baldasare) gave good romantic acting. The comical parts, which are amusing, are well interpreted by Bert Clark and William Danforth. The chorus sang unusually well. The music as a whole is semi-classic, imbued with oriental items, and it approaches in theme the Russian operas. The scenery is attractive, and so are the girls.—De Valdor.

Pendry—Last Friday evening Miss Constance Turgeon of Hinsdale gave a closing program at the Centralizing School as a good-by to her many friends. Saturday she left for Montreal to nurse the soldiers as a member of the Volunteer Daughters of Canada. She will nurse and entertain the patients with her music and reading. Miss Turgeon has been a student for many years of Miss Charlotte Pendry.

Pendry—Miss Pendry and Miss Henriette Fetzer of Hinsdale gave a program at the Hinsdale Sanitarium Thursday evening. This program is the first of a series of programs to be given during the winter.

Concerts in Chicago—There have been no concerts at all in Chicago for the past ten days and no date has been set for their resumption at the time of going to press, although health conditions are improving.

THE BELGIAN SCHOOL OF VIOLIN

By OVIDE MUSIN

Founder of the Musin Virtuoso School, New York City, a Graduate of and Formerly Head of the Violin Department at the Royal Conservatory of Liege

What is the Belgian "School" of Violin?

A "school" means the disciples of a man of genius, superior knowledge and of new ideas, the value of which he demonstrated and taught to his pupils, who handed down their knowledge to succeeding generations. It is true that a Belgian school exists and has existed from ancient times, and furthermore that the other schools were derived from the ancient masters who went from the Low Countries to Italy, Spain, France, Germany, Austria, and even to the Court of Peter the Great of Russia, where they demonstrated their advancement in the science and art of composition, singing and playing of musical instruments and where they founded schools which were the source of our modern development irrespective of nationality.

Charles de Beriot, who was born at Louvain, Belgium, in 1802, and died in the same city in 1870, was called the father of the modern Belgian School of Violin Playing, because of a special manner of using the bow, first demonstrated by himself, which gives greater elegance, freedom and continuity of tone. Among his pupils was Henri Vieuxtemps.

With few exceptions, all the great violinists have been graduated from the Royal Conservatory of Liege, or have been taught by masters of this school. Among the products of this school may be listed such artists as Auguste Rouma, Henri Leonard, Henri Vieuxtemps, Lambert Massart, Martin Marsick, Guillaume Remy (the last three being at the head of the Royal Conservatory of Paris, France, in succession), Cesar Thomson, Oscar Dossin (now head of the violin department at the Royal Conservatory of Liege), and Eugen Ysaye. Of equal interest is the list of their pupils. Henri Wieniawski, Camilla Urso, Fritz Kreisler and Emile Sauret, head of the violin department at the National Academy of Music, London, were pupils of Massart. Jeno Hubay, head of the Royal Conservatory of Budapest, Hungary, was a pupil of Vieuxtemps. Scradieck and Henri Marteau, head of the violin department in the Royal Hochschule of Berlin, are pupils of Leonard; Press, head of the violin department at the National Conservatory of Moscow, Russia, is a pupil of Ysaye; Kochanski, head of the violin department in Warsaw, Poland, a pupil of Thomson; also Boustindui, head of the violin department at the Royal Conservatory of Athens, Greece; Ernest Fassin, head of the violin department at the Musical Institute of Liege, Belgium, and Wallace Grieves, head of the violin department at the Springfield Conservatory of Music, Springfield, Ill., are pupils of mine.

Carl Flesch, the great Hungarian violinist, in a very interesting work on violin technic, writes that he owes all his best qualities and schooling to Marsick, thus allying himself to the Belgian School of Violin. Another pupil of Marsick is Jacques Thibaud, teacher of Albert Spalding.

If this list of artist products of the modern Belgian School of Violin as taught at the Royal Conservatory of Liege were to be catalogued it would look something like this:

Some Teachers and Some of Their Pupils

Charles de Beriot, of Louvain, Belgium—Henri Vieuxtemps.

Auguste Rouma, of Liege—Henri Leonard.

Lambert Massart, of Liege—Henri Wieniawski, Emil Sauret, Camilla Urso, Ondricek and Fritz Kreisler.

Henri Vieuxtemps, of Verviers, near Liege—Eugen Ysaye, Jeno Hubay.

Henri Leonard, of Liege—Ovide Musin, Cesar Thomson, Guillaume Remy, Oscar Dossin, Scradieck, Henri Marteau and Martin Marsick.

Ovide Musin, of Liege—Fassin Quittan, Elizabeth Zander, Sylvia Bent, Joseph Stoopack, Piery and Wallace Grieves, Thelma Wilkes.

Martin Marsick, of Liege—Jacques Thibaud, Carl Flesch.

Cesar Thomson, of Liege—Kochanski, Macmillian, Adolph Betti, Alfred Pochon, and Ugo Arra of the Flonzaley Quartet.

Eugen Ysaye of Liege—Deru, Jan Hambourg, Press and Poppeldoff.

The Ancient School

Historical records among the archives of Rome, Milan, the Escurial, Archives Royal at Madrid, of the crown of Aragon at Barcelona, at Paris, Lille, Ghent, Bruxelles, Liege, Antwerp, Mons, and other cities, establish the fact that Belgians (both Walloon and Flemish) were a powerful influence in the development of the science and art of composition, singing and playing of instruments in all the countries of Europe, also in Scandinavia and Russia; Italy in particular, as its people were more responsive. The Belgians were brought from the Netherlands in great numbers to furnish the music for the churches and courts of popes, rulers and princes. Philippe the Second and Charles the Fifth of Spain, Charles the Ninth of France, Leopold, Premier of Austria, Louis XIV, XV and XVI of France were captivated by the Belgian choristers.

An Italian historian, Guicciardini, 1523-1589, in stating his enthusiastic appreciation of the Belgas, did not limit his praise for their talent as instrumentalists and their genius for composition, but places above all their vocal art, which he declared "to be renowned and sought after by the courts of every Christian prince in Europe." The same historian published a biography of thirty of the principal musicians of his time in Italy who came from Belgium. "When Philippe le Bel arrived at the Iberique Peninsula with his celebrated choir, in which the most famous musicians and singers from the Low Countries predominated, it aroused the most enthusiastic admiration, became promptly a la mode, and the members regarded as beings altogether privileged."

Going further back in musical history, a few names will serve to prove the antiquity of the Belgian School. A monk named Hucbald, 840, of the Convent of St. Amand, near Tournay, Belgium, is called the father of primitive or ancient harmony. The true founders of the first school of music at Rome (1549) were two musicians from the Netherlands, Arkadelt and Goudimel. From this school came Palestrina, Animuccia, Nanini. Allegri, composer of the celebrated "Miserere," was a pupil of Nanini. This was before the violin as we know it today had appeared, and from 100 to more than 200 years before Corelli, Tartini and Viotti were born.

In 1540 appears Jean de Ockegem, born in Hainault, Belgium. One of his pupils was Josquin des Pres, called the father of modern harmony, chapel master of the Vatican, Rome. Another illustrious representative of the ancient Belgian school in Italy was Rolland de Lartre (also called Orlando Lasso), born at Mons, Belgium, 1520. At 21 he was director of the Chapel of St. Jean de Latran at Rome. He traveled in France and England, and in 1557 was called to the Court of Munich, where he died in 1594.

Franco, called in Belgium, Frank, of the Cathedral of Liege (1066), was the inventor of modern rhythm.

Dumont, born at Liege (1610), was the first to use thorough bass in his compositions.

SUCCESSFUL VIRGIL SUMMER

Mrs. A. M. Virgil, director of the Virgil Piano School, New York, reports a most successful Summer season with large classes of pupils from all over the United States and with an increased number of advanced players seeking further proficiency in advanced technic and interpretation of concert and recital work. Among these were three Alberto Jonas artist-pupils and one from Martinus Sieveking. This school has become the recognized haven for artists seeking finishing touches and probably prepares more pupils for their vocations than any other similar school in America.

Mrs. Virgil's fame has been further enhanced through the tremendous sale of her teaching compositions, which have become very popular not only among teachers but among dealers, so that the music sales department of the Virgil School is kept busy filling orders. It is easily seen, therefore, that this institution is one not only of great activity but is achieving in every department the results aimed for.

The Virgil method is different from most methods, as it constitutes a means for the thorough preparation of the hands, fingers and mind, for the accomplishment of a specific object, namely: the execution and interpretation of piano compositions.

"There is a difference between playing ability and musical ability. Technic is a foundation of playing, while fingers and brain work are the pillars of that foundation." This is the basis of the Virgil method, which permits pupils to play pieces according to their technical proficiency. Another important point of the Virgil method is velocity, made possible because of the special kind of finger work employed. Much of the skill of the Virgil pupils is due to the invention of the "Tek," which greatly facilitates technical work.

Mrs. Virgil's services are in demand everywhere and she is frequently compelled to make trips to teach and lecture in various cities. This Summer, in addition to her home work and a short vacation at Bergenfield, N. J., where she has a large estate, Mrs. Virgil found time to go to Wisconsin on a special mission. The prospects for the Winter are more than encouraging and promise to keep the activities of the school at white heat.—From the Musical Advance.

NOTES FROM THE NEW YORK STUDIO OF LAZAR S. SAMOILOFF

The well known singing teacher, Lazar S. Samoiloff, who has his studios in Carnegie Hall, New York City, will give a pupils' recital on Saturday evening, October 26, in Chalif Hall, opposite Carnegie Hall. There is also a reception arranged with a dance after the concert for the friends of the pupils. For admission each guest must buy some Thrift Stamps.

Some of Lazar S. Samoiloff's professional pupils will appear and solos, duos, trios and ensemble numbers will be sung.

Miss Helene Romanoff, the great dramatic soprano, lately with the Petrograd Opera Company, and Miss Vivian Holt, the celebrated coloratura soprano, will sing at the same occasion.

Mr. Samoiloff recently gave two concerts for the Red Cross and ever since America entered the war his pupils have been actively engaged singing for the soldiers. The Red Cross of Connecticut has requested Mr. Samoiloff and his pupils for a series of concerts and are at present working on concerts to be given in December and January.

Mr. Samoiloff only accepts students who are musically inclined and must be talented if he is to train them for professional work. Under his guidance those lacking the musical ear have acquired it through his method. He has opened a class of solfeggio, for which Lazar L. Weiner and Angela Morel are engaged as his assistants. He also has a class for the instruction of French.

REARRANGEMENT OF DATES FOR PARIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Paris Symphony Orchestra finds a revision of its coming tour necessary, which will cause a change of dates in many or all of the cities on its route, including two performances set for Sunday, December 1, at the Auditorium Theater in Chicago.

To begin with, the members of the orchestra arrived several days late in an Atlantic port on a French battleship. In the meantime hurried rearrangements of early concerts were made; then orders came to close theaters in many cities on account of the epidemic. This entails further and more extensive changes in the orchestra's bookings by the French-American Association for Musical Art, which are now under way.

The orchestra gave its first American concert at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York last Tuesday night and will give its second there on Sunday night next. The organization will enter upon its transcontinental tour as soon thereafter as theater openings permit. The matinee and night concerts announced for Chicago probably will be deferred to a fortnight later than formerly announced.

In order that the entire number of cities originally named as visiting points may be included in the tournee in spite of delays, the French Government has issued a supplementary permit allowing these musicians to remain in this country three weeks longer than their first passports allowed. This action was necessary because the organization, officially known as the Societe des Concerts du Conservatoire de Paris, is a national institution and its members are all instructors in the service of the government in the conservatoire.

The New Conductor

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced the election of Henri Rabaud, Paris, to the conductorship of the orchestra and one writer puts it, "The Boston Symphony is now a French band. The musical impulses of Paris will henceforth govern this orchestra, not Berlin." Then the hope is expressed that some day the Boston Symphony will reflect the musical pulse of Boston.

I predict that this will be several generations later—not until, in fact, Boston has musical impulses not born from foreign sources. All of her present prominent instructors are alien taught, the German schools trained the majority, and they look upon music through the glasses colored by such instruction. Nor will red-handed war remove the obsession for the "kultur" so long in control. It would not be beyond the possible if within two years after the end of the war the Boston Symphony audiences were again bowed in a sort of worship to some German, perhaps Dr. Muck, while he leads a renovated band, again German, through the harmonies of German composers. What may be true in Boston may, and probably will, be true in Chicago and other American cities.

In after war days the main body of real Americans will be very busy in reconstructing the business lines that war has injured or, for the time, buried by the war, and music will be left, except as a source of recreation and entertainment, to those members of the community who feel its power and have need of it to keep their morale intact. Music will not be, to the majority of youth or age, an essential vocational industry. The call for man and woman power, for feeding the nations now impoverished abroad, for furnishing adequate transportation service, for doing the numberless things that must be done to straighten out the tangled lines that war has caused in the country's business, will command, and rightly, first allegiance.

The public schools will more than heretofore provide vocational training, and the press will, perforce, educate through its advertisements and "write ups" the public to look upon vocational training as essential to the nation's best interests, and the stalwart young men, the vigorous young women, while believing in and enjoying art and music per se, will study perfunctorily at best, because, and again rightly, they will want a large and active part in the great movements of after-war days.

But, while the real American will feel and act in accord with the views stated, the alien, or half-spirited citizen living here, will feel little interest in these matters. Art and music will continue a major appeal and will here find many devotees. Then will the prediction, earlier made, that German influence would again be dominant in America, be in process of fulfillment.

There is an old saying, "It's hard to teach an old dog new tricks." It's harder to teach men and women new systems of education, new methods, new combinations of sound. Progress in new lines may seem to be made, when some event may clearly show that there has been no real advance at all.

There is one sure method for making the United States a country of American musical impulses, and that is by teaching music as an academic study in all our public schools. Here the germ of Americanism in music will find virgin soil and if the textbooks and songs are selected with proper care the second generation from now will make it possible to assert that our land has true and real American musical impulses. Through the children then, if taught by American instructors who believe in "America First," will come the era when music and musicians are an industry vital at all times and worthy a reasonable study and financial outlay by the entire population of requisite age.

Worcester Festival

The Spanish influenza epidemic, here, caused the management of the Worcester Musical Festival to give up its concerts this year.

The action, though necessary, has caused intense disappointment, as the excellent program and the array of soloists promised a musical treat not to be missed without regret.

The influenza has closed theaters and churches and other places for public meetings, and desperate endeavors are making to stamp it out. The latest reports are encouraging.

"FACE TO FACE WITH MUSICIANS"

A book by Charles D. Isaacson. (Boni & Loveright, New York.)

There is less to be said about this musical book, written very unmusically, than about Mr. Isaacson's concerts and recitals given under the auspices of the Globe Family Music. I wonder if Mr. Isaacson read "Commercialism," the paper read by Charles E. Watt, editor of this journal. He will find himself guilty of encroaching upon musicians and artists for their free services for the cause (?) of the Globe family. None of the artists who appeared at the Clinton High School or De Witt originated their fame from the above mentioned places, and probably none has ever secured a pay engagement through being presented by the editor of the Globe Family Music. I don't intend to quiz Mr. Isaacson concerning his services to the Globe. Whether they are paid or not, the family editor is depriving the artists of their livelihood, and if he is a real music lover he should encourage payments. Or, if he does organize these concerts and recitals with unpaid artists, it is probably his aim to advertise himself at the expense of naive and tender-hearted musicians. America is the country that pays for every little step one may undertake, excepting only the activities of musicians and artists, who are constantly made victims of self-styled propagators of music.

The book of Mr. Isaacson was compiled from his articles in the Globe dealing with the lives of the composers. Some may call his style of narrating the tales about the composers "original," but it is my opinion that the contents are equal to the fairy tales, not to the great imaginative writers, but of those magazines which, instead of breeding education, deteriorate the esthetic sense of the reader.

I let the masses judge the value of "Face to Face With Musicians." It was written for them—the same who heard gratis the services of the artists secured gratis. There is an introduction by Leopold Godowsky.

LESTER GROOM IN RECITAL

On the evening of October 8, at the Church of the Ascension, Lester Groom opened a series of three organ recitals, to be given between now and Christmas. The program was one which required skill and versatility on the part of the artist, both of which were ably demonstrated during the course of the evening. Mr. Groom's instrument is of the older make and while it does not hold all the possibilities of the modern organ the diapasons are very rich and there are a number of distinctive solo stops which Mr. Groom used to good advantage. The acoustic properties of the church also greatly increase the value of the instrument, enriching the tone and giving it the full beauty of a great organ. Mr. Groom is an artist of thorough training and the highest musical standards. And what is more, he is not lacking in the skill or perception required in living up to his ideals. The G Minor Fantasie and Fugue could not have been played with more precision and clean-cut understanding, while most effective registration was the outstanding note of the lighter numbers. Finlandia in closing was played with masterly insight and all the climactic resources of the instrument were brought into play.

Mr. Groom was assisted by John Hanny, baritone, a member of the choir and a pupil of W. H. Knapp, choir director. He sang "It Is Enough," from "The Elijah," and Allitsen's "Like as the Hart," in both instances accompanied by Mr. Knapp in a cello obligato. He is a young singer of much conviction and interpretive power.

The programs of October 8 and the following one, to be given November 12, are appended. It is to be hoped that many people will attend, for no one could spend a more satisfying evening.

BATON CLUB

The Baton Club held its first meeting of the season at the Central Y. M. C. A. It was a goodly attendance over which President George Schuler presided.

In the absence of O. E. Robinson, chairman, Irving Gingrich of the committee on new compositions presented the committee's report.

The offer of Charles E. Watt to present news items of club activities in the Music News was accepted and a publicity committee appointed to whom such items may be sent. Irving Gingrich, chairman, Glenwood Preble and Dr. Juan C. Maclean comprise the committee.

A new activity of the club that has long been needed and that no other bureau has successfully conducted was launched at this meeting. For the benefit of music committees desiring to employ choir directors an advisory committee was appointed for the purpose of supplying such music committees with a list of available directors and their records.

J. S. Fearis was elected to membership and Charles E. Lutton re-elected to membership in the club.

JOHN A. GILBERT, Secretary.

Scores a Remarkable Success in her Debut at Aeolian Hall—Boston Critics Sustained in their Opinion by those of New York

Following are the press comments:

"She brought with her the proofs that she has an artistic mission. Her fingers evoke the voices in the melodic and harmonic fabric. She plays music upon the pianoforte."—(New York Tribune, October 18.)

"She interpreted with effect a program which included Schubert and Chopin, in which she was most successful. She showed a talent which justifies hopes for her future."—(New York Herald, October 18.)

"She revealed a talent that is unquestionable. Miss La Croix will be worth hearing again."—(New York Evening World, October 18.)

"She showed an admirable technic and a fine understanding of music in divers styles, as well as those musicianly and temperamental qualities that only nature can bestow. A wide dynamic range, a rich variety of coloring, incisive accent, sureness in the conduct of the melodic line and a compelling tonal richness all characterized her playing."—(New York Globe, October 18.)

"More important than her personality was the fact that she really could play the piano, with a left hand which proclaimed a truly masculine energy, and a right of unusual dexterity. Miss La Croix proved herself a pianist with individuality and thoughtfulness, with a technical equipment fully equal to the task of translating her intellect and her emotions into sound."—(New York Evening Mail, October 18.)

Musical Autograms, by Winifred Edgerton Merrill, A. B., Ph. D. Price, $2.50 net. (G. Schirmer.)

This is a very odd aspect of musical source, namely, by mathematical process from the mere signature of a person. We gather from the preface that the idea originated in the author's mental perception of geometrical curves in listening to music, so that the conversion of curves into music was suggested. The signature of a name being full of curves, and those as different and individual as the now frequently heard of finger print, it was conceivable that some musical correlative might be found for each piece of handwriting. Roughly speaking, if one write his name on the music staff, the location of notes will be indicated by the different points of the signature, which points, however, are selected by mathematical rule. It is evident this will give only melodic outline and not, apparently, either key or rhythm, although what seems rather an arbitrary rule is adopted that only a concave or convex curve shall appear in one measure. It seems that the key, also, is assumed by the final location of the curve, it being a nice point as to how discrimination could be made, for instance, between B, B flat, B minor and B flat minor. On comparing the derived themes with the signatures, it seems obvious that what causes the high or low notes at the beginning or end is the initial or final flourish in the writing; for instance, "Nicholas Murray Butler" (high initial), "Thomas A. Edison" (ditto), "Woodrow Wilson" (descending final flourish). All these things are possible and reasonably logical, without showing any connection between the accidental curves of a signature and music. The construction now goes on to say, "The further development of the material is left to the musician"; and that is practically 99 per cent of the resulting composition, twenty examples of which are shown in "Musical Autograms." They are said to be "settings to music" and are done by Robert Russell Bennett, whose name is modestly omitted from the title page. Far be it from us to criticise the work of the obedient medium in such a process of translation, yet with so much latitude it would seem that even mechanically produced themes might have been worked out differently, here and there. Judging from the expression and tempo markings—for example, "with great energy" for "Theodore Roosevelt," "dramatically" for "Enrico Caruso"—it seems likely that he was not altogether unacquainted with some of the characteristics of the persons "autogramed." The appearance of the book is very artistic.

The Witch's Daughter, a cantata for soprano and baritone soli, chorus and orchestra, by Charles Sanford Skilton. Vocal score. Price 75 cents. (Carl Fischer.)

There are some very good passages in this work and the music is always "scientific" enough, using imitation and other contrapuntal accessories, but much of the harmony sounds more experimental than spontaneous. This is partly due to the persistent introduction of bits of whole-tone scale. The poem is by Whittier, and as the interest of the story warms up the music decidedly improves.

In Flanders Fields, recitation with music, by M. Jennette Loudon. Price, 50 cents net. (Willis Music Co.)

The very striking short poem of Lt. Col. John MacRae is here used as a recitation and music added which well harmonizes with its spirit. In general the themes follow the words syllable by syllable, thus resembling what has been called "Spoken Song," and there is little attempt at thematic treatment in the technical sense, although the opening passage recurs at the end. Most of the music shows fine harmonic feeling; take, for instance, the chords at "Row on Row," giving a subtle touch of the submediant major key on a tonic pedal in G minor; and again the line beginning "We are the dead!" The ending in the original key, G minor, with a signature of C minor, and the notation of the chords at the words "us who die" are details which might be open to question, but the composition is a worthy addition to the list of short readings with music.

Two Songs, by Helen Victoria Ryan. Price 30 cents net. (Gamble Hinged Music Co.)

These two songs, "The Swing" and "Time to Rise," are quite simple in idea and easy of execution. The texts are by Robert Louis Stevenson. In the first the opening melody is gracefully suggestive of the swinging motion. At measures 11 and 12 of the second page is a progression which is rather original—not often done. The second song is a "miniature," an eight measure setting of one of Stevenson's neat little poems. To the fastidious the passage approaching the cadence leaves something to be desired.

HAENSEL & JONES BOOK COURSES

The entire Artists' Series at the Lexington College of Music, Lexington, Ky., has been booked by Haensel & Jones, with Margarete Matzenauer, Max Rosen and Ethel Leginska appearing there on successive dates. The same management has also booked Leopold Godowsky, Max Rosen and Ethel Leginska at the Peabody Conservatory of Music course in Baltimore, Md., and has furnished the Sioux City concert course with Mme. Schumann-Heink, Leopold Godowsky and Max Rosen.

Zouboulakis—At a community sing at Armstrong School on October 10 a special feature of the program was the new martial song, "On to Victory," by John C. Zouboulakis of Chicago. It was sung by Eugenia Vesala, with violin obligato by George Kampis, and created a genuine sensation with its stirring text and definite and exhilarating swing as well as by the inherent message, which is, without question, a great one.

Ferrari—Leonora Ferrari, soprano, gave a program at St. Louis in the latter part of September and sang also at Muskogee, Okla., and Birmingham, Ala., early in October.

MATZENAUER LEAVES FOR WESTERN TOUR

Before leaving for her western concert tour, which opened brilliantly in Denver, Colo., on October 3, Margaret Matzenauer went down to Allentown, Pa., under the auspices of the War Camp Community Service, to sing for the soldiers and their friends at Camp Crane. The newspapers of Allentown were unanimous in declaring this concert by Mme. Matzenauer and Frank La Forge, her famous accompanist, the greatest musical treat ever offered an audience in that city.

Following her Denver concert, Mme. Matzenauer will sing in Rochester, N. Y., with the Rochester Symphony Orchestra, on October 21; in Syracuse, N. Y., on October 22; in Philadelphia, with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra on October 24; in Utica, on October 28, and in Detroit on October 29. On November 4, she will sing in Springfield, Ohio; on the 6th in Rockford, Ill., and on the 8th in Washington, D. C. On November 10 she gives her Chicago recital, and on the 11th she sings in Kalamazoo, Mich. November 14 finds the noted diva in Chattanooga, Tenn.; November 17, Akron, Ohio, and on November 19 she returns to New York for an appearance with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

On her way to the Pacific coast, where she has a tour during the month of December, the great contralto will sing in Houston, Texas, on November 27, and in San Antonio on November 29. Returning from the coast to take up her operatic duties at the Metropolitan Opera House after January 1, Mme. Matzenauer will appear as soloist with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra on January 2.

KATHRYN ROBERTS

The piano pupils of Kathryn Roberts gave a very interesting recital at Hamlin Hall recently. This is a splendid auditorium and just the place for a pupils' recital.

Those appearing on the program were: Walter Lingren, Ferry Smith, Edna Krause, Anna Fleming, Rose Maurer, Vernon Wandtke, Loraine Atherton, Marion Browning, Victor Nerico, Ruth Hermsdorf, Margaret Kennedy, Olive and Agnes Swanson, Violet Rhinehardt and Mildred Carlson.

The composers represented were: Engelmann, Heims, Krogmann, Truax, Verner, Mendelssohn, Lenecke and others.

The playing of each pupil showed that an unusual amount of time and pains had been spent in technical work.

At the close of the program prizes were awarded as follows to those doing the best work:

First prize, Ferry Smith; second prize, Anna Fleming, and third prize, Olive Swanson. Several pupils should come in for honorable mention and the work of Vernon Wandtke particularly deserves special mention.

Dorothy and Helen Duval, who were programmed for guitar numbers, through some error failed to appear. Miss Roberts announced that another recital would take place soon.

A New Quartet

Eleanore Capps-Hostler, Byrde Kitson Schwarz, Thomas Fannell and Frank Dunford, a new and thoroughly good ensemble, sang at the funeral of Frieda Burns, Red Cross and Liberty Loan worker, at Morgan Park on Monday, October 21.

Mrs. Burns had been very active in Red Cross work and the Liberty Loan drive, having ra'sed some ten thousand dollars by personal effort and posing as the Statue of Liberty in the big parade on Saturday, October 12, where she contracted the cold which resulted in her death one week later.

Pfeiffer—May Pfeiffer, contralto, left Chicago two weeks ago to fulfill a forty weeks' engagement with the Century English Opera Co. In the first two "stands" she scored unequivocal success in the leading role in "Carmen." The company is spending this week in Chicago on account of the influenza epidemic, but will resume operations next week at Peoria.

MUSICIANS AND THE LIBERTY LOAN

That the musicians of the country did an enormous service to the cause of the last Liberty Loan through the giving of their personal influence and their service admits of no question.

But they did more, for out of their decreased earnings (decreased specifically because of war conditions) the musicians of every city bought bonds most liberally.

Chicago musicians particularly have cause to be proud of their record, as told by Karleton Hackett in the Chicago Evening Post of last Monday:

Music is not one of the departments of activity which have thriven on the war. While the musicians provide a form of munition that is in great demand, it reacts on the spirit and consequently is not estimated on the basis of shells and high explosives. While the workers in the munition factories have been busy the twenty-four hours at wages they never dreamt of in peace times, the musicians have been expected to give their services at every call, and give them in the literal meaning of the word. This they have done gladly and proudly, to the full extent of their power, but it did not help them financially in making up their quota for the loan.

As some of them also have been rather under suspicion, it is worth while setting down just what the professional musicians of Chicago did as their share. The quota for the music trades, section 30, was $1,250,000, and while the final figures are not available at the moment this is written, they had passed the 100 per cent mark long before Saturday night.

As a branch of section 30, the Civic Music Association was appointed to organize the professional musicians. They were to confine their work to corporate bodies of a certain size, so that the figures below include only the larger institutions and take no account of the individual artists and teachers not affiliated with such organizations. These individuals subscribed through their ward organizations, and consequently music loses the benefit of the amount they paid.

The musicians' union subscribed somewhere in the neighborhood of $100,000, it not being possible to state the exact amount, since a great many of the men subscribed through the organizations with which they were regularly playing. However, the officials were sure the sum would reach $100,000 and might go much higher. For safety we will call it $90,000.

The Chicago Opera Company subscribed $55,400. The management, orchestra and chorus turned in a 100 per cent card. The management had to split its subscription and give part of it to the theatrical section on behalf of the Auditorium Theater. The technical departments, the stage hands in all their infinite variety, subscribed through the theater, and not through the opera company. Also this subscription list contains the names of but few of the famous artists of the company, for the simple reason that but few of them could be reached, some being still in Europe, others in South America and a number out on the Pacific Coast. Therefore the $55,400 represents pretty active response for that part of the company which is here in Chicago.

The Chicago Symphony Orchestra subscribed $21,700. This for musicians is the lean time of the year, just after the long vacation and before the winter's activities have had time to bear much financial fruit, but the men willingly took a chance on the future, like all the rest of the country.

The music schools of Chicago subscribed as follows:

|---|---|
| American Conservatory | $16,600 |
| Chicago Musical College | 9,500 |
| Columbia School of Music | 7,300 |
| Sherwood School of Music | 6,500 |
| Bush Temple Conservatory | 5,950 |
| Cosmopolitan School | 4,800 |

The great number of smaller schools and the hordes of private teachers have to be counted in with the mass of the people of this town, as there is no way of telling just how much they subscribed. It is to be hoped that they all went over the top 100 per cent.

"I too will set my face to the wind and throw my handful of seed on high,

It is loveliness I seek,
not lovely things."

—FIONA MACLEOD

The Musicians' Club of Women turned in $1,400, with the explanation that most of their members had subscribed through other organizations.

The sum total, counting the musical union as $90,000 to be absolutely on the safe side, is $219,150. Doubtless the musical union will make a howl at being put at so low a sum, but if they will bring on the figures they will receive full credit for every cent subscribed.

To make it all look proper and to be grasped at a glance:

|---|---|
| Musicians' Union | $ 90,000 |
| Chicago Opera | 55,400 |
| Symphony Orchestra | 21,700 |
| American Conservatory | 16,600 |
| Chicago Musical College | 9,500 |
| Columbia School of Music | 7,300 |
| Sherwood School of Music | 6,500 |
| Bush Temple Conservatory | 5,950 |
| Cosmopolitan School | 4,800 |
| Musicians' Club of Women | 1,400 |
| Total | $219,150 |

When everything shall have been counted there will doubtless be a bit more to add, but these are the figures turned in Saturday afternoon.

NEW YORK NO LAGGARD EITHER

Many reports of splendidly successful war benefit concerts in New York have recently been printed in Music News, but none is more significant or cheering than this story sent us by Daniel Mayer:

The Record Subscription of Any Musical Gathering During the Fourth Liberty Loan

The enormous sum gathered at the Metropolitan meeting on October 9 when $20,200,000 was collected was put in the shade on Saturday night, October 19, when the Russian Symphony Orchestra of New York, Modest Altschuler, conductor, assisted by artists, gave the program for the Russian Liberty Loan meeting at Carnegie Hall. The enormous sum of $23,000,000 was collected, five million representing the collective bid for "Old Glory," which was auctioned off at the end of the bidding. Nine wounded soldiers from Chateau Thierry and Belleau Wood secured nine million for the privilege of having the original telegrams announcing their casualty. One picture brought one million, another $500,000, and the patent of a piece of property with the signatures of James Monroe, Taft, Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson secured a one million dollar subscription. Five hundred thousand dollars was also secured for a dagger. This dagger was brought back from the German lines by an American soldier who had been taken prisoner and who awaited his opportunity to take the dagger out of the belt of his captor, stab him to the heart and return to the American lines.

ꟻ ꟻ ꟻ

In an address in New York, Otto Kahn referred to the war lords of Germany as "the assassins of the old Germany of Beethoven and Schumann."

This phrase is worthy of the attention and cogitation of those (few) musicians who still think it "a pity" that the old German masters of music should be included in the present prohibition of everything German.

This prohibition is not a deliberately planned and capriciously executed thing, let them remember—it is the outgrowth of a feeling of nausea for everything German which has been engendered by those in control of Germany today.

We might in the future be ready to again listen dispassionately to German music, but it will be a long time in the future, and it will never be at all until Germany has purged herself of the present diabolical influences which, as Mr. Kahn said, have assassinated the old Germany.

ꟻ ꟻ ꟻ

Never in its musical history has Chicago witnessed a time like that of the past two weeks, when, with endless concerts and other entertainments planned and announced, there came a sudden order for closing, which has left us absolutely without concert, theater or even movie entertainment for an extended period. At present there is such an improvement of health conditions that the ban has been lifted and concerts are again being announced, but the amount of rearrangement necessary is very great.

During the time of these enforced changes of plan and the entailed heavy losses the Chicago musicians have maintained a splendid morale and, in spite of the fact that there had already been a weary waiting for "the opening of the season," they have accepted this enforced additional delay with patience and courage.

Certainly musicians have earned a good season through their willingness to work for everybody else than themselves and their indomitable courage in dealing with a difficult and trying situation, and we certainly hope that they will have it.

PASSING COMMENT

The rector of St. Chrysostom's Church on last Sunday morning touched a responsive chord in the editorial heart when he spoke of the fact that it was "impossible to read" most of the notices that were sent in to him relative to church and community work. He ought to see some of the matter which comes into a music newspaper office.

The good, solid musicians of Chicago who worked ardently for the success of the Liberty Loan and succeeded in piling up so creditable a result as is noted elsewhere in these columns must love Frederick Donaghey of the Chicago Tribune to madness for his beautiful "tribute" to them, printed in his editorial chatter of "The World's Greatest" last Sunday.

The large sum of money reported as the musicians' quota came from the rank and file of Chicago teachers and artists. There were no big benefit concerts as in New York, no public appeals as in the theaters.

Chicago is not a big managerial city and consequently big concerts with great display of stars is here a difficult thing to manage at any time, except when the opera is in progress.

For the "leading" newspaper of the city, under these circumstances, to print such a slur as that of last Sunday is nothing less than monstrously unfair and disgustingly imbecile.

It is such "reliability" on the part of the Tribune which makes the content of its day-by-day musical column so absolutely invaluable(?) to the profession at large.

A LETTER

Chicago, October 22, 1918.

Music News:—About a year ago I began cutting out batons for the various friends I had in the music of the army and navy and have continued this work until I have about seventy of these hand-made sticks in service, ranging all the way from men of war on the other side to the U. S. Hospital at Fort Bayard, New Mexico.

Last Saturday at the Liberty Loan meeting at Grant Park, Sergeant Vorkeller of the Camp Grant Hospital Band played his program and suddenly turned to the great crowd, holding his beautiful Circassian walnut stick above his head, told the crowd that it was a gift of a personal friend, a man who had made sticks for the music of his country, for Lieutenant Sousa, Santlemann, for Mr. Conway and many others, and that he would not part with it as a personal matter, but that he would give it at auction to the highest bidder for Liberty Bonds. His efforts met with great success, for his stick brought a one thousand dollar purchase.

(The sergeant's comment afterwards when congratulated upon his effort: "Darn it all, he kept the stick.")

(Signed) C. L. BURLINGHAM.

LOVE

(Dedicated to the Home Folks of Our American Crusaders)

Oh! Heartstrings stretched across the sea;
The depths you touch are greater far
Than space of air, or sea, or land,
To where your loved ones are.

Oh! Heartstrings stretched across the sea,
Of wife, or mother, child or maid;
Your aching strength is greater far
Than cables men have laid.

Oh! Heartstrings stretched across the main;
You bridge our armies overseas.
The columns that support your piers
Are women, on their knees.

Through heartstrings stretched across the sea,
The Nation's life blood flows along
From hearts that ache, and throb and burn,
To right a world of wrong.

Oh! Heartstrings stretched across the sea;
The depths of love before unknown,
That gives you strength from day to day,
Unfathomed, are God's own.

CLARA EDMUNDS HEMINGWAY

Following a month's vacation, Mrs. Hemingway has assisted at several musicals and recitals. She also substituted as soloist at the First Presbyterian Church and at the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Gary, Ind.

More than a score of original readings, whistling and piano solos and songs have been given, including her "Twilight" (published by Heffelfinger), which she has sung, by request, five times.

It has had many recent presentations. E. C. Edmunds, to whom it is dedicated, who is in France, en route to Italy with the Y. M. C. A., has sung it at Gary, Ind., at Berrien Springs, Mich., and at a musicale at the home of Rev. Lenox, Benton Harbor, Mich.

Alice Margrette Olsen, a concert organist, used her own transcription of "Twilight," for organ, at a concert in Manistee, Mich., and one at Duluth, Minn.

Other songs programmed by Mrs. Hemingway are: "The Easter Is the Lord's" (Lynes), "Chi M'Arresta" (a cavitina from "Medea," by Mercadante), "Cho-Cho" (Ross) (used twice), "Papillons" (King), "Nobody Knows" (Johnson), "Rain" (Turner), "In Your Eyes" (Hilliam), "Over the World" (Clarke), "By the Waters of Minnetonka" (Lieurance), "Home Song" (Manning), "The Open Road" (Ross), "Alone Upon the Housetops" (Galloway), "Sweet Peggy O'Neil" (Waldorf). Encore songs used are: "Magic of Your Eyes" (Penn), "Songs of Dawn and Twilight" (Vanderpool), "Isn't It True?" (words by Ferguson) (Browning-White). At a recent musicale she also used "There Is a Medlar-Tree" (MS.), "Li'l' Brown Berry" (MS.) and "Dreamland Way," recently published, all compositions of Marion Coryell, with the composer at the piano.

Whistling solos included "Charming Chloe" (Edward German) and "At Dawning" (Cadman).

HIGH SCHOOL MUSIC TEACHERS' CLUB

The music teachers of the city high schools have formed a club for the exchange of ideas and other mutual help. The organization is to be known as the High School Music Teachers' Club of Chicago. The officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows: President, O. E. Robinson; vice president, Margaret Blood; secretary and treasurer, Eleanor Schweitzer. The program committee consists of Louise Hannon, William J. Andrus and Lenna Landis. Other committees will be named at the next regular meeting, which will take place on November 14.

PAULINE LEWIS

Pauline Lewis, the accompanist, spent the past summer in study with Richard Hageman, the well known conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and is very enthusiastic over the help she received from him. Miss Lewis is again the accompanist in the studio of Ada Markland Sheffield and in that of Edward Clarke at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory. She is also accompanist for Madame Sofia Stephali, with whom she is practicing regularly on new programs for the season.

DEARBORN SCHOOL OF LYCEUM ARTS

Lillian Barr Johnson of the Dearborn School of Lyceum Arts appeared with great success at a reception in Davenport, Iowa, of which the Davenport Times says, "Mrs. Johnson possesses a beautiful coloratura voice and sang several groups of English and French songs in a satisfying manner."

Miss Jessie Edwards, pupil of Mrs. Mandeville, has within the past month made three appearances at Camp Dewey, two appearances for the Y. M. C. A. at Great Lakes and once for the Patriotic League. Miss Edwards, who is a promising young soprano, is a great favorite at Great Lakes.

Mrs. H. E. House, also a pupil of Mrs. Mandeville, has recently appeared with great success at both the Christian and Presbyterian Churches at Manhattan, Kan.

ELIZABETH GUION DORMER

Elizabeth Guion Dormer will appear in a program of readings and songs at her studio, 817 Kimball Hall, on Sunday afternoon, November 3, at 4 o'clock. She will sing "The Asra" (Rubinstein), "Sans Toi" (Guy D'Hardelot), "The Spirit Flower" (Campbell-Tipton), "The Cantillations"; an original number, "The Old Leather Trunk"; "Materialism" (Rose De Vaux Royer), "What the Chimney Sang" (Griswold).

The dramatic selections are "Verdun" (Harold Begbie), and a one act play by Alfred Sutro, "A Marriage Has Been Arranged," will also be given.

Mrs. Dormer, dramatic reader, original monologist and mezzo-contralto and a successful teacher of voice and expression, English and French diction, has many pupils on the stage, concert and lyceum platforms. Miss Pauline Smith, who had her dramatic training entirely under Mrs. Dormer, made her debut with Leo Ditrichstein in "Le Roi" ("The King") last year. She played the ingenue role in a New York stock company during the summer and now is playing second lead in "Seven Days' Leave" in the New York company.

Charles Miller, a baritone, is in musical comedy, and Miss Calvin and Miss Holbrook, two of last season's talented pupils, are giving entire programs of pianologues and cantillations in lyceum work.

THE KNUPFER STUDIOS

Among the students of the vocal department of the Knupfer Studios who have recently achieved success in public are Harry Thomas and Celestine Dickey. The former, a pupil of Sebastian Burnetti, fairly carried away the congregation of the Isaiah Temple, where he is engaged as a solo tenor, with his singing of the song "Liberty."

Miss Dickey rendered effectively a well chosen program at the opening concert of the Monday Music Club of Keokuk, showing the result of careful training by Mme. Lenska, one of the latest acquisitions of the Knupfer Studios.

Mr. Knupfer has in preparation a number of recitals by pupils of the junior department, as well as of the advanced grades. A program of exclusively American compositions, featuring MacDowell, Schelling, Carpenter, Mrs. Beach, Collins and Griffes, is also on the calendar of coming events.

MADRIGAL CLUB

In the Chicago Madrigal Club's sixteenth annual competition for the W. W. Kimball Company prize of $100 the award has been made to Miss Frances McCollin of Philadelphia. The poem was written by Miss Bertha Ochsner, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Ochsner of Chicago.

It is noteworthy that both poem and music were written by women. The composition, entitled "The Nights o' Spring," is in madrigal form and will be sung at the club's second concert of the season, March 13. The judges were Edward C. Moore, Victor Garwood and D. A. Clippinger.

STULTS STUDIO NOTES

Although early in the season, Mr. Stults is able to report two students who have secured excellent engagements. Leonard Aldridge, baritone, has just signed a most advantageous contract as baritone in the Ogden Quartet. In this organization he will be associated with Mr. and Mrs. Ogden, tenor and soprano, and Hazel Huntley, contralto. The quartet is giving short versions of "The Mikado" and "The Dutch Doll," and is extensively booked for lyceum and vaudeville time. It is of interest to note that Mr. Aldridge succeeds the well known baritone, Harold Saurer, also a pupil of Mr. Stults, who is now in France.

Another talented pupil is H. A. Ethridge, tenor, who has just returned from a most successful recital trip in Ohio and Pennsylvania. His appearances were in Youngstown and Warren, Ohio, together with Newcastle and Pittsburgh, Pa. For three of the towns he was immediately re-engaged for future programs. He recently appeared with much success at Decatur, Ill., taking the place on short notice of a company that failed to make connections. He is also engaged for Chautauqua work during the coming summer by the Coit-Alber Bureau. In this trip he will head his own company.

———♯♯♯———

Murdock Trio—The Murdock Trio, consisting of Mora Murdock, pianist; Leta Murdock, violinist, and Elizabeth Olk-Roehlk, cellist, gave the first of the season's concerts at the Convent of the Sacred Heart in Lake Forest, Wednesday afternoon, October 23. Besides trios by Hurlstone, Arensky, Grainger and Sandby, each member presented a group of solos which proved a delightful variety for the program.

ST. JAMES' EPISCOPAL

Just as in many other Episcopal churches at the present time, the atmosphere of patriotism is steadily and beautifully maintained at St. James' and the use of the flags of the United States and our Allies and the singing of the patriotic hymns are always thrilling features of the service.

At St. James' last Sunday morning, as in all other churches, the service was somewhat curtailed, but it was a fine musical service, nevertheless, and reflected great credit on Hugo Goodwin, who is fulfilling his first season as organist and choir director there.

This is not the ideal season in which to do "first" work in any church, but Mr. Goodwin is achieving far greater success at St. James' than would be supposed possible under the double disaster of war and influenza epidemic, both of which factors have played havoc with available men and boy singers.

Excepting in the beautiful solo section of the Te Deum of the morning the sopranos were rather light in volume, but the contingent of men in both divisions was surprisingly good, and the entire sum of the choral singing was far more than adequate, for it maintained a continual flow of musical beauty and rose occasionally to positive eloquence.

Especially was this true in the Te Deum, which chanced to be the E Flat Opus (short) of Dudley Buck.

If this writer were organist in an Episcopal Church he would put on a Dudley Buck Te Deum every Sunday morning of the entire year.

There are a lot of them to choose from and all of them are so superior to any other known output as to make them notably fine in actual use.

Dudley Buck was a master climax builder—he was wonderful in his ability to deal with great masses of tone and he knew the value of contrast to a finish. Also, he was never afraid of being too saccharine and, therefore, each of his anthems, as well as of his service numbers, contains occasional bits of pure melody which for absolute beauty and quick appeal have been surpassed by no American writer either of sacred music or the "profane" variety.

Mr. Goodwin may congratulate himself heartily on the success of this work on Sunday morning, no less than on that achieved in the offertory anthem, which was the brilliant and masterful "Praise the Lord," by Elvey.

Mr. Goodwin has now a firm hold on his new organ and has learned exactly how to deal with his particular problems of accompaniment. He not only provides an adequate background for all the choral numbers, but is positively and effectively master of them also.

In solo playing he is, as always, exceedingly good and the organ at St. James' has never sounded better than under his skillful manipulation. A week ago last Sunday at the special festival service in the afternoon a unique treat was offered in the duos for organ and piano by Mr. Goodwin and Mrs. Irene Belden Zaring, a treat, by the way, which is yet being talked about by those who were present.

EMORY GALLUP IN RECITAL

A short recital was given last Sunday afternoon at St. Paul's Episcopal Church by Emory Gallup, organist of St. Chrysostom's Church. Mr. Gallup's program consisted of the Cesar Franck Pastorale (E major), the Bach B minor Prelude and Fugue, "Improvisation-Caprice" Joseph Jongen), and Fiat Lux (Dubois).

The numbers were pleasurably varied and thoroughly representative, and the soloist, with ingratiating technique, made full and artistic use of the possibilities of his instrument, though it may be said that the accessories of St. Paul's organ are none too great for an artist of Mr. Gallup's proportions.

His recital was introductory to special music furnished by the regular choir singing "Magnificat in G" (Cruickshank) and Mendelssohn's "I Waited for the Lord" and "Hear My Prayer." The boys were in good routine and sang heartily, as choirs may be expected to do on these old favorites. The soloists were Masters Bradley Davies and George Zeigler, sopranos, and Harry Veitch, alto, with John Allen Richardson at the organ.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Craven—Mr. Craven has three professional pupils holding fine positions out of town who have returned to Chicago and are taking a lesson per day during the epidemic quarantine in their respective cities—Miss Helen Flack, soprano, who is located at Ironwood, Mich.; Margaret Gilmore, contralto, at Marshalltown, Iowa, and Mrs. Ballou from Wheaton, Ill.

ILLINOIS COUNCIL NOTES OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ORGANISTS

Owing to the severe epidemic of Spanish influenza in Chicago the first meeting of Illinois Council for this season had to be postponed, but it is hoped that conditions will soon improve and enable the council to meet in November.

This season it has been decided not to confine the meetings to state headquarters, but to hold them alternately on the west, north and south sides of the city.

The first meeting will be held at state headquarters, Epiphany Church parish house, 201 South Ashland boulevard, Chicago, on Sunday afternoon, November 17, at 3:30 o'clock. The subject to be taken up will be "New Publications for the Organ and Church Choir." Several of the music publishers have recently issued compositions of great excellence, which will be played over and their merits discussed.

In these days choir directors are in urgent need of really good anthems, especially those of a patriotic character, and many fine examples have been sent in for inspection.

During the past year (September, 1917, to August, 1918) twenty-seven new members have been added to Illinois Council, and this season the officers and members expect to make a much greater gain. The National Association of Organists is a real power for good in the community and endeavors in every way to live up to its grand motto, "Fraternity." Every organist should become a member. The fees are only $1 per year, which includes a subscription to the Console. Application blanks may be obtained of the secretary, 201 South Ashland boulevard.

———♯♯♯———

Hebert—Harriet L. V. Hebert, contralto, who spent the summer in Montana, has returned to her work in Chicago. She is leading the community singing at the Liberty Loan Clearing House very successfully. Next month she will make a short concert trip in Kansas and Missouri.

———♯♯♯———

Fraser—At Grace Episcopal Church, Oak Park, on next Sunday morning in commemoration of the fifth anniversary of the passate of the Rev. F. R. Godolphin, and of his own fourth anniversary as organist, Mr. Arthur Fraser will present his new Communion service in F, written for the occasion.

———♯♯♯———

Lester—Mrs. Margaret Lester, soprano, was soloist at both the morning and evening services at the McCabe Memorial Church last Sunday, singing "The Lord Is My Light" (Oley Speaks) and "O, Saviour Hear Me" (Gluck).

———♯♯♯———

Spencer—Allen Spencer will give a piano recital at the Playhouse on Tuesday afternoon, November 12, for the benefit of the American Friends of Musicians in France.

———♯♯♯———

Brock—Collins J. Brock has resumed his work at the Army Y. M. C. A. at San Antonio, Tex., after a summer spent in the north in recuperation.

———♯♯♯———

Marr—Graham Marr will sing before the Lake View Musical Society on Monday, November 11.

RICHARD HAGEMAN

Richard Hageman has reopened his New York studio at 304 West Seventy-first street. Owing to Mr. Hageman's time being entirely occupied with the Society of

RICHARD HAGEMAN

American Singers, in which organization he acts in the capacity of chief musical director, he was obliged to postpone the opening of his studio from October 1 to October 15. However, considering the splendid success attained by this society of our young American singers, Mr. Hageman realizes his untiring efforts (sometimes working from 9 in the morning until very often 1 and 2 a. m.) have been well worth while.

He is entering his eleventh season as conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, where he has full charge of the Sunday night concerts, as in the past. And instead of taking a summer vacation he just completed his third successful summer season at Ravinia Park, Ill., as conductor with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. While at Ravinia Park he also maintained his summer studio at Glencoe, Ill., where every moment of his time was taken teaching his numerous pupils, also having had a waiting list of nineteen.

———♯♯♯———

De Lima—Edna De Lima, soprano, appeared before the Globe Music Club, Manhattan, on October 16, singing "La Pavene" (Bruncau), "Les Papillons" (Fouderain), "Noel des Enfants" (Debussy), "The First Meeting" and "Autumn" (Grieg), "The Silver Nightingale" and "Secret of a Rose" (Morris Class).

———♯♯♯———

Kimbell—Grant Kimbell, tenor, will sing the part of Don Jose in "Carmen" (second act) at the Chicago Musical College performance at Ziegfeld Theatre in the near future. This is of special interest in view of the pronounced successes of Mr. Kimbell at the same place in "Tosca," "Mme. Butterfly" and "I Pagliacci."

———♯♯♯———

Groom—The second of the series of organ recitals by Lester Groom at the Church of the Ascension will be given on Tuesday evening, November 12.

Press Notices of Operatic Success of Carl E. Craven, Dramatic Tenor

"Faust"—Carl Craven sang the title role splendidly and acted with fervor and finish.

"Cavalleria Rusticana"—Mr. Craven entered into the performance with vigor and enthusiasm, showing no mean acting ability. He disclosed a voice of real tenor timbre.

"Pagliacci"—Mr. Craven did his most outstanding work in the "Lament." This he gave with a dramatic interpretation such as would be expected of a long skilled opera singer.

"Tosca"—His brilliant singing in the famous big aria, "E Lucevan le Stella," was one of the great successes of the evening.

"Carmen"—Carl Craven was entirely in the picture. The "Flower Song" was his big opportunity and he made splendid use of it. He has a fine voice full and firm always, with stirring top notes.

Mr. Craven also has "Butterfly" in his repertoire.

FIRST OF THE SHIPMAN CONCERT SERIES AT LINDSBORG, KAN., A SUCCESS

The first concert of the Shipman Artists' Course to be held under the auspices of the Bethany Girls' Glee Club and the Campus Association took place in the College chapel Tuesday evening, October 8. Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, the pianiste, has been steadily rising in her art until today she ranks among the foremost of women pianistes. Her program had been very carefully selected and her work showed all the qualities of the artist. Her first number, the D'Albert Suite in D Minor, was played with a brilliancy of technic which showed a true understanding of this beautiful work. In the MacDowell group Mme. Ryder brought an interpretation which took us to the heart of our great American composer. The Russian groups were unique even for us at Bethany, which showed Mme. Ryder as an educator, as well as a student of the modern Russian, in all her work. She showed brilliancy of technic, intelligence in interpretation which, coupled with her delightful personality, made her part of the concert enjoyable.

Mr. Proctor easily lived up to his reputation as one of the best of the rising American tenors. In his big aria from "Don Giovanni" he proved himself master of dramatic singing and has certainly earned his place as a member of the Chicago Opera Company. In a group of French songs very happily chosen, Mr. Proctor sang with delightful artistry and excellent diction. His last group, including a song composed by himself, he sang with sincerity and conviction. Burleigh's "Young Warrior" was especially pleasing to the audience. Mr. Proctor sings with a voice always under perfect control. It is a voice of power and beauty; whether he be in dramatic work or purely lyrical he is always equal to the occasion. In fact, he is one of the best tenors ever heard at Lindsborg.—The Lindsborg News.

The first concert of the Shipman series took place in a most auspicious beginning, both from the artistic and financial point of view. The two organizations in charge were very fortunate in being able to procure two artists of the rank of Warren Proctor, tenor of the Chicago Opera Compand, and Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, pianiste. The quick rise to fame of the former was easily enough understood by the audience, which was delighted by his wonderfully smooth voice, by the ease and naturalness of his performance and his pleasing interpretation of his songs. Be it in his rendition of sentimental love songs or in the martial strains of the "Young Warrior" or in the classic beauty of the air from Mozart, Mr. Proctor never failed to win the enthusiastic appreciation of his audience.

The first, third and fifth groups on the program were piano numbers by Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, who was able to make herself appreciated by the whole audience in a way only few pianists can. She has very carefully selected her program in such a way as to bring out her particularly special abilities.

An exquisite feeling for rhythm and liveliness of movement, together with a brilliancy of touch, attracted the closest attention of the audicnce at all times, and these were the qualities that were so well brought out in her program, which consistently avoided those more massive compositions the performance of which would have been hampered by a certain lack of broadness and fullness of the louder tones. All in the audience of Tuesday night had a real musical treat and will look with pleasure toward future appearances of the same artists.—The Bethany Messenger.

AMERICAN DEBUT OF THELMA GIVEN, VIOLINISTE

Thelma Given, a young American girl who may be termed the last of the amazing cycle of the Auer pupils now before the American public, will make her American debut at Carnegie Hall next Sunday afternoon, November 3.

Miss Given is perhaps more of an Auer pupil than any of her distinguished contemporaries, having studied with the great master for six years, a period longer than Elman, Heifetz or Seidel, Eddy Brown, Parlow and the others.

After residing abroad for the past six years, Miss Given was compelled to quit Russia on the outbreak of the revolution and returned to her home with Professor Auer's party.

Miss Given was born in Columbus, Ohio, in 1896. She studied the violin under different teachers in the United States until she was 15. In 1911 she went to Europe to continue her studies. Professor Auer heard her at Contrexeville, France, that year and she was immediately accepted by him as a pupil. She thereupon made her home in Petrograd, where she has since studied with him.

Miss Given gave her first concert in the Conservatory of Music in Petrograd in 1916 with great success and she repeated this success in Reval and other Russian cities, as well as in Finland, Sweden and Norway. The past summer was spent by Miss Given at Lake George, N. Y., where she put the finishing touches on her debut program under the direction of her distinguished master.

Miss Given is the possessor of the famous violin known as "The Fountain," one of the historic instruments made by Joseph Guarnerius at Cremona, Italy, in 1738. It became a part of the famous collection formed by A. Fountain at Norfolk, England, and thence passed through various hands into those of its present owner.

Miss Given's program follows:

Chaconne ..... Vitali
Concerto, E minor ..... Jules Conus
Recitativo, allegro molto; adagio; cadenza; allegro subito
Poeme ..... Chausson
Russian Romance ..... Kryjanowsky
Hebrew Lullaby ..... Achron
Variations on a Theme of Corelli ..... Tartini-Kreisler
The Last Rose of Summer ..... Flotow-Auer
(Dedicated to Miss Given by Prof. Auer)
Two Norwegian Dances ..... Halvorsen

WONDERS OF THE MODERN ORGAN

How an Organist Expended 37½ Tons of Force in Playing a Difficult Piece Through Once, and 9,400,000 Pounds Pressure in Learning It

By HENRY B. RONEY

Common as are church organs and organ recitals, it is doubtful if one person in a thousand has any adequate idea of the complicated and scientific character of the modern instrument, or the countless hours of practice, dogged perseverance and expense involved in actually mastering its intricacies and the masterpieces written for it. Any smart piano student can draw a few stops haphazard, press the keys, and get a tune out of the organ. To master its mechanical difficulties, understand the construction of the instrument, and its myriads of combinations of tone color that lie within, like the colors on the artist's pallet awaiting the brush and artistic eye of the master painter—these are quite another thing.

When I was a kid organist in Michigan I played a church organ of the old "tracker" action type—the best known in those days, slow-speaking and heavy to manipulate, especially when keyboard and pedal couplers were on. The connection beween key, roller board and pipe was by a long thin strip or pine or spruce wood three-eighths of an inch wide and one-sixteenth of an inch thick, called a "tracker." Many of them were seven to ten feet long. When a key was pressed by this attenuated wooden connection, it opened a valve against strong wind pressure in the wind chest, which admitted wind to the pipes. Bricks, stones, railroad iron, or any old junk were placed on the bellows to maintain this wind pressure and force air through the speaking pipes. Modern tubular pneumatic, electric, duplex and electro pneumatic actions, light as a featherweight and permitting extraordinary rapid key work, were then undreamed of.

After arduous practice-preparation in a cold church in the dead of winter, with more zeal than discretion, I tackled the famous Theme and Variations in A flat by Louis Thiele, by many organists considered the most difficult organ composition written. Testing the heat drawing qualities of cold ivory in zero weather with fingertips sometimes frozen solid in the zeal for the mastery of the "Thiele Variations," was merely an incident in the achievement finally accomplished.

My inquisitive ambition was then to learn how much physical exercise, expressed in terms of pounds avoirdupois, was exerted in bringing the celebrated test piece up to "concert pitch." An answer was found in the following curious manner: I counted the notes in the composition (nothing was too laborious in the wildly enthusiastic days of youth), and discovered that I was required to learn to play approximately 12,650 notes with the hands, and 2,100 with the feet in the course of the piece. This included repetitions and trills in manuals and pedals. Then by carefully placing weights upon the manual keys, I found that it required twelve ounces of dead weight to merely press the key down. But as every key had to be struck with at least double this pressure to insure prompt action and clearness of teachnique, twenty-four ounces of quick pressure would be necessary for each key.

The pedal keys, with a strong spring under each key to give quick return action, and the wind chest air pressure resistence, required a weight of fifteen pounds to merely press one down. This was arrived at by adding the iron weights of a pair of scales until the key gave way and went down. But as pedal keys must be usually played with a slight kick or quick pressure, at least double the dead weight pressure had to be exerted for each key, viz., thirty pounds.

It was then only a simple question of arithmetic to learn that I expended a pressure equal to about 75,000 pounds, or about thirty-seven and one-half tons, in playing the piece through once. How many times it, or its harder portions, was played through in overcoming its enormous difficulties I do not know, but it must have been 125 to 150 times, equaling, approximately, 9,400,000 pounds pressure of feet and finger tips, or about 4,700 tons, without leverage or other mechanical means. It is quite probable that other and longer organ compositions would make still greater demands upon the physical reserve forces than the "Thiele Variations," notably the "Passacaglia" of Bach, the "Ninety-fourth Psalm Sonata" of Ruebke, or the colossal "Fantasia and Fugue" of Liszt's on the chorale, "ad nos ad salutarem undam," which requires thirty minutes in performance.

And this was the type of organ in use for 200 years, until Yankee brains and ingenuity got hold of the cumbersome old "kist o' whustles" and made of it a modern marvel. As thoughtful musicians revert to the snappy, twangy harpsichord of Beethoven's day and try to imagine what transcendent tone poems he would have evolved had he had a modern grand piano of standard make, so one wonders what amazing revelations in musical science and organ masterpieces would have flowed from the pens of Bach, Handel, Mendelssohn and others could they have had the inspiration of a twentieth century organ—king of all the musical instruments.

The average good-sized organ has 174 manual keys on three keyboards, 30 pedal keys, 40 to 50 stops, and 30 to 40 push buttons, levers, pedals and combination pistons which the organist must handle with lightning rapidity, meanwhile reading his notes, turning leaves and manipulating the balanced swell pedals which open and close the shutters of the swell boxes.

There is being erected in Philadelphia what is claimed to be the largest organ in the world. It is divided in three separate divisions, main, dome and gallery, and each division is composed of three separate and complete large organs. Each separate organ consists of five organs in one—swell, great, choir, solo and pedal, making really 45 organs in the one grand organ, all played from the one console or key desk. This organ has 283 speaking stops, 75 accessory or mechanical stops, two complete sets of 25 bell chimes, and a Big Ben bell, three 40-horsepower motors and blowers, two 3 horsepower motors, and two 125-ampere generators, besides automatic starters and controls, telephones, etc. This organ is susceptible of millions of changes and combinations.

Few churches really know what their organ contains or have ever heard its full variety of tone color, orchestral combinations and rich effects. An expert organist's job (if his instrument is of respectable size) is a hundred times more complicated than that of an engineer of the biggest engine or scientific apparatus ever built. He has great executive difficulties to overcome and twenty times as many things to watch at the same instant. He spends a year in special, arduous and expensive training and endless hours of practice for every month an engineer requires to learn his job and get his license. And it may be truthfully added that, based on this comparison, few trained, experienced organists receive a stipend commensurate with the extraordinary qualifications demanded by the position.

U. S. MUSICIANS NEED ONLY A CHANCE

A PLEA

HERMAN DEVRIES IN THE CHICAGO AMERICAN

The critical inkwell is yawning ineffectually and the critic is "marking time" these troublous days. Hardly had the musical season begun with a promise of many fresh pleasures and old ones renewed than the municipal order to close theaters and concert halls puts a quietus on our activities and we are at the mercy of the "flu."

However, the enemy is facing a grim battle and our goodly army of hardworking doctors and nurses soon will Chateau-Thierry them into a complete rout. And since I am using military metaphor, in praise of our gallant American men, it seems fitting that we once more pen a plea for those Americans who triumph in peace, but whose mission in war is almost as vital as the physical one of supplying munitions—the musicians.

No one suspected "until they were given their chance" that a peace-bred group of Yankees would help to turn the tide of war. And until they really, sincerely get their chance no one will believe in the American musician; that is to say, Americans themselves will not be convinced that their country can produce creative talent of a high order in the art world until the American artist is given a wider field and greater encouragement.

"Give the American musician a chance," should be our slogan.

Suppose sometimes the work is not on a level with those of the great, that proves only that a young art is fallible.

Maybe we have an embryo Chopin or Saint-Saens, or even an Arthur Sullivan in our midst.

Even John Alden Carpenter, the Chicago composer, whose Perambulator Suite is one of his late works, has been heard in London, while New York has yet to hear his superb symphony!

And what opportunity do we give to our native orchestra conductors? There are now fifteen orchestras in leading cities of America, not one of which is led by an American!

Just now Henry Hadley, an excellent man, has been leading special performances at the Park Theater in New York for the Society of American Singers, but I cannot recall any other American orchestra director as prominently situated in his profession.

Two all-American orchestras in Chicago have disappeared, the Philharmonic, so admirably conducted by Arthur Dunham, and the American Symphony, under the direction of Glenn Dillard Gunn. Uncle Sam took some of the men, but eager interest could have built both up again.

Americans themselves must decide whether or not the American musician shall live and grow.

America has the future of its art in its own hands. Not amused indulgence, tolerant attention, nor half-hearted support can help this fine cause, but a sturdy, strong faith, the belief that spurs, and "the chance."

In closing, a word of acknowledgment from all Chicago for the superb support of the army and navy musicians during the strenuous fourth Liberty Loan.

They shared duties untiringly, they should be given their share of recognition.

THE CAREER OF A LYRIC SINGER
MISS KATHRYN LEE

By JOSEPH DE VALDOR

Since America has failed to fill a gap by the erection of American municipal opera houses, many of our native talents have been unable to pursue their artistic careers. With only two thoroughly established opera houses (New York and Chicago), they were compelled to find refuge in the European operatic centers. There was a time when a "Made in America" singer could not find proper support from the inhabitants of our country, but a foreign name or an American name translated into French or Italian always found favor here. The most potential of the factors which have forced the American artist to seek a career in Europe is our complete apathy as to municipal opera houses; therefore we have always noted an oversupply of artists for the two opera houses, supported by our multimillionaires.

Miss Kathryn Lee from the New England States went to France to seek recognition and met with favor in the French capital until the declaration of war compelled her return to the native land. While in the French capital she studied with Mr. D'Aubigne, who is an American teacher with a wide reputation. Dramatic training was given to her by Mme. Weinshenk, celebrated for the great number of her noted pupils, Lina Cavalieri, Marthe Chenal, Lucien Muratore and others being among them. Devoting herself to other branches of music, Miss Lee, who has shown since childhood marked inclinations for piano and organ, studied the two instruments with Paul Vidal, the conductor of the Opera Comique, and Monsieur Adrien Ray, and abandoned her study for the operatic stage for awhile, but in the French capital she appeared at the Gaite Lyrique in Massenet's "Thais," and her splendid impersonation electrified even the critical manager of the opera house, Monsieur Charbonnel. The French dailies did not spare praise well deserved. From the original criticisms I extract the following:

"The big Air of 'Thais' was interpreted by Miss Lee of New York with great success, with a beautiful voice, and gave us the authority to promise her a remarkable career."—Le Temps.

"Miss Lee sang admirably the big Air of 'Thais.'"—Le Journal.

After her brilliant successes in Paris she returned to America and was immediately engaged as leading soprano for the Boston Opera Company. Her appearance in Boston pleased great audiences and the press of the Hub paid her the following tribute on the occasion of her appearance in the part of Santuzza and Marguerite in Gounod's "Faust." The success of the management in obtaining for this enterprise people who are both actors and vocalists and who know how to interpret grand opera was proved by the genuine indorsement accorded by the public to Miss Kathryn Lee (the Santuzza) and her associates. This was the critical expression of the Boston Transcript. The Boston American spoke in the following terms of her Marguerite:

"Miss Kathryn Lee, a New England girl who was singing in Paris when the war broke out, was particularly charming vocally and pictorially as the ingenuous Marguerite."

Miss Lee's talents are not confined to operas. She is also at home in concerts and recitals. The following is a testimonial of her work from the Rockland Courier-Gazette:

"Not to essay a technical analysis of Miss Lee's singing, it may be noted that her voice is marked by great range, with superb strength and dramatic volume, passing in swift transition to the sweetest pianissimo. Here is a singing voice that belongs in the great company. Moreover, she is endowed with beauty of face and figure, possesses a magnetic personality, dramatic presence and command of the stage. Her triumph will remain memorable in our city's musical history."

The Rockland Opinion said the following:

"The ovation given to Miss Kathryn Lee was at once an expression of admiration for the beauty of her voice and the charm of her presence. She is surely destined in the zenith of her talent to take rank among the world's greatest singers."

At the opening of the Sylvain Theater in Washington last year the president attended the inauguration. Miss Lee was one of the brightest stars of the event. On her appearance the capital papers commented as follows:

"Miss Kathryn Lee gave a remarkable exhibition in her presentation of the Aria from 'Iphigenie en Tauris.'"—Washington Times.

"Seldom has there been heard a finer display of sheer singing into space than Kathryn Lee's rendition of the Aria from "Iphigenie in Tauris."

At another concert Miss Lee met with buoyant success. The following is a comment from the Boston Evening Record:

"The inaugural Sunday night concert was a marked success. Especially beautiful was the Bach-Gounod 'Ave Maria,' sung with intense religious fervor by Miss Kathryn Lee."

Miss Lee has given her services to many a legitimate charity performance. Also to the relief in connection with the war work. At the Manhattan last year she was on the program with Mme. Schumann-Heink, singing the "Star Spangled Banner" at a concert given for the Mutualite Materuelle of Paris. Mention was made at that time in our columns. The following took place last August and it is translated from the Courrier des Etats Unis of New York:

"The French sailors of the 'Montcalm' (the affair took place on the steamer) had a concert given for them by several American artists and actors. The concert concluded with a group of songs by Miss Kathryn Lee, a young prima donna, who created a furore. After several encores and by the request of the captain, Miss Lee rendered the 'Marseillaise.' It is impossible to describe the enthusiasm which was caused by her singing. It was a rare opportunity to hear the 'Marseillaise' sung with such patriotic fervor by a foreign singer."

On September 7 Miss Lee appeared for the tobacco fund, instituted by the Evening Sun of New York. In September the young lyric soprano sang at North Adams, Mass., the part of Nedda in "Pagliacci" and Santuzza in "Cavalleria," both in the same evening and with great success. Miss Lee sang in the last days of October with the Creatore Opera Company at Philadelphia. She is now with the company, singing Leonora ("Trovatore"), Nedda, Santuzza, Micaela (Carmen) and other parts. That she is coming to the fore there is no doubt, as all her late appearances have been crowned with success.

"SERVANT OR MASTER?"

Amid life's never-ceasing activities, with its contention and strife, its competition and deception, its greed and intrigue, with its allurements and promises, its temptations and trials, its opportunities and risks, what part do you mean to play—that of Servant or Master?

Have you a message? Not necessarily a great message, but something that seems to you, in your more serious moments, worth while?

Are you going to give the world this message? Is this message sufficiently worth while for you to live up to its unwritten precepts and demands?

Are you willing to be criticized and maligned for it?

Are you willing to suffer privation and even want?

Are you willing to forego the pleasures and gratifications that would otherwise naturally fall to your lot for the one thing you hold dear?

Some time, some where, every serious-minded person is called upon to definitely answer these questions.

The majority of people seek entertainment rather than instruction, and the concert artist with a real message finds it no easy task to arrange programs that conform to the demands of this very large class of people.

Again, there is a constant demand for novelties: something unique and out of the ordinary; something that will maintain unabated interest when that which is strictly artistic fails to attract. Everything must be popularized, it seems. Cite the Chautauqua, for example: The audience, the local committee and the superintendent constantly urge, "More entertainment." That which "goes over big" is what they want. Art commercialized!

Let me state in passing: If people are always given what they want, how and when will they ever grow to comprehend, even in a measure, the unspeakable treasures that lie hidden to be revealed?

Consider for a moment the directors of music in our churches. Protestant churches in general aim to give prominence to the evangelistic in their music. By evangelistic music I mean tuneful jingles with a sentimental or emotional text. (I write advisedly.) This kind of song "goes home" quickly, and too frequently leaves the same way. Church-going people do not care to exercise themselves sufficiently to discern the hidden meaning in a genuinely musical anthem with a deep, spiritual text, but they prefer, rather, that which comes to them—shall I say?—without the exercise of any effort on their part.

An organist of my acquaintance was requested again and again by the music committee of the church to play peaceful, soothing preludes; not doxologies of praise, nor masterpieces expressive of majesty and might, but soft, quiet, inoffensive effusions.

"Why?" I repeat. Because the people receive them without the exercise of any effort on their part.

To deviate abruptly for a moment: The musician faces still another problem, namely, the desire on the part of parents to dictate the kind of music that shall be taught their children, and occasionally a desire to suggest the method of instruction.

In keeping with this attitude, one might add the unrepressed desire to have their children appear in public after a short term of instruction.

In view of the foregoing facts, the question, "Servant or Master?" is truly fraught with grave responsibilities.

Recently I met a vocalist who desired to join a quartet with an itinerary that included New York City. Just as the contract was to be signed the director stated the class of music that would be rendered. "Nothing doing," the applicant quickly replied, and graciously retired, deeming self-respect of more value than any engagement.

If you wish a marked example of an artist living up to an ideal, consider the case of Eric De Lamarter. Week after week this great artist renders the rarest masterpieces written for organ, and it matters not to him, seemingly, whether fifty or five hundred are present. De Lamarter has a message, and his unvoiced cry to the world is: "To him that hath ears to hear, let him hear." This man's message is the divinest inspiration of his life.

I will never forget the expression of my mother at the conclusion of one of De Lamarter's programs, which included, if I remember rightly, five chorals of Bach: "My son, I feel I have had a taste of heaven."

In the presence of such fidelity to Art the question "Servant or Master?" has but one possible answer.

The world is ever in need of leaders; those who dare to think and, likewise, dare to express what they think.

Longfellow said long ago:

"Be not like dumb-driven cattle;
Be a hero in the strife."

The need for heroes is constant, but only those who are willing to pay the price by valorous deed may wear the crown.

These lines were prompted by a keen desire to encourage young, aspiring musicians. We find them on every hand, sorely distressed by circumstances, wondering if the sacrifice is worth while. To all such let me say:

"Hitch your wagon to a star, and let nothing hinder your progress upward and onward."

Stand alone, if need be; but, undaunted, hold steadfastly to that one thing worth while till victory, serene and triumphant, crowns your life-work.

ALBERT E. FOX.

IN MEMORIAM

Cornelius Masten Estill, Organist and Choirmaster and a Young Composer of Much Promise, Died October 10

Charleston, musician and music-lover alike, is mourning the untimely taking off of our friend and associate, Cornelius M. Estill. A young man of genial, lovable disposition, he made friends at every turn, and had made such a way in his chosen profession that he seemingly had everything to live for. But, a victim of the dread influenza, which later developed into pneumonia, he passed away after a short illness of less than a week on Thursday afternoon, October 10, at his home in New York City.

Sixteen years ago, on Friday evening, October 18, a boy of 10, he presented himself to the writer as a candidate for the choir of St. John's Church, Charleston, W. Va., and for the next eleven years, as chorister, pupil and assistant, generally, he was our close associate. For whether as accompanist for the Charleston Choral Club, or the High School Chorus, or in the Second Regiment (W. Va.) National Guard Band, or as mentioned above, he was the same smiling, kindly disposed companion.

In 1911 he was appointed organist of the Baptist Temple in this city and served that congregation with the same bright, happy temperament that had marked his work thus far.

Then in the fall of 1913 he went to New York and took a post-graduate course under R. Huntington Woodman, at the same time holding the position of organist and choirmaster of the M. E. Church, Astoria L. I., and later going as organist at the Church of Our Savior, Paterson, N. J. It was at the latter place that he formed the friendship with Chrystal Brown, the New York baritone, with whom he had a studio on Twenty-ninth street.

About this time, too, he was closely identified with the work in the West Side Y. M. C. A. and made many new and lasting friendships, among them Alvin Gillett, to whom he dedicated one of his later songs.

For the past two or three years, also, he had been associated with Sergei Klibansky, the voice specialist, as accompanist, and had been brought into touch with some of New York's foremost vocalists, many a time playing for a "tryout" before the leading impresarios, and on several occasions joining with soloist, quartet or other organization in a brief tour.

Six months ago he was appointed organist and choirmaster of St. Peter's (P. E.) Church, New York City, and was also serving as organist at the Eighty-first Street Theater when he died, and the loss has come as a distinct shock all around.

Among his published works are a number of songs, notably "The Sweetest Flower That Blows" (Presser), dedicated to Klibansky, and "An Irish Diplomat" and "My Inmost Thoughts" (Thompson, Boston), and several anthems (Presser, and Thompson), and some little piano pieces (Schroeder, New York). Several manuscripts, however, have been found, as well as some unfinished works, and these will be brought out later.

Just before his death he was here in Charleston on a visit to his parents and friends and incidentally gave a short recital on his old organ at St. John's, a program of which appeared in a recent issue. At the time he remarked on the "light" nature of the numbers of which it was composed, but was prevailed upon to render what we felt was fitting for the hour (after evening service) and the general condition of unrest among us. This was the last time his fingers touched the keyboard for the benefit of the public and it was an appropriate farewell.

He was laid to rest in Spring Hill Cemetery, Charleston, on Monday afternoon, October 14, the funeral services being in his home church, St. John's, Charleston, and by his old rector, Rev. Dr. Robert Douglas Roller. A choir of his former associates here sang, among other things, his anthem setting of "The Son of God Goes Forth to War."

"Requiescat in pace."

ST. PAUL, MINN.

ONE OF THE FEW CITIES NOT DEPRIVED OF MUSIC BY THE INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC

A more brilliant assemblage for an opera season could hardly be surpassed at this time than the one St. Paul has just had, when two operas were given by the Chicago Grand Opera Association, March 16 and 17. Brilliant as was the first night, the second night, with Galli-Curci the attraction, exceeded in attendance any performance ever given at the Auditorium. Seats were sold back of the scenes, as well as standing room, which goes to show that people were not fearsome of the influenza, widespread as it has been, for they came from far and near. The local manager, Hiram D. Frankel, is to be congratulated on the success of so formidable a task.

The dramatic quality of Mme. Olive Fremstad's art is ever an element which has distinguished her as a singer of Wagnerian roles. She brought to the role of Tosca a tragic intensity and tonal splendor. Guido Ciccolini as Mario was extremely pleasing, the beautiful quality of his voice and the refinement of his acting were assets in an altogether splendid impersonation. The duet with Tosca at the last of the third act was especially beautiful, as was also his solo when he sang against the "Vissi d'Arte" accompaniment. Georges Baklanoff as Baron Scarpia scored heavily; the magnificence of his voice and finished acting distinguish him in this role. Vittorio Trevisan as the Sacristan, Octave Dua as Spoletta, Desire Defrere as Sciaronne and Elvira Amazar as a Shepherd were exceptionally well done. Under the direction of Giuseppe Sturani the opera as a whole was a fine all round performance. Between the second and third acts, both nights, the orchestra, under the direction of Campanini, played the Grand Overture from "La Forza Del Destino" (Verdi) and the National Hymns of the Allies (Belgium, Italy, Great Britain, France, ending with the "Star Spangled Banner"), all of which evoked much cheering.

Rossini's "The Barber of Seville," old but new—new in the fact that it has never before been given in St. Paul—was the second offering. It is once in an age that there are voices to be found that could meet the exaction of the roles of either Rossina or Figaro. That Galli-Curci is a marvel of the age is without a doubt, for words cannot describe the wonder of her voice. She has but to be heard to be appreciated. The absolute purity of tone, so bell-like and enchanting, the marvelous perfection of her phrasing and the utterly unbelievable mastery of breath control that she possesses are but a few phases in the volumes that might be written to do her justice. The charm of her acting, which is as effortless as her singing, is a source of great delight. During the lesson scene she gave the "Shadow Song" from "Dinorah," with the notable flute cadenza, which brought such an ovation that she added "Home, Sweet Home," sung to her own accompaniment, very beautiful and simple.

Fernando Carpi as Count Almavira sang with distinct success. He has a voice of exquisite quality, sings with excellent style, acts with poise. Riccardo Stracciari was a wonderful Figaro—not to be surpassed. He used his beautiful voice to decided advantage—a past master in his art. Vittorio Trevisan rose to the occasion in the comedy of the role of Don Bartholo and again proved himself a great artist in this genre of opera. Vittorio Arimondi sang the part of the music master. All parts were well done. Campanini conducted throughout the evening with his accustomed brilliance. The "Star Spangled Banner" opened each performance.

The St. Paul Institute will present the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra in a series of twelve concerts at the St. Paul Auditorium. The first concert, which was to have taken place Thursday evening, October 24, with Carlo Liten, the Belgian actor, as assisting artist, has been postponed on account of the influenza.

The Orchestral Association of Minneapolis has adopted the plan of a 100 per cent American orchestra. Thus a loyalty pledge has been drawn up and signed by every member.

Guy Woodward is the new concert-master. He will be remembered as concert-master of the St. Paul Symphony Orchestra during the season of 1910-1911. Herman Beyer-Bane will be the new solo cellist. There will be other new faces, due to death, resignation and service with the colors. The dates and soloists for the remaining concerts are as follows: November 9, Frances Alda, soprano; November 21, Mischa Elman, violin; December 5, Giomar Novaes, piano; December 19, Eddy Brown, violin; January 2, Mischa Levitzki, piano; January 16, Riccardo Stracciari, baritone; January 30, Arthur Hackett, tenor; February 13, Toscha Seidel, violin; February 27, Povla Frizsh, soprano; March 13, Rudolph Ganz, piano; March 27, John McCormack, tenor.

The Schubert Club offers an unusually attractive program for the season, the keynote of which is wartime service. "Music will help win the war" is the club slogan. Community singing is carried on to a large extent in the club, in all branches of its endeavor where people are met together.

Five active section, five students' section and three associate section musicales are held.

The educational and philanthropic work is extensive and of inestimable value.

The evening series of three artists' recitals bring Mabel Garrison, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, in the opening recital October 29 at the Auditorium. Through the co-operation of Commissioner Albert Wunderlich 2,000 high school pupils will be guests on this occasion. Tickets will be sold for the Mabel Garrison recital for the benefit of musicians in France.

Arthur Shattuck, pianist, will give a recital December 10, and Isolde Menges, violinist, January 28, both artists appearing at Plymouth Congregational Church.

On New Year's Day, Christine Miller Clemsen, beloved American contralto and honorary member of the club, will greet us, giving an afternoon program for the entertainment of soldiers from near-by camps, this being a purely patriotic service on the part of singer and club, made possible through co-operation with the War Camp Community Service and municipal authorities.

The club opened its season with a reunion of its members at the Town and Country Club on Wednesday afternoon, October 9. Mrs. Warren S. Briggs, the club president, and members of the reception committee welcomed the guests. Mrs. W. D. Mitchell, with Miss Marie Sattler at the piano, sang "The Hills o' Syke" (Victor Harris), "The Cock Shall Crow" (John Allen Carpenter), "Lullaby" (Cyril Scott), "Morning Hymn" (George Henschel) and "The Cuckoo Clock" (Grant Schaefer). Miss Margaret Horn, violinist, played "En Bateau" (Debussy), "Pierrot Serenade" (Randegger) and "Chanson Indone" (Rimsky-Korsakoff-Powell). Mrs. Ruth Bradley Swinnerton sang "Balatella" (Leoncavallo), "Villanelle" (Del'Aqua) and "My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair" (Haydn). Mrs. Fitzgerald was her accompanist.

The associate section, Miss Alice Andrews, chairman, held their first meeting at the home of Mrs. Charles Schuneman on Saturday afternoon, October 19. Mrs. Dawson Johnston stimulated interest in reading a paper on the work done by the society known as American Friends of Musicians in France, of which Walter Damrosch is president. Mrs. E. R. Sanford, with Miss Mary Downey at the piano, sang the following group of songs: "Polynete" (Gounod), "L'Amour S'Enrole," "Venez, Agreeable Printemps," "Chantons Csamours de Jean" (Weckerlin), "Le Miroir" (Ferrari), "Manon," "Ouvre tes yeux blues" (Massenet), "La Lettre dans le Tricot" (Marinier), "Roses d'Hiver" (Fontenaille), "Le Papillon, Chanson Norvegienne" (Fourdrain). Mrs. Charles A. Guyer led in the community sing which followed, namely "Over There," "The Long, Long Trail," "America" and the "Marseillaise." Six French girls who came here recently to study at Macalester, Hamline and St. Catherine's Colleges were guests of honor.

The first in a series of faculty recitals was given at Wallace Hall, Macalester College Conservatory of Music, Monday evening, October 14. Miss Margaret Hicks, pianist and a new member of the faculty, was heard in the following program:

Sonata ..... Grieg
Allegro moderato; andante molto; alla menuetto; molto allegro

Etude, Op. 25, No. 9
Etude (3 Etudes, No. 3) } Chopin
Ballade, G minor
Nocturne, Op. 72, No. 1

Nocturne ..... Debussy
La Peus que Lente ..... Debussy
Papillons ..... Rosenthal
Caprice Burlesque ..... Gabrilowitch
Rhapsody No. 10 ..... Liszt

Miss Hicks played with requisite technic and an interpretative skill which brought just the right artistic shading to her work. The Debussy numbers were wrought with much color and made a special appeal. The attractive "Papillons" (Rosenthal) was well received and the "Caprice Burlesque" (Gabrilowitch) suited Miss Hicks wondrously. She played this interesting work with commanding style.

A musical for the Permanent Blind Relief Fund for the re-education of British, French, Belgian and American soldiers blinded in battle was given at the House of Hope Presbyterian Church on Tuesday evening, October 15, by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Buchanan Morton. Mr. Morton, organist and director of music of the church, gave two groups of piano numbers and Mrs. Morton sang a group of six Scottish folk songs. The program follows:

Piano—
Fantasia in C minor ..... Mozart
Minuet in E flat ..... Beethoven
Sonata Appassionata in F minor ..... Beethoven

The first monthly musical service for the season at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, numbering the one hundred and fortieth under the direction of G. H. Fairclough, organist and choirmaster, was given Sunday afternoon, October 6, at 5 o'clock. The organ recital preceding the service consisted of two movements of the Borowski Sonata in A Minor; "At Twilight" (MS.), by Gerhard Alexis, dedicated to Mr. Fairclough, and "A Cloister Scene," by Mason. The choir of fifty boys and men was assisted by Miss Aurelia Wharry, soprano, who sang the aria, "With Verdure Clad," from Haydn's "Creation." Leo Nadon, tenor, was heard in the aria, "If With All Your Heart," from Mendelssohn's "Elijah." Other soloists were Masters Gordon Clarke and Harvey Officer Brown, sopranos, and Fred Wigginton, baritone.

It may be of interest to note that Eric DeLamarter, newly appointed assistant conductor and official organist of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, received his first organ and harmony lessons from George H. Fairclough in Kalamazoo, Mich. Mr. DeLamarter was then a high school student and Mr. Fairclough was organist and choirmaster of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, prior to his coming to St. Paul.

The new Hall organ at First Lutheran Church was formally dedicated Friday evening, October 4. Edmund Sereno Ender, concert organist and head of the organ department of Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., gave the recital. His numbers included the Prologue from Rogers' Suite, Berceuse (Delbruck), "Will o' the Wisp" (Nevin), Rhapsody (Cole), "Two Arabian Sketches" (MS.) (Stoughton), Scherzo Symphonique (Faulkes) and Overture to "Tannhauser" (Wagner), the program concluding with the "Star Spangled Banner."

Verdi's "Hymn of the Nations"

New York sends word that Verdi's "Hymn of the Nations," composed in 1862 for a world's fair in London, was heard a week ago, "seemingly for the first time in America." They evidently have not heard that Campanini gave it at the Auditorium last January. But then, a great deal that happens in Chicago never seeps into the Manhattan consciousness.—Chicago Journal.

John Rankel Red Cross Concert

Mr. John Rankel of Chicago possesses a baritone voice of great range and rich quality. His part of the program was a pleasure to the whole audience. Every number received the heartiest applause. His response to encores was most liberal and showed fully his appreciation of the appreciative hearers. His easy manner and the joy he seemed to take in his work were a great addition to the effectiveness of his singing. To his singing of the French national anthem, "Le Marseillaise," the audience gave the tribute of standing at attention. They stood also at the close and joined with the artists in a stirring ensemble as the "Star Spangled Banner" was sung.—The New North, Rhinelander, Wis., September 19, 1918.

Some Comment on Morgan Kingston

"Boheme"—Ach, he made a lovely item of Rudolpho's lovely aria, "Che gelida manina," a bit of Puccini's gorgeous gift for melody which is by no means tenor proof.—Chicago Tribune.

"Carmen"—Morgan Kingston deserves praise for his great vocal improvement this year. His work throughout was very good.—Chicago Evening American.

Don Jose as sung and played by Morgan Kingston gained in impressiveness as the opera advanced and he brought much fervor and dramatic stress into his role.—Chicago Daily News.

"I Gioielli della Madonna"—Morgan Kingston's voice never sounded better than in the passionate music that belongs to Gennaro and towards the close of the scene he materially helped Miss Mryio to build the effective climax.—Chicago Herald.

Morgan Kingston was a veritable surprise as Gennaro. When he gets a congenial role he can act with the best of them, and Gennaro is his very best part. His voice was everything we know; it can be at its best, absolutely sure, and daringly ringing.—Chicago Evening American.

"I Gioielli della Madonna"—The performance was helped out to a great extent by the excellent singing of Morgan Kingston as Gennaro.—Chicago Daily Journal.

"Trovatore"—Morgan Kingston as the troubadour Manrico excelled in his delineation, but he only shared in the honors of the evening, for the cast was in all respects an all star combination. Of more than usual interest did he make the scene in the gypsy camp.—Chicago Daily News.

Morgan Kingston was a splendid troubadour.—Chicago Herald.

Kingston is well equipped for the pictorial importunities of the troubadour, and did well by his individual chances in the score.—Chicago Daily Tribune.

"Pagliacci"—Morgan Kingston was in good voice and sang Canio with feeling. He was also heartily applauded.—Chicago Post.

Morgan Kingston's delineation of Canio was a fine success, making the Lament vocally and dramatically impressive.—Chicago Daily News.

Some Conductors and Their Plans

Eugene Ysaye has been preparing his first season as conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra by examining a great number of American works. He has kind words for the compositions of Charles Martin Loeffler, born in Alsace and now a resident of Boston. He has made up his season's programs out of these, together with representative works of French, Belgian, Italian, English, Russian and Polish composers.

Pierre Monteux, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra until Henri Rabaud arrives from France, has found several pieces of music new to the American public. One is Dukas' tone poem, "The Peri." It was originally written for the dancing and miming of the Russian dancer, Mme. Trouhanova, but has become virtually a symphonic piece. Another novelty is the first suite, which is practically the same as the first act of Ravel's Ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe." Rabaud will bring some new music of his own composition when he arrives. The soloists booked for the season include Harold Bauer, Joseph Bonnet, Sophie Braslau, Florence Easton, Frederic Fradkin, Mabel Garrison, Emilio de Gogorza, Jascha Heifetz, Joseph Hofmann, Mischa Levitzki, Josef Malkin, Arthur Rubinstein, Olga Samaroff and Jacques Thibaud.—Chicago Journal.

Singer's Son, 17, at Front

"I'm proud of my mission. I want to make an Italian father happy."

This is the message received today from Geno Stracciari, the 17 year old son of Riccardo Stracciari, baritone of the Chicago Opera Company. The father, too old to fight, is fighting by proxy. He also has subscribed for $12,000 of the fourth Liberty Loan. The boy, who is a painter and in the Signal Corps, has seen fighting on the Piave front. Before entering the army he attended the art school at which D'Annunzio studied.—Chicago Daily News.

An Addition to Buffalo Singers

A newcomer to local musical circles, who will be a valuable acquisition, is Ida Geer Weller, for several years a prominent concert artist living in Pittsburgh. The business interests of Mrs. Weller's husband bring them both to this city to live. She is a mezzo-contralto, richly endowed vocally and temperamently. The writer heard Mrs. Weller sing at the recent Lockport Festival, where her work aroused some of the warmest approbation accorded to any artist. She sings with a musical intelligence, vocal opulence and gripping magnetism that will carry her audience with her invariably. Her dramatic instinct is splendid and her natural gifts have been well developed by study. Mrs. Weller is preparing a program of songs by women composers for some of her concert engagements this season. It is hoped she may be heard in Buffalo.—Mary Howard, Musical Critic, Buffalo Express, Sunday, October 20, 1918.

Early Tour of Florence Easton and Francis Maclennan Great Success

In a concert tour of Western cities which ended in Duluth, Minn., Florence Easton and Francis Maclennan called forth the appended notices from the local press:

A unique and individual offering was the gift of Florence Easton and Francis Maclennan, tenor, to an appreciative audience at the Lyceum Theater last night. Remarkable poise and ease of manner, charm of singing and acting, and good judgment in the choice of songs for their program made the performance of Miss Easton and Mr. Maclennan thoroughly enjoyable. The honors, like the numbers on the program, were divided evenly. Following the first duet, "Charite," which gave opportunity for the smooth, rich tones, there came the aria from "Mimi Pinson," which Mr. Maclennan sang with wealth and power of tone and which he encored with a brief but fitting encore, "I Had a Certain Treasure." Splendid team work was shown in the fourth group of two operatic duets. Miss Easton's notes were marvelous, clear, sustained and of bell-like purity. Her highest tones were taken with perfect, smiling poise and utter absence of effort. Mr. Maclennan sang his role of the triumphant lover equally well. Miss Easton's big aria was the "Vissi d'Arte" from "Tosca" and gave full range to her beautiful soprano. Her voice is powerful and true and her personal loveliness adds to her art.—Duluth News-Tribune.

Miss Florence Easton, the noted operatic soprano, is the possessor of a remarkably clear and beautiful voice and her enunciation is nothing less than marvelous. From the somber notes of the opening number of the deeply impassioned climax of the perfect duet from "Madame Butterfly" the flexibility, range and perfect control of her voice captivated her hearers. And amid all the delight of sound one could not forget for a moment the charming personality and the lovely picture which the prima donna presented from the topmost curl to the last twinkle of the rose slippers.

Miss Easton was at her best in the operatic selections, when her unusual dramatic ability found ample scope, and it was easy to believe in the furore which her appearance in the Metropolitan Opera Company has created. Mr. Maclennan has an admirable tenor voice of great sweetness and some of his lower notes a baritone might well envy him. In the duets the two voices blended exquisitely. Particularly noteworthy was the number from "Mefistofele" and "Love Like the Dawn Comes Stealing," which Mr. Cadman, the composer, has arranged in duet form for Miss Easton and Mr. Maclennan.—Duluth Herald.

Minnie Hubbard Plays for Red Cross

The program was carried out as previously advertised. Mrs. Hubbard is certainly a charming violinist and her selections were given with a charm and naturalness which delighted everybody. She is certainly superb. Miss Rodgers, the soloist, pleased everyone, her voice is sweet and pleasing and her numbers merited the applause given her. Miss Meyers, who has several times given delight to Vernon folks with her readings, was at her best. Miss Meyers always entertains an audience and on this ocasion gracefully responded to encores which added laurels to herself. Much of the enjoyment of the evening was due to Professor Jenny's splendid accompaniment. He is a masterhand and the applause he received was merited. The program closed by singing the Star Spangled Banner. This community will always remember the evening with delight and the generosity of Mrs. Hubbard and her assistants which promoted them in giving their services to this worthy cause. They certainly are more than doing their bit by brightening up by music, song and verse these troublesome, sorrowful times when all we think, hear or talk about is war and bloodshed and death.—Mankato (Minn.) Press.

The Philharmonic Society

Mr. Stransky has added new forces to his organization from the allied camps—the new harpist of the orchestra just engaged is John Lotito and a new cellist has been engaged in the person of Gaston Dubois, formerly of the Rialto Symphony Orchestra of New York. The season will open on November 14.

Eugene Berton in Recital

If our colleagues had not heralded this 16 year old boy as a genius before his recital was effected our criticism would be less sharp on Eugene Berton, whose recital occurred on Saturday afternoon, October 26. But these same colleagues, after listening to the tenor, John Hand, also pronounced his performance a triumph. The new genius discovered in the person of Eugene Berton, long before his appearance, is decidedly as great a sensation as was John Hand's triumph (sic) in "Mignon." To prove Berton a genius will require more than the effort of a prejudiced journal versus the audience, as the latter is in the habit of thinking a little for itself. Eugene Berton's voice was announced as baritone, but in the whole realm of voices I have never heard of a boy of 16 being a baritone. As his voice is today it approaches the tenor, but a definite conclusion of his actual voice is not possible. In all, it was a mistake to have him appear in such a pretentious program as Debussy, who was represented with six of his most difficult songs. His nervousness marred the singing and his tone was uneven, his production of the voice was faulty—how then could Debussy be interpreted in the proper spirit? To confine himself to studies would prove beneficial to his career—in the present stage he is not ripe for public appearances. What a pity to be pronounced a genius and then proven to be a mere boy with some talent. Emanuel Balaban was at the piano.

Brief Notes of Concerts and Recitals

On Sunday, October 20, many musical entertainments took place in spite of the epidemic. Some of them were well attended, others had to be content with meager audiences. At the Century in the evening the Italian Grenadiers Band attracted a capacity house. Same can be said of the second concert of the Conservatoire de Paris, under the direction of Andre Messager at the Metropolitan Opera House. At Carnegie Hall Josef Rosenblatt also gave a recital in the evening. Reinald Werrenrath appeared at the Aeolian Hall in the afternoon. Colin O'More, tenor, sang on October 19 at the Aeolian Hall. On October 21 Monsieur Gimbera and Madame Duberta made their American debut at Carnegie Hall. On October 22 Dai Buell, pianist, gave a recital at Aeolian Hall. October 23 Grace Hoffheimer gave a piano recital at Aeolian Hall. On October 21 Hartridge Whipp, baritone, gave a recital at Aeolian Hall. On October 24 in the afternoon Mme. Yvette Guilbert gave a recital at the Maxime Elliott Theater. October 24 at Aeolian Hall, in the afternoon, violin recital by Alfred Megerlin; evening, song recital by Nina Morgana. On October 26 in the afternoon at Carnegie Hall Jascha Heifetz made his first apearance of the season; in the evening at the Aeolian Hall Louis Graveure gave his first recital of the season.

THEATERS

"Under Orders" at the Eltinge

An editorial on "unconditional surrender" in one of our dailies is decidedly a better exposition of the war than this morbid, boresome drama by Berte Thomas. One description of a war correspondent, dealing with a certain attack against the Huns, is more interesting than this drama. A. H. Woods, the producer, surprised us by choosing it for production. Shelley Hull acts the American Captain, the German Captain and the Hun Spy, reminding one of Fregoli the prestidigitator, to whom I would give preference.

"Going Up" at the Liberty

If this musical comedy should reach your town, don't miss it. The last act at least is thrilling and it should attract many volunteers for that great game of aviation. Robert Street is the author of a book "Going Up" and is persuaded to take the chance of a flight. After much hesitation he does the real thing and wins a girl too. The music by Louis Hirsch is lively and typically Broadway.

"Three Faces East" at Cohan and Harris

The play is simple and based on the tracing of a dangerous German spy by Scotland Yard, which employs a woman, whose services in the German spy system brought her the "pour le merite," but who in reality was a true spy for England. It is a play which holds interest from the beginning to the end.

"Le Marriage de Figaro" at the French Theater

Beaumarchais' masterpiece, from which Rossini and Mozart were inspired for their musical settings, was the offering of the French Theater for the week ending October 28. Jacques Coppereau was an unconvincing Figaro. Well able to undertake a dramatic role, he lacks the comical fibre of the classic comedy; his role was exaggerated. To Miss Valentine Tessier belongs the honors for the charming interpretation of Suzanne.

Brief Notes From France

Annecy

War benefit enlisted on the musical program the American Band in purely American airs. Georges de Lausnay, pianist, played Chopin pieces and Paganini-Liszt. The violinists were: Mme. H. Jourdan-Morhange and Mr. Delgrange, in renditions by Saint-Saens. Mme. Montjovet sang airs of the eighteenth century and compositions by Gabriel Faure. Robert le Lubez sang melodies by Schumann, Gounod and Alexandre George. The two last mentioned vocalists rendered also the duo from "Jsoline," by Andre Messager, and "Sous la fonetre," by Schumann. Mlle. Mannier from the Paris opera danced several numbers. The famous bass, Mr. Delmas, sang "The Two Grenadiers," by Schumann, and some pieces from "Lakme." With Mlle. Montjovet he sang the duo from "Thais."

"Lakme" was given with Edmond Clement. The orchestra was led by Maitre Torys.

Benefit performance. On the program Mme. Jane Bourgeois, Mme. Cobina Johnson, sopranos; Mme. Marthe Renesson, pianist; Mr. Payan, bass; M. Henri Wogemans, violinist; M. Bogea Dumiroff, and harpist Mlle. Schlesinger. Mr. Ruhlman from the Paris Opera conducted. A few days later another war performance was given with the following on the musical program: Mlle. Jane Bourgeois, Mr. Payan and Felia Litvinne, who sang "Ode to America," by Andre Bouvery.

CO-ORDINATION

By HERBERT WHITNEY TEW

[Editor's Note.—This article, which appeared in Music News a few weeks ago, is here reproduced because of the fact that there has been a demand for extra copies far exceeding our surplus stock—proof sufficient that the value of the article to many people is a great one.]

"In proportion as an art or science is lost or forgotten, the very name by which it was called will be misunderstood, misapplied and finally forgotten." —Hartman.

This degradation of terms is illustrated by the oblivion into which bel canto is relegated. There is nothing today which conveys any meaning to this term. The process which produced it is dead—no semblance remains, no trace.

The knowledge of the true law which co-ordinates the physical embodiment and produces that art or mode which in its expression is bel canto may not be gained by any reasoning logic of the physical senses or the mind of the flesh. It is intangible to them, nor may it be found or indicated by any scientific instrument.

Bel canto was the direct fruit of an experience which was in turn the fruit of consecration. Imponderabilia may not be weighed by the physical senses—material science has no grasp upon law.

The great teachers from Zoroaster, Confucius, Buddha, Plato, Pythagoras, and, greatest of all, the Nazarene Carpenter, down to Paracelsus, Trismegistus, Emerson, Carlyle, Browning, Mrs. Eddy have made themselves the masters of Nature, through observing her in her own light, and all, like David, reasoned that his knowledge, comprehension of Law (the Logos) transcended that of his teachers in that he meditated upon the Law itself. All these great teachers covered a scope from ethics and morals to science, but their teachings are intimately connected because truth and beauty are one.

It may be granted perhaps that the modern anatomist knows more of the details of the anatomy of the physical body than the ancients, but the ancients knew more about the attributes and constitution of the force which organizes the physical conception of the body which becomes its visualized or objective form.

The moderns may know more of the larynx and its intrinsic muscles than the ancients, but the ancients knew the deeper law of co-ordination, which in its action governs the larynx and the whole tone producing mechanism, and in consequence expressed an actual art or mode of nature in her broadest conception.

The knowledge of this Law, i. e., the perception of that balance, which is the center of the irradiating Wisdom or Order (the dynamic energy of Life), is the Art, the Logos, the science or mode of all true activity.

The Law is so beneficent that all being under its constitution and control exists in a state of freedom, its nature is beyond the ken of materialistic science or perception, its chief attribute is Beneficence or Love, which attribute brought forward as the Federal Head of all graces and powers, constituted Jesus of Nazareth the fullest embodiment of the Immaculate Conception of Light or the essence of Life, a perennial state having no relation to or connection with a materialistic view of phenomena, including time and space.

Hence the teaching of the Seers of Time have produced in the evolution of the ego varying results depending upon the rank assigned to the many attributes of the dynamic energy or Life.

Where Truth has held rank as above all, the art produced has taken on the more scientific modes of expression, but in all cases the advance has been due to the perception of laws deeper than those deduced from visible phenomena; hence all true modes are the direct outcome of a perception and practice of the principles discovered through the minutest scrutiny of Nature's processes. Nature in the sense of the Macrocosm, the highest conception of the Logos partially blinded by a carnal and temporal habitat.

Hence the art of singing cannot be expressed through the study of the mechanism, although a complete understanding of the mechanism results from the knowledge and practice of the principle upon which it operates, a knowledge only acquired through an experience in adapting the principle to the mechanism, which experience can only come as the sequence of a comprehension of the real organizers of existent activities, viz.: principles, which require for visible expression a mode or art of manifestations, as principles perceived in a lower plane are not there self-operative.

An understanding of an abstract attribute, divested of all materialistic argument and inclination, can alone effect entry for a perception of Beauty or Truth or Order, and in this resurrection of the understanding we find that it is the Light seeking its own Source.

Hence the Art or mode of Nature in her widest aspect which expresses the wonders of Articulate Wisdom, its majestic rhythms, its gorgeous colorings, its vibrant, reverberating tone, cannot be invented by any one—"Hot little man." No individual man can claim to have invented or discovered a method of singing without exciting the "Homeric laughter of the gods." The knowledge of the law of co-ordination, a principle or dynamic indefeasible energy put in practice, is the art or mode of vocal emission, and this knowledge is the only master, and not only the greatest of these but the one true and infallible guide.

The skeptic, whose mind is crammed with opinions to which he tenaciously clasps, is unconsciously guided by all the agents of credulity and self-complacency. He denies the existence of anything beyond the horizon of his own vision, thus assuming that his horizon encompasses the entire wisdom of the ages.

These reject the testimony of their own senses, and with a credulity equal to their vaunted skepticism accept the wildest and most improbable theories, as an example of which may be cited the comic notion that tone should be placed back of the nose, or anywhere except the only point whence pure tone may emanate.

The materialistic repudiation of principles beyond its own ken constitutes that barren and arid waste known as skepticism. It judges before examination, pre judicum, and in this naked injustice parades its intellectual poverty and thus places an insurmountable barrier before its own initiation into vital and essential truths, and exerts an influence which tends to bar those who chance to fall within its enervating circumscription.

The basic error of the moderns who are addressing vocal art is a theory (based upon the investigations of material science) that the vocal cords change their length and thickness in pitch changes. A moment's reflection should convince any thinking person that a process requiring a constant stretching of these delicate bands must be not only unnatural but a highly deleterious abuse which reason will not tolerate; the premature failure and retirement of singers may be adduced in proof of this. Few pause to consider the meaning of the vulgar idea of the term "natural," to realize that if the vocal instrument is not in its natural position, then it is out of position.

The same view extends to the remark one so often hears about singing, "O yes, that is the natural way," failing to perceive that if it is not the natural it must perforce be unnatural, and if unnatural then artifical, a sham, an imitation.

This unnatural mode of distorting the vocal instrument is the modern product which masquerades under the name of Vocal Art. It is that skepticism of the existence of real and absolute powers vested in forces it cannot see, feel nor taste, and an equally credulous acceptance of any and all preposterous theories based upon deductions from false physical hypotheses.

This acceptance of the fallacy of the tightening of the vocal cords in pitch production submerged the true principle—knowing nothing of this principle of the appogiata or breath control of the instrument there seemed no other way to produce tone above the normal speaking compass than to force the instrument in this manner. This brought about the downfall and final extinction of the general knowledge and practice of the one position scale.

This unthinking leap to false conclusions extends its characteristics further and rivets the thousand parasitical errors of detail so firmly in the general as well as individual attitude that it finally evolves that stubborn resistance to the truth which would liberate thought from its bondage and which false position is working its own destruction and that of its blinded devotees.

"Festina lente" is a lost habit of thought, appogiata is a lost process resultant from the former.

"He that believeth shall not make haste," like all other wise maxims, withers and is trodden under foot in the mad melee for Mammon. In feverish haste the cynic, the sophist and the skeptic storm an Olympus contextured in the loom of their own illusions.

This great fallacy as to pitch formation is not only indorsed by otherwise sane thinkers but is practiced by them, and the Polypheme menace to art and the individual instrument is openly advocated as legitimate, thus fostering an insidiously diffused mastercraft of Appolyon.

Coupled with this impervious exterior is that inexplicable state of mind which refuses to accept the authenticated statements of reputable historians, and imputes a low standard of artistic discrimination to an age evolved sufficiently in ethics to produce Beethoven, Bach, and Mozart.

The lead and gold symbolizing the material age of cynicism which has strangled the "divine art" in the Dunciad quatrain is apropos.

"Then rose the seed of Chaos and Night
To blot out order and extinguish light
Of dull and venal a new world to mold,
And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold."

Astraea lingered beyond all the rest and quitted the habitat of man last to sadly take her higher home as the constellary Virgo, so perhaps she may be the first to return and lift the weight of gold and lead from the weary earthworn plodder, that he may recognize that in pity and fairness his own blinded eyes may be opened to see the great wonders of emancipated principles.

Then will the law of co-ordination supplant the baseless theories, the stubborn prejudices, the traditional ogres and hobgoblins of the non-essential, and intelligence with justice emerge and seal forever the ill-omened casket of Pandora.

Hope like Astraea flew last, and so with her one frayed string she plays with the distant sound of "the tinkling cymbal of the unseen midge," but she is coming nearer, for she knows that the knowledge of the Law of Vocal Oratory is again brought down, and that the law is not a conflict of mechanism, but that harmonious unity which is the co-ordinating irradiation of Wisdom or Force from the Cosmic Center, the conflux of eternities.

The grotesques of the pregnant disorder of a Holbein would fail to depict the vagaries of the mental gearing of modern instruction, growing out of the fundamental misconception of the underlying law or nature's process in pitch changes.

All modern schools treat upon this fallacy; each teacher builds up his own system or theory upon this unverifiable hypothesis; each thinks his own speculation the only right method.

This has developed not only a polyglot travesty on the Art as a whole but a thing unsupported by standards.

The one standard is the spiritual law of co-ordination working through its visible and outward form—this will unify all thought and remold the divine art into its original expression of the "deep-toned sublime symphony of thanksgiving," when the "morning stars sang together" and "the Sons of God shouted for joy."

The glorious prototype or origin in kind of all externalized co-ordinated action is that Wisdom which comprehends itself or Law, and is Law.

It seeks until it finds its source through the mazes of an alien existence.

In one of the recent Oxyrhnycus discoveries is a pregnant word ascribed because of intrinsic evidence to Jesus of Nazareth reads: "Let him that seeks, seek until he find, finding he will be astonished, astonished he will reign, reigning he will rest."

This is the ineffable logic of the journey of the Logos back to its kindred, the omnipotent galaxy of Elohim; the forces existent behind myriad universes—the Being of Deity.

Music Memory Contest

From the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music comes a leaflet bringing to mind the music memory contest, an interesting device for creating interest in the schools in recognizing musical numbers when heard. The device created enthusiasm and won universal approval of those in attendance at the National Conference of Music Supervisors at Evansville, Indiana, last spring.

The idea is being brought to us again at the beginning of our school year, that it may be more widely adopted in our schools.

The National Bureau for the Advancement of Music is neither more nor less than what its name implies—a bureau for the national advancement of music, not any particular kind of music nor among any particular class of people. Neither does it confine its interest to any particular method for accomplishing this greatly to be desired object. It has its headquarters at 105 West 40th street, New York; its purpose is simple in nature but exceedingly broad and comprehensive in character. It is especially interested in spreading the joy of music among the masses—the general public, as differentiated from that very limited proportion of our population known as the musically cultured. While the national bureau is especially interested in the spread of music among the masses, because it feels this is the pressing need of the moment and that this is the psychological time when concentrated effort to this end can be most effective, it is in sympathy with all agencies devoting themselves to advancing the cause of music. To this end it urges co-operation among those desirous of the broad objective.

The idea of The Music Memory Contest originated with Mr. C. M. Tremaine of New York, who experimented with it upon his boy and girl in his own home. Finding the game exceedingly successful in their cases, he was anxious to see it tested in the schoolroom, and it was first introduced into the schools of Westfield, N. J., in October, 1916.

The methods of procedure were as follows: First, the co-operation of the supervisor of music and the superintendent of all the public schools was secured. Then the support of a local paper was obtained so as to secure the necessary publicity to sustain the general interest. Next a committee of prominent local musicians (including the supervisor) selected a list of sixty compositions with which the children were to familiarize themselves during the preparatory period.

The list of these sixty selections was published in the paper every week during this period, together with short analyses and detailed information about the pieces and general comments on the contest, also school news relating thereto. A few selections were played and explained in class during the music period and twice a week during part of the noon hour. The children were encouraged to familiarize themselves with all the music in the list at home, on the phonograph, player-piano or by having their mothers play the selections on the piano itself.

When the night of the final contest came the supervisor chose twenty numbers of the list of sixty, a few of which were played on a player-piano and on a phonograph; others were solo numbers by a prominent pianist and a violinist.

Still others were sung (without, of course, articulating the words) by a soprano and a contralto with excellent voices. Altogether it was an attractive musical entertainment, a really excellent concert, and would have been enjoyed by the audience even if there had been no unique feature to add to the interest. Naturally there were no programs. The contestants, all under eighteen years of age, were given blank cards with a column in which to write the names of those selections they recognized, also another column in which to write the composer's name.

The parents and friends sat in the gallery and they were given different colored cards with which to test their own musical knowledge if they so desired; of course they were not allowed to enter the contest. While the twenty monitors were checking up the contestants' cards the correct list was read from the platform for the benefit of those in the gallery.

In many cases the children showed greater knowledge than their parents. Eight of the contestants correctly named every one of the twenty selections and also gave the composer's name. Six more made but one mistake, and so on down. Half of the entire number of children who took part in the contest designated more than half of the selections played.

The demonstration made a profound impression on the entire town and occasioned the most enthusiastic comments about the supervisor's proficiency, and in addition it resulted in an enhanced appreciation of the value of music as taught in the public schools.

Since this initial contest the idea has been tried in many places throughout the country.

Large Cities Require Teams

In large cities where the schools are numerous, making it impossible to seat all in a single auditorium, preliminary contests are held in each school, and a team of the ten or more best contestants constituted the representatives from that school for the final contest. A banner may be presented to the school with the winning team. In many instances the National Bureau has presented the banner.

Besides the card of admission to the final contest for each contestant a great deal of interest is added to the community aspect of it by allowing each contestant an additional guest card which admits a parent or other interested adult to the contest-concert. These noncontestants are, of course, separated from those competing for the prizes, although they may be given cards upon which to register their own guesses of the selections played.

It is worthy of note that every prominent music educator to whose attention this contest idea has come has given it his unqualified approval.

The interest already aroused indicates that a great many of the large cities will hold these contests this coming fall. I earnestly recommend the idea to every supervisor and to private and parochial schools and to downtown music schools. We cannot be too energetic in making this a general movement toward the recognition and appreciation of good music among all classes of people.

We have only to acquaint ourselves with musical Italy to appreciate the fact that popular music is familiar music.

Let us make the best music familiar and we shall have raised the standard of our popular music.

Our orchestral "pops" have given us a grand start toward the right standard. The schools can help to carry on the same idea by promoting the music memory contest.

PASSING COMMENT

The unusual and very trying conditions which have obtained in Chicago (as indeed in all the country) the past month have been somewhat modified the past week and concerts are again under way on at least a 50 per cent schedule, with prospects that shortly this will be increased to the maximum of this time of year.

The orchestra concerts of last Friday and Saturday were well attended, thanks to the lure of Toscha Seidel, but there were still no Sunday concerts—this being made absolute through the eleventh hour defection of Baur, who sent word to Mr. Neumann that he could not appear at Kimball Hall "because of imperative health reasons," whatever that may mean.

Equally impotent seems the excuse of Claudia Muzio for not appearing on Tuesday evening at the Civic Music Benefit at Orchestra Hall, for the public was informed that the director of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York would not allow her to risk her precious health in the barbarian West just previous to the opening of the New York opera season.

However, an entirely adequate substitute was found, and Muzio, though popular here, was easily proven not indispensable.

In these troublous times it seems strange to hear people prate of the restriction of their liberty (or license) as though this were a personal insult and affront.

A citizen (man) writing to the Tribune complains bitterly because people are allowed to keep the windows of street cars and elevated cars open.

Such a man ought to be compelled to remain at home strictly until the epidemic be entirely past, for sensible people have learned emphatically that it is ventilation and fresh air which have saved Chicago from a still more severe visitation than it has had.

And, while on this subject, let us voice also a protest to the spirit of levity with which many people speak of our health commissioner, Dr. John Dill Robertson, for unquestionably we owe him instead a very hearty vote of public thanks for his energy in dealing with a difficult situation and the wisdom on his part which has so successfully and quickly disposed of the worst of the epidemic in Chicago.

If we would but more attentively read the papers from other municipal centers we would very readily perceive that Chicago is vastly better off than the great majority of them.

It is common enough to hear vocal teachers state that they can teach "anybody" to sing, but quite a different matter to hear of a man who is confident that there are some who should not waste their money in the vain effort.

The following interview, given a New York paper by the teacher, Lazar S. Samoiloff, so nearly fits in with the editorial belief that we here reproduce it in full:

Before I began to teach, during my years of experience as an opera singer in Russia, and even during my own student years, I was appalled at the numerous victims of unscrupulous teaching that I saw struggling around me. Young men earning hardly enough to keep body and soul together, young women whose parents were denying themselves the necessities of life in order to provide the money for music lessons, went day after day to studios where they were made to believe that with a year or more of study they would burst upon the world with all the glory of an undiscovered genius. Instead their hopes were doomed to disappointment and sooner or later they disappeared entirely, after exhausting all the funds they could afford and with no return for their years of labor and sacrifice. The blighted ambition of these poor students made such an impression upon me that I determined, should I ever become a teacher, never to give any pupil the opportunity to say, "You were wrong to encourage me."

When I first began to give lessons I therefore made it the first principle of my teaching never to encourage a pupil to study if the outcome of his work appeared to be doubtful. Since I have been teaching in my studio at Carnegie Hall many cases of misguided study have come to my attention. One victim with almost no voice has been flattered into believing that a great career is in store for him. Another, a contralto, has been trying to force her voice up so that she can sing soprano, because she has heard that sopranos are better paid and a vaudeville manager has promised her an engagement. Then there is a continuous procession of throaty tenors and questionable baritones and doubtful basses, all deluded into thinking that fame awaits them by teachers wholly indifferent to the fate of their pupils and whose only anxiety is to swell their own bank accounts.

Personally I feel that every honest teacher should consider it as important to discourage mediocrity as to encourage talent. If a pupil comes to my studio and appears to have little or no reason to expect a career, I tell him the worst, that he has not enough voice to work with, that he is physically handicapped, that it would take years to undo the results of bad training, or whatever the individual reason may be.

If, after a few weeks of hard work, a pupil does not show promising results, my invariable advice is to give up the lessons. Sometimes a pupil will persist in not believing me when I try to discourage his hopes of a career. Then, however, the responsibility of continuing the lessons no longer rests with me.

On the other hand, I am only too glad to do my share to encourage real talent. When pupils of exceptional talent come to my studio I either teach them free or try to make some arrangement by which they may be helped to study.

Of course, many qualities are required to be a successful artist. Some imagine that a beautiful voice is the only essential. But one must also have both skill and personality. Good health, endurance, a love of hard work, perseverance and, last but not least, intelligence are of equal importance in shaping a career.

Young students often see only the glamour of an artist's life, the adulation of the public and the financial returns. Few realize that years of hard, uphill and sometimes discouraging work must be lived through and many sacrifices and deprivations endured before success comes, and it is only those possessed of unusual voices and ability who ultimately succeed in reaching the desired goal.

A voice must not only be properly used, it must be well cared for and kept in the best condition. In no other profession is physical efficiency as vital as to the singer on the concert or operatic stage. The digestive functions play an important role in the life of a singer. Rich, greasy food should be avoided. Highly seasoned food stimulates the voice, but a most undesirable reaction follows. Overeating makes a voice heavy. Exercise, while beneficial, should not be carried to excess. Mistaken zeal in this respect tires the body without producing compensating results. A short walk each day is sufficient for a singer's requirements. Alcoholic drinks should be taken sparingly, if at all. Smoking in any form is harmful. Even a short stay in a room filled with smoke may affect the delicate vocal organs. Then, too, as regards health, a cold should never be allowed to become chronic. Any irritation caused by atmospheric conditions should be kept well under control.

The human voice when properly used is superior to the most highly perfected instrument. Correct breathing is the secret of fine singing. If the singer's voice is under perfect control the softest tone can be made to carry as far as the loudest one. Phrasing, musical designing, dividing a melody into a group of notes at the same time preserving the literary and musical sense, all this depends upon correct breath control.

. . . . . .

And this brings to thought another item which has to do with the vocal life, though it concerns the attitude of pupil rather than teacher.

Recently a young man singer whose work had within the year been well spoken of in Music News told the Editor that he had decided to give up vocal study entirely after having followed it a couple of years and gave this as his reason:

"My teacher tells me I have a remarkable voice, one with which I can 'do something,' and my friends all say that I have the possibility of 'a career' even in opera. But, in spite of the fact that I have sung for many people, no one has stteped forward and offered to do something for me.'"

"What would you expect them to do?" was hazarded.

"Well, if my voice is really worth so much there ought to be somebody who would want to invest in it to the extent of paying for my education and putting me in line for 'big things' and, as no one seems to want to do this, I have decided that it is not worth while to go on alone."

The Editor made absolutely no reply to this, for something inside kept on saying, "What's the use?"

If this man—young, healthy, talented and with other means of making a good livelihood for himself—has not courage to pay for his own lessons and to dig out his own musical salvation, what, in the name of common sense, what IS the use of anyone even trying to give him advice?

It is quite true that some of those who are today great artists have been "helped" (as the young man naively put it), but by far a greater number and most of the really successful people either in music or any other art, profession or occupation now hold their present positions through their own determination and effort, and this writer, for one, believes implicitly that the young man (or woman) who has not the determination to find his own level and who expects someone else to "help" him to it might just as well stop at one stage of the game as another, for he will never succeed under any circumstances.

To "stand on one's own feet" is a slogan which should be studied and adopted by all young students.

In another column of this issue of Music News there is a remarkable article by Gaylord Yost which you should certainly read.

My dentist said to me the other day, "This talk about the Germans having evolved the best of modern medicine and dentistry is all bosh; as a matter of fact, the very best and the greater bulk of it all was developed in America."

And so with music. We have been led to believe that Germany was a leader and now, behold! we see that even in music the German assumption was all propaganda and bluff.

And so we are glad to print the Yost article, although you can easily see (as we do, also) that the included lists are far from complete. It is very sure, however, that could the name of every musician in the world be scheduled the proportion as between German and those of other nations would unquestionably remain much the same as figured out by Mr. Yost.

"Your editorials on the Huns are worth the price of a hundred subscriptions."

Two men were talking in a street car. Said one, "I don't care how long the war lasts, I am making good money out of it."

A quiet woman seated near him rose up suddenly and, coming before him, gave him a resounding slap on the right cheek. "That," she said, "that is for my son who is now in France." Then giving him an equally stinging reminder on the left cheek "and that," she said, "that is for my son who went today to training camp."

NEWMAN TRAVELTALKS

"Wartime Italy" is Mr. Newman's travel-talk for this (Friday) evening and Saturday afternoon. This summer Mr. Newman was privileged to visit and photograph scenes on the battle fronts at Monte Grappa, the Piave and the Asiago Plateau, and the skilled traveler brings to you the pictures and story of Rome, Milan, Genoa, Padua and Venice, where air raids have been most severe. No city shows the effect of the ravages of war more than Venice. The palaces are closed and deserted, and life on the Grand Canal is very quiet. In motion pictures you will see many stirring scenes at the front—Italy celebrating her third anniversary of the war, Venetian street scenes, the Grand Canal with wartime changes, scenes of the Austrian retreat and disaster, Roman streets and markets. It will be seen that a new prosperity has picked up the land and made it sound and financially strong. In the palace of the king are soldiers' cots, the spirit of democracy is in Italy. As in England and in France, so in "Sunny Italy" has the message of comradeship whispered its encouragement and bade the fighter fight on. In this travel-talk you are to see Italy in the full tide of her successful effort.

HINSHAW CONSERVATORY AGENCY

The Hinshaw Coservatory Agency will send out two companies, which will open November 8. These organizations were to have begun their tour two weeks ago, but on account of the quarantine were compelled to delay the opening. This tour is booked under the Antrim Bureau of Philadelphia.

At the Majestic Theater this week the vaudeville team known as Hobson and Beatty open their season in Chicago and will continue throughout the year on the Orpheum circuit. Both Miss Hobson and Miss Beatty were vocal pupils of Marvin Hinshaw.

CENTRAL MUSIC HALL

A neat little circular which is being sent broadcast calls attention again to the desirability of Central Music Hall as a place for recitals and school concerts, as well as choral and orchestral events of medium size.

No place in town is more centrally located or more easy of access, and no place is more beautifully adapted to music.

And not alone do concerts fit snugly into Central Music Hall, but also it is ideal both for programs of plays and operas or for dancing exhibitions, inasmuch as the stage is unusually large for a place of its size and is bountifully and tastefully equipped with scenery and properties.

The seating capacity of Central Music Hall is 690 and that comes pretty near being the ideal number of seats for a concert hall in Chicago, as it is only the functions of the greatest artists that require a larger number of seats.

Harriet Martin Snow is the manager.

THE RIVIERA

Out on Broadway, at Lawrence Avenue, there is a wonderful new building in which is housed a theater which, for style and equipment, is second to nothing ever seen in Chicago.

This is the Riviera, and while it is very large (seating about 2,500 people), it is yet one of the most artistic and homelike places imaginable.

The conduct of the house is admirable from every standpoint and to a music critic it seemed especially so in the deference paid to the music numbers.

There is a splendid orchestra to furnish incidental music for the pictures (for the Riviera is a sort of sublimated movie house) and at intervals this body of musicians plays "set" numbers of good content and in fine style, and occasionally there is a song by some definitely good artist.

Just previous to any of these numbers the ushers take military attitudes in the middle of the aisles—one usher to each aisle—and, standing there immovable throughout the number, they thus give the audience the cue that no one should take a seat or leave one during the continuance of the music, and the result of this is such intensity of attention as has never before been attained in any theater of this kind.

The advertisements of the Riviera boldly claim that it is "A Temple of Beauty where the silent drama has studious exploitation with synchronizing symphony and incidental novelties, artistic and colorful."

A visit there one evening last week proved all this to be true in a very unusual degree.

The begin with, not only is the appearance of the theater very beautiful and very restful, but the lighting effects are positively the best yet used in any movie theater and, as the pictures themselves are remarkably well chosen and presented, the effect is entertaining as well as educational, for the subjects treated embrace a wide variety of mood and color, including some of the most wonderful war pictures yet seen anywhere.

The entr' acte music and that used to color and emphasize the pictures is furnished by a very large orchestra supplemented by a good organ played very intelligently by Horace Pierce.

The conductor of the orchestra is S. Leopold Kohls and without any exception the work he accomplishes is the best ever heard by this writer in such an entertainment.

His orchestra is very complete and is evidently composed of men of high grade. He selects fine music and plays it with splendid style and effect purely as music, but, much more than that, he has made a complete study of synchronization, with the result that his music fits whatever is passing on the screen with almost absolute fidelity.

If Mr. Kohls keeps up the standard of last week the Riviera will gain a unique and an altogether enviable reputation.

The assistant conductor is Albert Short. Last week there were two special numbers, the first being a vocal duet by Ethel Johnson and Grant Kimbell, and the second the well liked "Vilanelle," sung in extremely good style by Miss Herman.

The Johnson-Kimbell number was the popular "Moonbeams Shining" ("Red Mill") and it was presented exquisitely, both from the scenic and the musical standpoint.

The rising curtain disclosed a moonlit garden with the two singers in charming pose and the song came merely as a part (though a very beautiful and wholly artistic part) of the picture.

The singing was remarkably good, but there was no repetition allowed, no curtain calls, no response whatever — merely the song, and the singers were a passing part of the whole beautifully chosen, accurately fitted, splendidly synchronized bill.

This writer has heard Mr. Kimbell as the leading tenor in a full-fledged opera performance, as one of a quartet in numerous oratorio performances, as special and regular soloist in church and in scores of important miscellaneous concerts, to say nothing of a half dozen recitals, and in all these there was a perfect adaptability to the occasion as well as a display of art entirely adequate to each program.

All this goes to prove great versatility as well as abundant ability, and when an artist of this caliber can also appear in a semi-popular number in ensemble with another singer and still retain his splendid musicianship and his fine style then indeed can he be spoken of as one who is able to cope with any possible occasion which his profession may impose upon his art.

All the music proved to be quite as agreeable as it was novel and, when to swiftly moving entertainment of wide variety and infinite artistry there was added that constant courtesy which is "the watchword" at the Riviera, the totality of impression and effect was perfect.

C. E. W.

AT THE GARRICK

Whatever the Garrick presents is well done and usually the best of its kind.

Therefore, when Musical Comedy is announced there one expects to see aplenty of pretty girls, fine sartorial display, good scenic investure and adequate dramatic presentation.

All these factors are fully in evidence in "Rock a Bye Baby," and to those who wish an evening of color and glitter with a little (a very little) good music and a story which will tax no one to follow, we say, with unreserve, go to the Garrick during the run of this piece.

The story is an attenuation of that bright comedy or, rather, farce-comedy "Baby Mine," and, while it has necessarily been well pruned to make space for the dances and the singing, there yet remains enough of it to cause many a hearty laugh during the progress of the evening.

The cast is long and adequate.

The best of the men is Jefferson De Angelis, who is well fitted in the part of Jimmy Jinks, and the best woman—by far—is Louise Dresser, who plays the part of his wife.

Dorothy Dickson, who is scheduled as Dorothy Manners of the cast, does some very skillful dancing, in which she has the assistance of several clever young men, and the Beauty Chorus shows grace and skill in pose and dance, not to speak of its wonderful display in the way of clothes.

HYDE PARK BAPTIST

The finest in the group of substantial, well built "university churches" is the Hyde Park Baptist at Fifty-sixth and Woodlawn, where the beautiful auditorium is especially enhanced by an unusually effective choir loft and a fine organ.

The latter, usually played by Mrs. Henry C. Miller, was in the capable hands of Frances Anne Cook last Sunday night and not only did she do fine hymn playing and special accompanying, but also in her own numbers showed herself experienced and artistic. These were Hollins' "Benediction" and a march by Rogers, both played extremely well.

Frank Parker is the present choir director and finds material with which to work out his good musicianship and musical taste in a well selected and drilled choir of about twenty-four members and a quartet composed of Julia Morse, Mildred Smith, George B. Simmons and himself.

The special number of the evening was the ten minute cantata, "Redemption Hymn," by J. C. D. Parker.

This fine American work, fugal in form with touches of the antiphonal and dramatic in effect rather than solidly choral, was given a splendid presentation and proved itself, as well as the choir, to be very much worth while.

The elaborate incidental solo and obligato was well done by Miss Smith, a contralto of ample power and range, as well as of good quality.

On Sunday evening, November 17, Gaul's "Holy City" will be given by these forces.

C. E. W.

CHURCH OF THE ATONEMENT

On last Sunday morning a special service of blessing of the flags of our allies was held at the Church of the Atonement, when the music of the "Holy Eucharist" was the composition of the organist, Frank W. Smith.

Not only was this very beautiful and successful, but so also were the solos (the national hymns of Belgium, Italy and France) by Arthur Ranous, Arthur Kraft and Charles Champlin, and the offertory solo, "Recessional" (Reginald de Koven), splendidly sung by Mr. Ranous. A Preludial organ recital by John W. Norton was given with fine effect.

Weber—Henriette Weber gave a lecture on "Russian Musicians" before the Woman's Club of Englewood on Tuesday afternoon.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE NOTES

Karl Reckzeh of the Chicago Musical College faculty will give a recital of works by Chopin in Ziegfeld Theater this (Saturday) morning at 11 o'clock. His program will comprise the following: Ballade, G Minor, Opus 23; Nocturne, D Flat Major, Opus 27, No. 2; Sonata, B Minor, Opus 58, and Twelve Etudes, Opus 25.

The program that will be presented by the Chicago Musical College in Ziegfeld Theater on November 16 will be given by students in the piano, violin and vocal departments.

The Century Opera Company opened its tour in Peoria last Wednesday. The following students of the college are principals in the company: Alice May Carley, Edna Kellogg, Mae Pfeiffer, Stanley Deacon and Ethel Magie.

The Chicago Musical College School of Opera will interpret the whole of Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" at one of the Saturday morning concerts in Ziegfeld Theater next month.

Felix Borowski will lecture this (Saturday) morning at 9:15 in Ziegfeld Theater. The subject of the lecture will be "The Beginnings of Musical Notation."

J. WARREN ERB IN NEW YORK

J. Warren Erb, who has made a place for himself in New York City during the past few seasons, has located at 220 Madison avenue, in the studios formerly occupied by Frank La Forge. Mr. Erb worked very successfully with Walter Rothwell, with whom he furthered his knowledge of conducting, in which field he had already achieved success. He comes to New York to take charge of the Oratorio Society of the Christian Science Institute. This chorus of about three hundred singers was organized by Frederick Gunther, now in the service of his country, and Mr. Erb is regarded as a worthy successor of one who aroused interest in an undertaking of this kind. In addition to the training and conducting of this society Mr. Erb will devote himself to coaching and accompanying singers and will be available particularly for New York concerts and recitals. According to present intentions the Oratorio Society, under Mr. Erb, will give its first large concert in Carnegie Hall after Christmas. Rehearsals are conducted at the Chamber Music Hall in Carnegie.

F. WIGHT NEUMANN ANNOUNCEMENTS

Much interest is attached to the piano recital of Agnes Lapham next Sunday afternoon, November 10, at 3:30 at Kimball Hall, under the direction of F. Wight Neumann. Hers is the story of a Kansas girl who, through her own efforts, came to Chicago and made an enviable reputation among the best musicians of the city.

Pablo Casals, the world's greatest cellist, will give his only recital in Chicago Sunday afternoon, November 17, at 3:30 at Cohen's Grand Opera House, under the direction of F. Wight Neumann.

Chicago Symphony Orchestra—Coming Soloists—This week, Guiomar Novias, piano; November 15-16, Reinald Werrenrath, baritone; November 22-23, Vera Kaplan Aronson, piano.

CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

After "The Star Spangled Banner," grown more beautiful and more dear to the American heart day by day during the past year especially, the orchestra completed the first half of the program on Saturday night with the Rondo Infinito (Opus 42) of Sinding and the Symphony in E Flat by Enesco, known to fame as the only Roumanian composer of real note.

The first of these is formal in design and rather devoid of inspiration, though neat in orchestral writing and pleasantly musical.

The second is a brilliant piece of work and full to repletion with musical charm. Both works were played well but with no particular display of virtuosity either on the part of the conductor, Eric De Lamarter, or the orchestra.

The last half of the program was given over to the Tschaikowsky Violin Concerto (in introduction of Toscha Seidel) and in this Mr. De Lamarter distinguished himself for the first time.

With the exception of one small disagreement between orchestra and soloist, which occurred, unfortunately, at the very end of the work, the accompanying was done so admirably as to suggest the finesse of Emil Oberhoffer in the same kind of work and to surpass that of Mr. Stock.

There was close connection in all entrances and at all releases of phrase, no matter how unusual was their mode, and there was color and shading which supplemented the soloist absolutely and which must have served as a constant buoy to him and no doubt added vastly to the success of the concerto reading.

. . . . . .

Instigated by the New York managers and press agents there has developed a tendency to compare the several talented boy violinists who have appeared the past few years with each other and to subject each to a minute paralleling with the work of Heifetz.

This, it seems to me, is quite unnecessary, for each of them is individual and each has his own charm and value.

Heifetz, unquestionably, has a sedateness of physical bearing and a poignancy of tone which account for his popularity in spite of a very ordinary technical equipment and a meager repertoire.

Breeskin and Rosen are more hardy in type and each has a virility and a sturdy personality which, coupled with immense technical equipment and fine repertoire, make him, per se, an artist as well as a personality.

Toscha Seidel, the latest and the youngest of them all, is hampered just a trifle by a too-outspoken confidence and a set of mannerisms which he will certainly modify as the months go on. He paces about the stage like a chained wild animal and his bodily contortions are painful to witness, but in spite of this he is the possessor of a technical equipment which is so far beyond that of Heifetz as to place him in an entirely different strata, and which permits him to give a brilliance of execution and a vividness of reading which is positively uncanny.

When, for instance, he approached the final rapid moments of both the first and third movements of the Concerto, he seemed, metaphorically, to "roll up his sleeves" and to plunge absolutely headlong into a race against time—a race which seemed constantly to be an utter impossibility to maintain, but from which, in both instances, he emerged positively triumphant (with the audience grasping the seats in an ecstasy of excitement.)

In these two tours de force he reminded me of nothing and no one so much as of Mme. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler when in the E Flat Concerto of Liszt or the Hungarian Rhapsodie of the same composer she buckles down to one of her flights of speed and brilliance toward the close and comes up triumphant and smiling, about ten laps ahead of what anyone else could possibly do in the way of speed, accuracy and brilliance.

The Tschaikowsky Concerto gives but a minimum opportunity for the display of beautiful tonal quality as expressed in cantabile, and therefore we must await the coming Seidel recital to obtain proofs of his possession of musical feeling and temperament, in such degree, for instance, as can be shown best in something of the type of the Chopin Nocturne in E flat, but—awaiting that, we can still say that the technical display as well as the musicianship and the accuracy of the Concerto playing of last Saturday night were phenomenal.

The audience liked young Mr. Seidel very much indeed, and at the close he received an ovation which is very seldom equaled at Orchestra Hall.

. . . . . .

The program for the current week, with Guiomar Novaes as soloist, reads as follows:

Overture, "In Autumn" ..... Grieg
Symphony, C Major, "Jupiter" (Kochel 551) ..... Mozart
Allegro Vivace.
Andante Cantabile.

CONSTANTIN NICOLAY

An artist who has grown to be one of the favorites with the clientele of the Chicago Grand Opera Company and whose work is always satisfactory to the final degree is

CONSTANTIN NICOLAY

Constantin Nicolay, who not only has a powerful and beautiful voice but also much musicianship and great intelligence of interpretation.

In whatever part he appears (and in the many years of his connection with the company he has appeared in scores of parts) he is always fully adequate, both vocally and histrionically, and in such a part as Angelotti in "Tosca," for instance, he is invaluable.

It was in this part that Mr. Nicolay appeared in St. Paul during the recent engagement of the Chicago company in that city and in which he scored a fine success, both with the critics and the public.

A LETTER TO DANIEL MAYER

From the St. Cecilia Society of Grand Rapids:

"October 23, 1918.

"I feel that I must write and tell you how much we enjoyed Mr. Breeskin. His recital was a great success and our club members were delighted. His playing was satisfying in every way, and we all feel that he has a great future before him. His technic, his rhythm, his artistic interpretations and his musical feeling, which never descends to sentimentality, all show the true artist.

"Thank you for having sent to us one of the best recitals we have ever had.

(Signed) "HELEN B. ROWE,
"President."

Northwestern University—At Music Hall of the Northwestern University School of Music, on this (Friday) evening, a Chamber Music program will be given. On Wednesday afternoon a piano and song program was presented by Irene Barras, pianist, and Anne Semelroth, contralto, with Gertrude Rayner as accompanist. On November 12, at Fisk Hall, a program will be given by Stanley Martin, organist, and Rollin M. Pease, baritone.

PABLO CASALS

Spain, that romantic land of the past, rich in tradition and poetic beauty, has produced many great men. Among these Pablo Casals, the cellist, holds a very high place. Fritz Kreisler's famous words, "Casals is the greatest man who draws the bow," are richly deserved, not only because of his supremacy as a cellist but because he is acknowledged to be one of the greatest living musicians.

Born in Vendrell, Spain, not the least of the encouraging influences in his career was his own family. His father, an organist of some note, began the musical education of his son at the age of 3. He gave the boy Pablo instruction in solfege, piano and organ, and later in composition, which was to be his real vocation. Casals, however, after he had taken his first lesson on the cello, dispelled that idea.

When he was about 9 he heard his violin teacher play on the cello. It was the first time he had heard the instrument and he was enchanted. It seemed to combine something of all the other instruments and a quality of its own still finer than any of them, he thought. He was determined to study it at once and he did.

At 11 or 12 he was already a finished musician, capable of making his own way in the world. He was sent to Barcelona, then and still a musical center of no mean repute, to study under Garcia. There he played the organ in the churches, as did Bach in his early youth—of whom Casals now stands acknowledged the greatest living interpreter. Soon he became a violinist in the orchestra of the opera and played the cello in one of the largest cafes. But by that it must not be understood that he played the part that the Jazz band plays in our cabaret. The Spanish cafe music is like that of our best concerts. Casals was soon recognized as a prodigy and the cafe where he played was thronged. His fame attracted people from all over the country. Musicians came to hear the marvelous Spanish boy, among them the famous Arbos and Albeniz. The latter gave him a letter to Count Morphy, a great patron of the arts and the secretary of Queen Maria Christine, who tutored both Casals and the present king. This letter was not delivered for three years, for Casals was unable to leave Barcelona because his parents objected on the ground of his extreme youth. In the meanwhile the queen, to whom knowledge of his extraordinary promise had penetrated, granted him a pension which enabled him to devote himself more fully to his studies.

To Madrid he went, finally, to study at the "Conservatoire" under Breton for composition and Monasterio for chamber music. Monasterio, who had already recognized his ability in Barcelona, was quick to do all in his power to develop and encourage it. He had Casals' compositions for chamber music played in public and one of them he used as a study for his class. At this time the first of the many honors of which he has since been the recipient was bestowed on him by the queen—the order of Isabella La Catolica (one of the rare cases of an order being bestowed upon a student). When he was about 17 the queen granted him a stipend to study in Brussels at the Royal Conservatoire; there he was treated rudely and the boy, proud as only a Spanish youth can be, decided at once to leave Brussels and go to Paris. Count Morphy thought this a piece of youthful waywardness and had his pension suppressed, so that he was thrown on his own resources. An unknown in a foreign country, he must have experienced a period of intense hardship and discouragement. Finally he went to Colonne, director of Los Concerts Colonne, which is the most important orchestra in Paris and probably in Europe. He was engaged immediately for the orchestra and the door of fame was thus open to him. From that time dates his world-wide success as a cellist and a musician, for the light of a genius like that of Casals cannot remain long hidden where there are any music lovers to discover it. Soon after that he made his debut in Vienna and it is said that he created a furor. He has played in all the civilized countries of Europe—everywhere his astonishing art has been acclaimed and recognized by the highest honors.

At the height of his European career, when the name of Casals had become a household word, the war broke out. Casals had always planned to come to America, though he had not expected to as soon as he did. But he now declares it was his luck star that sent him here, for he met Susan Metcalf, one of America's most talented song birds, the woman who was to become his future wife. Unfortunately Casals has never been willing to devote an entire season to America, for each year he has wished to return to Spain chiefly because of the failing health of his mother, partly because he loves to play for his countrymen.

However, this year he will make his first transcontinental tour and, as people are turning more than ever to good music for their recreation, he will undoubtedly meet with a success similar to that encountered wherever he has played, for in Casals the public will find inspiration for renewed strength and courage.

McGaw—Winifred S. McGaw, contralto, who has been re-engaged as soloist at the North Shore Congregational Church, sang a Sunday service at Great Lakes during the Summer and also was substitute for both Louise Harrison Slade and Ruth Simmons when they were on vacation. ### MRS. DORMER ENTERTAINS

"No," said a man to me after Mrs. Dormer had read "Verdun" at her studio recital last Sunday and he was seen furtively wiping away the tears from his eyes; "no, it is not because of a personal memory that the tears have come to my eyes, but rather because of the gloriously big idea of this wonderful verse—its apt epitome of the whole dreadful war."

The occasion was the first of a series of Sunday afternoon functions to be given during the winter at her Kimball Hall studio and the specific number was "Verdun," a perfectly wonderful little verse by Harold Begbie which has been read, I believe, by a number of famous people in big benefit affairs of one kind or another and which unquestionably must have made a very deep impression wherever it has been read. It is remarkable in imagery and in quick appeal to the emotions, and the insistently recurring line, "they shall not pass," was given by Mrs. Dormer with as many shades of inflection and meaning as Margaret Anglin was able to infuse into the wonderful "No" which she iterated and reiterated in "Eyes of Youth," which was lately seen at the Princess Theater.

Elizabeth Guion Dormer is a remarkable reader; she is quiet in bearing, sedate in pose and absolutely unaffected in style, and yet she has great power over the emotions of her listeners and she is able to depict a wide range of thought and feeling with rare fidelity to actuality and possibility.

Her other big number of the studio hour was "A Marriage Has Been Arranged" (Alfred Sutro) and in this there was a constant and varied play of skill in the drawing of character and the depicting of incident. "This is not," said Mrs. Dormer, "a play with anything of acting possibility, but plays can be judged from another than the purely dramatic standpoint, and this one has a psychological interest which is fascinating."

Of a truth she proved her assertion in the reading of it and held the breathless attention of her audience through its twenty or twenty-five minutes of apt play of words, quick repartee and swift changes of feeling in the two characters portrayed.

Mrs. Dormer, who is a teacher of both dramatic art and of voice and who has had great public success in both lines, proves her assertion that both arts are built upon the same basic principles by singing with rare intelligence as regards words and meanings and by reading with an equally rare regard for rhythm and tonal inflection.

Her original cantillation, "The Old Leather Trunk," was charming and she disclosed rare skill also in other poems which were deftly followed and sustained (at the piano) by Ralph L. Reiche, a clever pianist, who also is composer of the music for one of the numbers.

ELIZABETH GUION DORMER

Irene Becklenberg, a bright and pretty young girl, disclosed technical skill and musical as well as dramatic feeling in her playing of the C Minor Prelude of Rachmaninoff, as well as in her accompaniment to the delightful songs presented by Mrs. Dormer (scheduled in Music News of last week).

Altogether, the Sunday afternoons of Mrs. Dormer are a special delight and you will be fortunate if you hear one of them.

REED MILLER ENGAGED FOR BEETHOVEN MASS

When the New York Oratorio Society gives their performance of the Beethoven Mass at Carnegie Hall on March 7, Reed Miller will sing the tenor solo part. Through the courtesy of Dr. Walter Damrosch and at his request Mr. Miller has been transferred from "The Messiah" performance, which he was to have sung for this society at Christmas time, to that of the Beethoven work.

Inasmuch as Reed Miller has sung in sixteen performances of "The Messiah" in New York City alone, his appearance in the Beethoven Mass will be welcome, as it will give his many admirers an opportunity to hear him in a work of a different order. However, Mr. Miller is also somewhat of a Beethoven specialist, as he has sung in practically every performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony that has been given for the past dozen years.

CHICAGO OPERA ASSOCIATION

While the clientele of the Chicago Opera is always greatly interested in the returning favorites in the casts from one season to another, there is an equally strong interest from another tangent: Whose are the new voices to be heard and the new faces to be seen in the coming season?

Such established favorites as Mmes. Galli-Curci, Garden, Raisa, Fitziu, Sharlow, Lazzari, Van Gordon, Berat, Messrs. Muratore, Baklanoff, Rimini, Stracciari, Lamont, Maguenat, Arimondi, Huberdeau, Nicolay, Trevisan, and others who remain for the coming season, are expected and welcomed by opera-goers as a matter of course.

But at the same time curiosity is keen as to the added notables from the foremost opera houses of Europe, North and South America, who come to the Chicago Opera this year, some of them to make their first appearance in the United States, and others bringing pleasant recollection of their artistry in former grand opera seasons in Chicago.

One of these newcomers of whom reports indicate great promise is Yvonne Gall, the noted French soprano, formerly of the Paris Opera, and during the past summer one of the bright particular luminaries at the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires. One of these echoes of her achievements in South America has come in a letter to Herman Devries, critic of the Chicago American, from his nephew, Henri Buesser, who has been conducting at the Colon, in which the latter states that Mme. Gall and Miss Raisa have divided the highest honors of female stars there, and recounts the especial successes of the first in "Thais," "Faust," "Romeo and Juliet," and "Herodiade," and of the second in "Aida," "Norma," "Un Ballo in Maschera," and other operas. The same letter tells of similar successes of Giacomo Rimini and Marcel Journet. All of these artists are expected to arrive in Chicago early in November.

Another noted French soprano to come to Mr. Campanini's forces later in the season is Marthe Chenal, also of the Paris Grand Opera and of the Opera Comique. Mme. Chenal was announced for the roster of last year, but was unable to fulfill the engagement. She informs the Chicago Opera administration that her difficulties of a year ago have been entirely overcome, and gives assurance that she will surely come for the last half of the season at the Auditorium. Likewise, from the Paris Grand Opera come two leading tenors, John O'Sullivan, to make his American debut early in the season, and Charles Fontaine, to be introduced here later. Auguste Bouilliez, the Belgian baritone from La Monnaie of Brussels and Covent Garden, London, comes for the French repertoire.

To the strength of the Italian division Mr. Campanini is bringing Alessandro Dolci, rated the foremost dramatic tenor now in Italy, and Guido Ciccolini, formerly successful in lyric roles at Costanzi, Rome, and lately approved in this country in concerts and recitals as well as in phonographic mediums.

Returning artists of former seasons are Florence Macbeth, who was popular in casts at the Auditorium three years ago; Marcel Journet, whose absence of two years has not dimmed recollection of his fine interpretations in this organization; Irene Pavloska, mezzo-soprano, who has been absent for a year, and Evelyn Parnell, formerly of the Boston Opera, who was a guest of the Chicago company last season.

Other additions to the personnel are Dora Gibson, an American soprano, formerly of the Royal Opera at Covent Garden, London; Dorothy Jardon, another native soprano recruited from lighter musical fields; Margaret Namara, also an American soprano, formerly of the Boston Opera, until recently baritone of the Reggio in Turin; Vira Amazar, soprano, formerly of the Petrograd Opera; Lodovico Oliviero, of the former tenor list of San Carlo, and later notable in concert; Mario Valle, Naples; William Rogerson, a young tenor of Chicago; Sylvia Tell, the first American dancer to occupy the designation of premiere danseuse in an organization of this standing; Andreas Pavley and Serge Oukrainsky, formerly with Mlle. Pavlowa and the Imperial Russian Ballet, engaged for special performances in the coming series.

Besides Maestro Campanini, Marcel Charlier and Giuseppe Sturani, who were of the former organization, two other conductors of importance, Giorgio Polacco, formerly of the Metropolitan, and Louis Hasselmans, from the Paris Opera, have been called to the staff.

Mr. Emile Merle-Forest, whose work last season wrought excellence in the mise-en-scene, will again be the stage director. Associated with him are Harry W. Beatty, technical director, and Peter J. Donigan, scenic artist.

Barr—Melba Mae French-Barr, soprano, and her husband, Mr. Barr, are receiving congratulations on the recent appearance of a son, by name William Allan.

Mu Phi Epsilon—The first concert of the Iota Chapter of Mu Phi Epsilon was given at Ziegfeld Theatre on Tuesday morning, the program arranged by Mrs. O. L. Fox and Mrs. Harriet M. Smulski. The artists appearing were Zetta Gay Whitson, Elizabeth Olk Roehlk, Sylvia Bargman, Olive June Lacey, Adele Laue, Frederica Gerhardt Downing, Florence Stevenson Gahlbeck, Harriet Smulski, Beulah Taylor Porter and Alice Brown Stout.

Chamber Music—The last concert of the series of the Chicago Chamber Music Trio at 16 West Jackson boulevard will be given on Sunday afternoon, November 10. Hans Hess, the cellist of this trio, will give a recital during this season under the direction of F. Wight Neumann.

OLIVE NEVIN IS TO BRING HER MESSAGE OF JOY TO THOSE "AT HOME" IN MILWAUKEE AND CHICAGO THIS MONTH.

Olive Nevin's many friends in Milwaukee and Chicago will be glad to hear that she is to bring her message to them this month. On the 25th she will appear at the Pabst Theatre in joint recital with Leo Ornstein, under the management of Mr. R. Koebner, and on the 27th she will give the artist recital in the Ziegfield Theatre, under Mr. Carl Kinsey in Chicago.

A study of her programs clearly shows that this young artist is striving a great deal higher than just to be heard and admired. Through her serious thought and work she has arranged her groups so as to bring all possible joy and comfort to her hearers, those of us who must stay at home and back our boys up from here. Her recitals should be of throbbing interest to all.

Her first groups are full of the old, light tuneful melodies that turn our thoughts from the mundane and strife into the romance of the past. Then, with our ears in tune we are ready to hear the next group. This will be Greig songs, but the unusual ones chosen solely for their bearing upon present day conditions. The first, that wonderful nocturne from Monte Pincio, where the poet sits upon Rome's mountain and prophesies the glorious awakening of Italy now taking place. The second song is Faith, telling us that God's hand is over it all, and then "My Goal," a strong appeal to those at home to go on with their work, in spite of everything.

A group from bleeding Russia comes next, and most characteristic of the somber Slavic mind. The invocation to Russia comes first, that treasure lately added to song literature through Mr. Kurt Schindler's latest publication. Then, as if again to relieve us, and quite unique, since almost the whole program is to be sung in English, a group of French songs from Miss Nevin's kinsman, Ethelbert Nevin. In these pure melody and lightness reign supreme.

The last group will be from our own women composers. Mrs. H. H. A. Beach's glorious song "Exaltation," opens this group. Indeed this is surely one of America's greatest productions. Harriet Ware's very unusual song "The Call of Radha," is next, and a greater contrast could scarcely be found. Then, from Gena Branscombe a light, beautiful song called "Wings" that almost makes us fly, and leads into Mrs. Beach's "After," as nothing else could. The program ends with this poem, and Miss Nevin's message is entirely unfolded to our troubled hearts. No one can afford to miss hearing as complete a help in our thought just now.

The poem "After," by Horace Coates:

After the darkness, dawning,
And the stir of the rested wing;
Fresh fragrance from the meadow,
Fresh hope in everything!

After the winter, springtime,
And dreams that flower like throng;
After the tempest, silence;
After the silence, song!

After that heat of anger,
Love that all life enwraps:
After the stress of battle,
The trumpet, sounding "taps!"

After despair and doubting,
A faith without alloy;
God here and over yonder,
The end of all things, JOY!!

Mendelssohn Club—The Chicago Mendelssohn Club, Harrison M. Wild, conductor, as a part of their pledge to the Government will give their services at the opening of the United War Work Campaign, Friday evening, November 8, at Medinah Temple. A patriotic program will be rendered and Theodore Roosevelt and other prominent speakers have been invited to take part in this rally.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE

The recital on Saturday morning, November 2, the first at Ziegfeld Theater since the ban placed on public gatherings, was nearly as well attended as usual, which is saying a great deal, for these Saturday morning musicales are always well attended.

"Ungarisch" (MacDowell), presented by Rose Chircus, pupil of Harry Detweiler, was played very attractively and with very clear technic.

The solo group, "Claire de Lune" (Debussy), Caprice on a theme from "Alceste" (Gluck-Saint-Saens) and Concerto, A Minor (first movement) by Grieg, were played respectively by Baselah Cristol and Helen Prindiville, pupils of Rudolph Reuter. These were of a very high order. Miss Prindiville, in her concerto, proved a very sincere and well advanced young artist.

To detail the work of the singers on the program seems almost superfluous, as they were all up to the usual high average of those appearing at these recitals, both as regards technical equipment, interpretation and stage deportment.

Prelude from the "Cycle of Life" (Ronald) was sung by Ethel Shapiro, "Lascio chio Piangi" from "Rinaldo" (Handel) and "A Child's Prayer (Joseph), by Mollie Ettelson; "Ernani Involami" from "Ernani" (Verdi), by Olive Lacy, and the "Flower Song" from "Carmen" (Bizet) was sung by Frank Cowen.

Fantasie on Rossini's "Otello" (Ernst) was played by Ilse Niemack, the only violin pupil on the program. This was played with good tonal effect and with much style and brilliance by one so young.

CHICAGO CONCERT ENSEMBLE

The Chicago Concert Ensemble, under George Dasch, presented its third program for the season at the Art Institute last Sunday afternoon. The program was as follows:

The Star Spangled Banner
Overture—Masaniello ..... Auber
Slavonic Lullaby ..... C. V. Rychlik
Humoreske ..... C. V. Rychlik
String Quintet
Scenes Poetiques
On the Mountain
In the Village
In the Woods ..... Godard
Serenade ..... Moszkowsky
Romance (Arr. by Mr. Dasch) ..... Svendsen
Waltz from the Ballet Suite Sleeping Beauty ..... Tschaikowsky

Throughout the program was indicative of musicianly insight on the part of the conductor and thorough artistry on the part of the musicians. The numbers were selected and arranged with taste and an eye to please a none too ambitious Sunday audience. Especially appealing was the Slavonic Lullaby by C. V. Rychlik, full of eastern color and untamed emotion, while the "Sleeping Beauty Waltz" was charming in its languid grace.

The service rendered the community by this organization is a very great one and it is to be hoped that this, its ninth season, will be no less successful than those preceding.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

The Elderly Person

It's late, of course, to write about the sky-fighting pictures of Monsieur Farre, visited by crowds at the Art Institute in July; or to speak of the daring of the French ace, Flachaire, whose name the ladies of the South Shore Country Club rolled so deliciously under their tongues so that a verdant might know it was "Flawshay" when correctly pronounced. The Elderly Person confesses great admiration for the flyer after holding his breath and having bewildering heart failure a half dozen times while he watched the amazing mastery of the air and the machine under the skilled hands and brain. A day or two after watching the evolutions the Elderly Person was swimming in his beloved lake, and darting about with incredible swiftness and ease over the water was a huge dragon fly. The resemblance between the French machine and the insect was remarkable, even to the circles on the wings. Perhaps the dragon fly can, when it wants to, turn itself over and over and careen down the sky as if it had lost control of itself, but it hasn't been demonstrated yet. But, otherwise, Flachiare seemed as much at home and buzzed about as easily as his prototype. It was easy to wonder if even the elderly chaps would not live long enough to find transportation through the air as much a matter of course as by railroad.

But if the dashing member of the Lafayetts Escadrille was temporary, and the battle pictures perhaps indifferent art and even a species of high grade fad for a thoroughly worthy purpose, there was a something in the occasion which left its impress so permanently on the minds of many that they obtained a vision.

In one room, and hung indifferently, were perhaps twenty portraits of the men belonging to this famous squadron. If the pictures had been spaced better, the colors of both nations used for contrast and nothing else been put in the room it would have been a gallery of the gods. The artist, who had done interestingly with his pictures of motion and action, became a seer when he struck off these compact impressions of very great souls. He caught their lofty spirit and heroism, their courage which was daring to recklessness, their indifference to peril, their subjection of flesh to spirit. In the wonderful depths of the farseeing eyes, in the firm lips—nearly everyone wearing a wraith of a smile in the squared jaws—the sturdy necks and the steady chests they spoke their kinship with the heroes of old. Of such types were David, Constantine, Achilles, St. George, King Arthur, Parsifal, Lohengrin, Gallahad, Richard of the Lion Heart, Tonty, Champlain, LaSalle and the great galaxy of splendid souls who gave themselves nobly to noble deeds. Of such unswerving material was made Horatius, who stood at the bridge, and Spartacus, the gladiator who was unafraid. In their company men like Washington and Lincoln find their friends. Surely in the Elysian Fields in the great Over There they salute when they pass, even if they do not crony. For there are some among the number of those fine faced men whom Farre painted in 1917 and 1918 who have made the supreme earthly sacrifice, solved the greatest of life's problems and gone on to greater flights. Several of the pictures had attached to a lower corner a rosette of crepe with bits of the tricolor intertwined. On such pictures the artist had written "Mort au champ d'honeur." "Dead on the field of honor" is their obituary and the most perfect expression of its kind. Once more, hats off to the Frenchman for knowing just how to give the finishing touch. The Lawyer was with the Elderly Person when they first saw this badge of greatness and he gave a gulp. When he could trust himself to speak he said, "It makes me want to cry—not with sorrow but because I am in the presence of something glorious." But the Elderly Person felt like uncovering and saluting in silence. As was said once by a mistaken man who had misapplied the elements of nobility in him, "The time will come when our silence will speak louder than any words." And these silences are thunderous. Among these illustrious dead was the most masterful of all aces—Guynemer, with ninety-four planes brought down as his record.

The faces of the men were unalike in their general resemblance. One man was a close copy of the thin, keen, velvety leanness of Lawrence Barrett when he portrayed "Pendragon," one of the many Arthurian names. Another had the shock hair and bulldog neck of John McCullough when he became the infuriated "Virginius." Another had the most immaculate whiskers, parted to rival the present Illinois senator. Another's hair was crisp and curly, and he had a manner which bespoke the ladies' man. One was a fair repetition of the Abbey Knight of the Grail, so resolutely pure and high minded in his vigils before altar and armor. His face was long. No hint of mustache or beard. A long, boyish chin and full lips. High cheek bones and shadowing eyebrows. And the happiest, loveliest of eyes. A face to dream over and weave romance. So fresh and bouyant, so ripe to receive the honor of knighthood. One wanted to repeat, "His strength was as the strength of ten because his heart was pure."

There is something marked about donning an uniform, a costume, an armor, an insignia of any sort which sets a man apart for a separate task or office. Choirmasters find the vestments to carry a certain significance to the most callous. A feeling running all the way from consecration to humor is engendered. Unconsciously the vestment, the uniform, stands for a something which invites if it does not command respect and few there be who do not feel the spell. So was it with the helmets and other head pieces framing the faces of these modern argonauts. Their eyes burned out from under the casques with a determination which said no act or thought of the wearers would ever dishonor the crest. One face looked out from a protection that might have been worn by a hardy Norseman or a French-Canadian Voyageur. It was Lufberry, the brave American. It seemed fitting that he should so resemble our first argonauts when he laid down his life in the clearing of today's wilderness. Another had such a pet of a mustache and the full ripe cheeks of a good liver that even his face expressed his surprise, while it carried gratification, that he had that other and mighty thing which put him among the elect. He might easily stand for our present type of Frenchman—men who love ease, pleasure, culture, refinement that can even go too far, and yet can put these resolutely, unflinchingly and willingly under foot and endure dirt, vermin, heat, fever, pain and privation and forget everything but the country's need and their part in its salvation. Such a man as we read of in "The War, Madame."

At the foot of the stairs are fine replicas of St. George, unhelmeted and bearing his shield, and the great King Arthur from Maximilian's tombs. The Elderly Person found himself fancying that at night, when lights are out and the Art Institute watchman is asleep, that Arthur lifts up his iron visor, suggests to George that he put aside his shield and they go upstairs and find David and get him off his pedestal a while. Passing Joan of Arc on a landing the shades link arms, another trio of immortals, and go about the silent rooms. And it is to be banked on as a certainty that they lingered long and communed heartily with the visitors in that small gallery. And that they felt a new spur when they recognized the metal which the twentieth century was hammering out. Like some others who did not know what evolution was doing, they could clasp hands and shout aloud their happy conviction that "the gods have come to earth again."

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

THE GREAT NATIONAL AMERICAN MUSIC FESTIVAL AT LOCKPORT, N. Y., RECEIVES SUBSTANTIAL BACKING

The 1919 Festival will be presented to the world on a proper basis and with correct background and material.

"It is always darkest just before the dawn."

The National American Music Festival has passed through the twilight of stress and the darkness of curtailment, and is approaching the dawn of better days. Let the encomium to A. A. Van De Mark be, that he has striven for this with dignity and has won it because he deserved it. Always has he kept the faith.

Sixty men and women of prominence, thoroughly alive to the exact educational, commercial and social value of this great American idea, have come forward with a substantial guarantee, which opens a vista of vast possibilities for the future. This American festival can now be presented to the world on a proper basis and with correct background and material. It also removes any further doubt as to the future home of the National American Music Festival. The history of this American movement in retrospect is as follows:

The idea of bringing together each year the representative American composers, singers, players, educators and publishers for a week of harmonious fraternalization and combined practical effort was born in the mind of A. A. Van De Mark, the founder of the National American Music Festival.

The great association of tonal artists of Germany was organized and held annually in a small city for the purpose of holding a seven-day convention devoted to concerts, discussions, business and meetings. The best known composers were proud to have their works performed. Conductors attended to make selections for their season's repertoire. Managers attended in order to hear new artists. Leading performers gave their services gladly to make known unfamiliar works. For 358 days in the year the average German musician laid aside a bit of money each week so as to be able to attend at the end of the season and there to meet his famous colleagues socially, refresh his enthusiasm and exchange ideas with his fellows; listen to novelties and receive new stimulus and faith. Was the idea not a splendid one? Why could it not be done in America? And why had no one started such a movement. A. A. Van De Mark believed it could be done and put his faith into practical demonstration.

Lockport, New York, may seem a queer place for such a movement to have its birth, but why? All great ideas are the children of dreamers and geography hasn't much to do with it. Van De Mark lived at Lockport. Through his efforts the little city up the state became a landmark on the musical map of the United States. Almost without exception the greatest artists and Symphony Orchestras had appeared there, but this plucky manager thought many a thought all his own. Among others he could not make peace with the idea that these hundreds of thousands of dollars that he had paid out in honorariums went to foreign artists, few of whom owned homes in this country but sailed across the pond with full coffers as soon as their season closed.

Van De Mark did not view this matter as a bigoted chauvinist. Just the same he began to dream of the time when the American public would shower its gold and applause on the American artist, keeping in the land millions of dollars and at the same time laying the foundation for true American musical art. He never believed in the "Good Luck" theory, but he did know the value of grasping opportunities. He realized that the time had come to strike boldly and that he did, risking the success of many years of hard work. He cast his lot with the American artist and surprised the musical world by announcing the first all-American series of concerts ever recorded in musical history. Many foreign artists and managers expressed their condolence. The following year the National American Music Festival idea was thought out and put into practical test. That was in 1916. Each succeeding one has gained headway and larger attendance, and while the movement is young, it is safe to say that no festival, at its age, has created such widespread interest or more favorable mention.

Lockport, with its fine, tender, old fashioned hospitality, has proved to be an ideal city. Geographically it could not be better located, being situated about equal distance from Chicago, New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, the five cities that probably have as many musicians as all the rest of the larger communities combined. During the week of the great festival, the people of Lockport allow no attraction or distraction to keep the visitors and the local music lovers away from the business on hand. But, as the Editor of "Musical Courier" pointed out in his review of the 1918 Festival:

"The chief reason, however, for the National American Music Festival at Lockport is because no other city had a A. A. Van De Mark to conceive the idea and put it into execution. He has started a great thing, sound in idea and purpose. There is no need to point out why a National Festival of American Music has ethical and practical significance, for the proposition is self-evident. It is a tremendous scheme, nothing less than vast in its possibilities."

Charles E. Watt, Editor of Music News, in commenting on the movement, said:

"Lockport has become the most characteristic musical town in the United States of America. The gradual development of the American music festival idea will be the biggest thing in the history of music in this country. There is a feeling of brotherliness at this festival that I have never before observed at any convention of any kind."

A. A. Van De Mark is not a moneyed man and this lack of funds has made him more or less of a missionary in the musical world, forcing him to resort to various more or less clever means for securing his operating funds, such as putting out a voluminous book in which merchants of Western New York and visiting artists were asked to advertise and seeking to attract as large an audience as possible by giving interesting and varied programs. The festivals have lost money, which he has paid out of his own pocket to a large extent. The proposition was not a commercial one. Van De Mark was struggling for an ideal and the beautiful big thought back of the whole movement is one that has no equal in the musical history of any country. That he has won and gained the financial backing of those who have come to share his ideal, vision, is a rich tribute to his unfaltering zeal and courage.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

The bright lights of New York cannot draw the Spitalny brothers, orchestra conductors, away from Cleveland. The recent offer of Mr. Statler, owner of the new Pennsylvania Hotel, tempted them to take up their work in this, New York's largest hotel, but home ties held.

"We'd rather stay in Cleveland," they said, "where we have our homes and families." They have lived here for twelve years, conducting in the three largest picture theaters of the city, where they have won enthusiastic admiration. All three are continually making new arrangements and orchestrations, and they do it cleverly, too.

"Outside engagements? Advertise in Music News? Why, we have more than we can do now," said Mr. Philip Spitalny. "We play afternoon and evening at the theaters and during lunch and dinner at the Statler Hotel." But the war makes people do all sorts of extra work, and so, somehow, H. L. Spitalny has found time to train a naval band. That band has been in every parade, given concerts, met trains, gone to football games and toured to Akron, Toledo, Youngstown, Pittsburgh and other cities all over Pennsylvania and Ohio. Everybody's heart goes out to the dear boys wherever they go, and credit is due to their conductor for his faultless training, especially since his services are given free of charge.

All three brothers are solo violinists, as is their father. The latter played in Russia under the baton of Tchaikowski. The brothers were trained in the Imperial Conservatory at Odessa, the eldest having the same teacher as Mischa Elman—Fedelman.

The influenza ban has deprived Cleveland of several interesting musical events, among them a Heifetz concert and a musicale featuring Signor Martinelli and Miss Ruth Miller. The Fortnightly Club was to have enjoyed hearing Caroline Hudson Alexander, and Nikolai Sokoloff was to have led the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the Grays' Armory, but will probably not succeed in doing so until during December.

November 5 saw the opening of the Cass School of Music, Elocution and Dancing. These arts will be combined in some interesting ways, as soon as opportunity permits, in the production of theatrical programs. Miss A. Matinee recitals will take place every six weeks at the school, located at Sixty-ninth on Euclid Avenue.

The accompanying picture is a new one of the thoroughly satisfying young singer, Ethel Edith Jones.

Miss Jones, who is a member of the faculty of the Columbia School of Music, has appeared during the last few years on numerous occasions at Waukegan and has become so popular there that on repeated requests she has organized a Glee Club and besides conducting that organization will spend one day out of each week in private teaching in that city.

ETHEL EDITH JONES

She has been re-engaged as soloist at the Barry Avenue Unity Church, was soloist recently before the Irish Fellowship Club at the Sherman House and is to fulfill an engagement in St. Louis as soon as the question of public health makes it advisable to determine upon a date.

She is booked also for an eastern concert tour immediately after the holidays.

Elias Breeskin at Grand Rapids

It is an interesting fact that the great violinists of the past few years have been Russians and also that the most of these violin virtuosos have been pupils of the great teacher, Leopold Auer.

Elias Breeskin, who gave a most delightful recital Friday afternoon at the St. Cecilia Society, is a young Russian violinist. He does not come from the Auer school, however, having received his training at the Imperial Conservatory in Russia, in this country having been a pupil of Franz Kneisel.

Mr. Breeskin is one of the most promising of the young violinists who have appeared here in some time and, without doubt, has a great future before him. He has a superbly big tone full of warmth and resonance. His playing is characterized by vigor and rhythm and at times by brilliancy, his interpretations being those of the intellectual artist, who is also endowed with real musical feeling. Mr. Breeskin's program was of a serious nature, the big number being the Concerto in D Minor by Wieniawski, in which he showed himself to be master of his instrument, both technically and artistically. Other numbers were Largo (Friedman-Bach), Preludium and Allegro (Paganine-Kreisler), Introduction and Humoresque (d'Ambrosio), "Chanson Meditation" (Cottenet), "Chorus of the Dervishes" (Beethoven-Auer), which the artist was forced to repeat; "Zapateado" (Sarasate), "Ave Maria" (Schubert-Wilhelm) and "Souvenir de Moscow" (Wieniawski). As encores Mr. Breeskin played "Serenade Espagnole" (Chaninade), which was beautifully played, and the familiar "Liebesfreul" (Kreisler).

It is not often that one has the pleasure of listening to such artistic accompaniments as were those of Isaac Van Grove, who played with Mr. Breeskin, and it is not often that the accompanist receives the honor due him for his work, for the public does not realize that it takes just as much of an artist to play the piano parts, which are often tremendously difficult, and that it is just as much of an art to be a successful accompanist as a soloist. Mr. Van Grove's accompaniments were delightful, never intruding, admirably supporting and always in sympathy with the violin.—E. M. D. in Grand Rapids Herald, October 20, 1918.

A National Song Demonstration

New York, Nov. 2.—Plans for a national "Victory Sing" on the afternoon of Thanksgiving day, when all Americans will be asked to join in singing the same patriotic songs at 4 o'clock, eastern time, were completed here today by the National Council of Women. The council stated that 7,000,000 American women are interested in the project.

Programs will be sent to state, community, and war camp leaders so that the same songs will be sung throughout the country. All theatre managers in the United States will also be asked to urge their audiences to sing the national anthem at 4 o'clock.

The demonstration is being arranged under the direction of Mrs. Philip North Moore of St. Louis, president of the council, assisted by the National Federation of Music Clubs, the National Association of Music Teachers, and the National Supervisors' association.—Chicago Tribune.

Harriet L. V. Hebert in Montana

Miss Harriet Hebert, Montana born and Helena reared, has recently returned from vocal study in Chicago and last evening afforded her friends and the musical devotees of Helena an opportunity of hearing her in recital at the Unitarian church. Miss Hebert, while in Helena, was a pupil of Mrs. Ralph Kaufman, who with Miss Esther Snyker, coloratura soprano, assisted in the recital.

Miss Hebert's voice is a powerful contralto and with her splendid physique and attractive stage presence should fit her for a foremost place in opera or oratorio.—Helena Daily Independent.

A rare musical treat was given those who were fortunate enough to hear Miss Harriet L. V. Hebert in vocal recital on last Monday evening at the Unitarian church. Miss Hebert has recently returned from two years of study in Chicago, where her work has received many very favorable criticisms from the musical critics of that city, who predict a brilliant future for her in her chosen work.

Miss Hebert has a rich contralto voice of wonderful range and quality, which with her clear enunciation, vivacious and engaging stage presence and graciousness of manner made this one of the most finished and artistic recitals ever given in the city. The group of French songs quite charmed the audience, which was composed of all the music lovers of Helena and the many friends of Miss Hebert who have known her since childhood. The concluding numbers of the well chosen program were the Indian songs rendered in costume and were enthusiastically received and appreciated.—Montana Record-Herald.

Frederica Gerhardt Downing

From Chicago Newspaper Comments.

A recital by Mrs. Frederica Gerhardt Downing left, it may be conjectured, pleasurable memories with those who harkened to it. Her voice is a contralto of more than ordinary richness, a voice that has been admirably trained and therefore is admirably handled. It is strange that voices of this kind are becoming scarcer every year; now there are few such voices.—Felix Borowski in Chicago Herald.

Her voice is of a more than usually attractive quality, of wide range and well trained. Mrs. Downing had solved all the technical problems of the difficult bravura aria by Handel, with which the program began. It is by no means simple to sing such a work in the easy, fluent, unbreathless manner which she had at her command.—Edward Moore in Chicago Journal.

The possessor of a rich contralto voice would naturally have a correspondingly vivid personality. At least one would expect this to be the case, and expectation is realized in Frederica Gerhardt Downing. A striking, almost Spanish, type is hers both in voice and appearance. And with it there is an openhearted exuberance that translates itself, quite readily, into a certain magnetic quality, commonly designated as temperament.—Henrietta Weber in Herald and Examiner.

No Cause to Feel Discouraged

No matter how discouraging conditions may appear at times, there is never any reason either to feel downhearted nor to become hysterical. Just as people who are easily frightened contract influenza quicker than those who possess more fortitude, so will an inclination to become easily discouraged prevent people from accomplishing much that is impossible for them to do when in a hysterical condition. The cool head and the stout heart will always win out in the end. And we do not know of any better remedy for downheartedness than preparation for the future. Let us all think calmly, take things philosophically and accomplish as much as we possibly can during these days of temporary and enforced curtailing of activity.—Pacific Coast Musician.

Morgan Kingston

Ravinia Press Comments.

Lamore du tre Re—Another moment of exaltation was the climax which Musio and Kingston reached by sure dramatic instinct and superb singing in their great love scene.—Chicago Examiner.

The Avito of Mr. Kingston was touched with a warmth of vocalism and an intensity of poetic feeling.—Chicago Daily News.

Mr. Morgan Kingston was sufficiently voracious in what might roughly be called the devouring scene, making it indeed his scene, protesting so musically and touchingly against the nunnery and in behalf of his passion that one could scarcely blame the fickle Fiord for being swept away by such a torrent of tactile and auditory impressions.—Chicago Tribune.

A Criticism

In commenting on the Musical Program of the I. L. A. meeting in Chicago, The Platform had this to say:

You have read about the war. You have thought about the war—and talked about it. You have cheered the boys who left your town to serve Uncle Sam.

Now you are going to see the war—as clearly as if you were over there yourself. You are going to understand America's part in the war, as no amount of reading, thinking, talking or cheering can possibly make you understand it!

"America's Answer" takes you right into the heart of the world conflict, and shows you how these American boys, we are so proud of, are helping to wipe out the cruel canker that is eating into the vitals of mankind.

The war becomes a real issue—the "official reports" in the newspapers are suddenly translated into actions that lift you bodily from your seat and make you cheer yourself hoarse.

peared upon the program as singers was the one word 'inadequate.' There were some beautiful voices, good taste in interpretation and good judgment in selections. But you felt that many of the singers were not 'large' enough for public performances. They suggested rather the intimate family circle and the music of the fireside or chamber concerts.

"In the eternal fitness of things a voice must be as large as the hall in which it is heard and it is that feeling of adequacy that makes such an honest foundation for the appreciation of musical and other vocal efforts."

Things at Home

Things at home are all right, despite the contrary impression that an insidious German propaganda is trying to create. The voluntary rationing that our people took upon themselves last year has produced such good results that the meatless and wheatless days are going to be done away with in part. Sugar may be a bit scarce, but the old molasses jar is doing its duty like the good patriot that it is, while the maple trees of Vermont and points adjacent have dripped most loyally this year.

So much for the grub the home folks are getting. We needn't worry about them; they're not worrying about themselves. True, the old man may be a bit sore because Dr. Garfield has requested him not to crank up the fliv on Sundays and take Ma and Aunt Bessie over to call on the relatives at Scott's Swamp, but it will do him good to walk for a change, or to plant the tulip bulbs for next spring. Besides, it will save gasoline for the very necessary business of bringing extra ammunition up to the line.

What with the country clubs closed up and other conserving measures taken, there will be coal enough to go round this winter, and none of us need worry for fear that the folks may freeze. And as for the way they feel about this here war—Jeerosh! just watch how they're eating up the six billions of the Fourth Liberty Loan.—Stars and Stripes (published in France), October 11.

Who Kicked Mr. Lange?

If William F. Lange hadn't bent over to pick up his French horn—but that's getting the wrong end first. Mr. Lange was born in Germany.

Mr. Lange until last night played the fourth French horn in the Chicago Grand Opera Orchestra. News came of Austria's surrender. Everybody else in the orchestra almost went crazy with joy, but Mr. Lange said nothing. He just seemed to lack breath to blow.

It was rehearsal time, and the orchestra was at the Auditorium Theater. Conductor Charlier, who is French, suggested the Italian anthem. It went big, every horn player but Mr. Lange blowing to the limit.

Romeo Carletti, playing the third French horn, got suspicious of Mr. Lange. About that time the director called for the British anthem. It was a grand success. The French national air followed. But Romeo Carletti thought Mr. Lange was growing weaker. The blower of the third horn could hardly hear the fourth horn at all.

Then came "The Star Spangled Banner." Mr. Lange said afterward it all was because he was very sick. Anyway, the fourth French horn started sagging toward the floor and Mr. Lange—with everybody else red in the face from blowing or grinding away on the strings or pounding something, out of sheer joy—Mr. Lange got quieter and was doing less all the time—finally nothing!

As stated, if Mr. Lange had not stooped to pick up that fourth French horn it might have been all right—but he did.

Nobody would tell last night who kicked him, but nevertheless he was arrested and marked "hold for the government," and Mr. Campanini and M. Charlier and Herbert Johnson, business manager, announced that he, Mr. Lange, was through with the orchestra.

Mr. Lange blew too weak—and then, he bent over.—Chicago Tribune, November 5.

Cleveland Bohnet

Mr. Cleveland Bohnet, an excellent pianist, had been secured as soloist for the concert, and with his admirable rendition of Liszt's "Hungarian Fantasia" made a most favorable impression upon his audience.—Germania Herald.

---

The soloist of the concert was Cleveland Bohnet. He played Liszt's "Hungarian Fantasia" with commendable bravura. He possesses ample strength and has a good finger technic.

Mr. Bohnet's tone and touch are good and his performance of this difficult work showed him to be a musician of no small attainments. He was generously applauded and responded with an encore.

MUSIC IN PITTSBURGH

At a recent meeting of the Congress of Women's Clubs a special music committee was appointed to interest all women's clubs in this district in the series of orchestral concerts to be given in Pittsburgh by the Philadelphia Orchestra during the fall and winter season. The net proceeds of these concerts will be donated to the Pittsburgh Chapter, Red Cross, and the clubs are arranging to take blocks of seats for different members.

Five Monday night concerts will be given in Syria Mosque and five Tuesday matinees in the Nixon Theater, the latter having been arranged especially for the accommodation of out of town residents, and many club women in the Congress of Clubs residing in the suburban towns will take advantage of these matinees. The special committee appointed by Miss Helen Grimes, president, includes Mrs. M. Spiro, chairman; Mrs. Jerome Schaub, Mrs. John H. Bricker, Mrs. Edgar R. Shively, Mrs. Brabazon Rutherford and Mrs. Carl Fecheimer. The Congress of Clubs is a guarantor member of the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association, under whose auspices these concerts are given.

The club has dated its opening concert for November 19, in the Twentieth Century Club, having received reasonable assurance that by that time the health restrictions will permit the meeting to be held. It will be known as "Pittsburgh Day" and the program will consist of compositions by Pittsburgh musicians. The calendar announcing other dates has not yet appeared.

The Rialto

A change of front was effected by the management of this movie-music house. Erno Rapee is now conducting the symphony orchestra in place of Mr. Riesenfeld, who is leading the orchestral forces of the Rivoli, a twin sister of the Rialto. If movie houses have evolutionized in their entertainments by producing as good music as a concert hall offers it is to be deplored that the Second Rhapsody by Liszt and Caucasian Sketches by Ippolitoff should be assassinated by a mechanical conductor whose vocation is not at the baton. This applies to Mr. Rapee's conducting of both works. Mme. D'Espinoy sang "Serenade" (Gounod), with flute obligato by Maurice Borodkin. Gaston Dubois, cellist, played the "Elegie" (Gabriel Faure). The organist gave his usual solo. The program was for the week ending November 3.

Brief Notes of Recitals and Concerts

Guiomar Novaes, pianist, gave her first recital of the season on October 27 at the Aeolian Hall. On October 28 Harry Anderton gave his piano recital at Aeolian Hall in the afternoon; in the evening Augusta Cottlon appeared at Aeolian Hall in the same capacity. October 29, Maurice Dambois gave his recital at Aeolian Hall. November 1, debut of Allee Barbe, soprano, at Aeolian Hall. Mabel Garrison, soprano, gave a song recital on November 2 at Carnegie Hall; at Aeolian Hall Julia Claussen gave a song recital in the afternoon. On Sunday afternoon the Society of New York, with Walter Damrosch conductor, gave its second concert of the season at Aeolian Hall; in the evening the third special concert of the Societe des Concerts du Conservatoire de Paris at Carnegie Hall, with Alfred Cortol, pianist, as soloist.

The Death of Olympia De Luca

Friends of Guiseppe De Luca, the popular baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, have been grieved by the sad news that the Spanish influenza has claimed another victim, this time Mme. Olympia De Luca, the wife of the great baritone, who fell a victim of this plague. Those who knew her will remember that Mme. De Luca was one of the most congenial women to be met anywhere. The writer saw her last summer at Long Branch, happy, gay and enjoying the best of health. She was an ideal wife and a sweet companion, and in this hour of bereavement we tender sincere sympathy.

Raymond Wilson in Recital

It is still a misfortune to be an American artist, evidently. I have been overflowed with glorious announcements from the managers of the orchestral organizations, and in glancing over the names of soloists who are to appear with them I noted 99 per cent of the artists and musicians belonging to foreign countries—an exception was made in the presentation of one American artist. Our orchestral organizations are backed by American financiers and no stipulations are made that American artists should be presented as soloists, and yet we have a great number of them. We are tired and weary of listening continually to the Bauers and Gabrilowitchs. An American orchestral organization should present the best of American talent also; but how can this be expected when, with only one or two exceptions, they are directed by foreigners. In the violinistic world we have been flooded with a great number of Russians emanating mostly from the studio of Leopold Auer, whose presence in America is characterized by an outrageous overcharge of fees. In the pianistic world, if we have not had an exclusive list of German pianists, the majority of them have come with the technic taught to them in Berlin. What seems to be the trouble with our American musical agents that their efforts are spent only on the presentation of foreign artists? Where is the American booking agent who will go out and work steadily in behalf of a real American artist? The recitals at Aeolian Hall are not profitable to our native talents; therefore, it is the duty of our twenty-five orchestral organizations to admit first of all American artists, and next the highest and only the exceptional foreigners. France, which we adore not unjustly, gives priority first to its own sons, leaving only exceptions for extraordinary artists surging from foreign lands. These reflections came to my mind after listening to Raymond Wilson's piano recital at Aeolian Hall on October 31. For the second time in a brief period an American musician proved that he is equal to any of the importations. Such pianistic exhibitions as Mr. Wilson gave deserve recognition from our orchestral guarantors, and instead of presenting as soloist a Bauer, or a Gabrilowitch, artists such as Mr. Wilson should not be compelled to return to the pedagogical rooms, where he resumes teaching because his own compatriots will not bestow upon him the same tributes they usually bestow on European artists.

Only a few days previous to Mr. Wilson's recital I heard a woman (foreigner) who is being heralded as one of the greatest pianists of the present day, but those who were present to listen to Raymond Wilson's rendition of Sonata, Opus 27, No. 1, were just as pleased as if they had heard her in the same work. Mr. Wilson's technic is nearly perfect; his work is accurate and precise; his tone, while forceful and energetic, is at all times musical. He also has that liquid quality which makes one believe that the cadenzas are melting snows or falls of crystal water. No mannerism or affectations were exhibited in the Chopin group—Fantasie, F Minor; Mazurka, A Minor, and Waltz, A Flat Major. In none of the above was there an over-abundance of sentimentality—it was the subdued playing of a sane musician. He gave us also some novelties, and we welcomed them—Dohanyi's Intermezzo, F Minor, and Capriccio, B Minor. The balance of the program included "The Fountain" (Ravel), "Rigandon" (MacDowell), "May Night" (Palmgren) and Tchaikowsky-Pabst Paraphrase from Eugene Onegin. Mr. Wilson's return is most desirable. This was his second appearance in New York and the impressions left behind him entitled this American pianist to his proper channels.

Schumann-Heink, Aurore La Croix, Hypolito Lazaro and Arthur Middleton Sing for "Canned Music" Benefit

The above conspicuous artists appeared at Carnegie Hall on the evening of October 29 at a benefit for the Phonograph Record Recruiting Corps, which furnishes "canned music" to the men in service, under the patronage of the national committee of that organization. Others who contributed to the program were Francis Rogers, baritone; Margaret Farnham and Aurelio Giorni (in service now), pianist.

Samuel Gardner, Leading the Elshuco Trio, Appears in Recital at Aeolian Hall

I believe that young Samuel Gardner, a recent winner of the Pulitzer prize, is coming to his own. From the Chicago Symphony to violin recitalist in New York and lately devoted to compositions which brought him a prize, he has organized a trio with the purpose of offering the public chamber music, an art much neglected here. His associates are Wilem Willeke, cellist, and Richard Epstein, pianist. The largest audience assembled so far to listen to a concert came on October 31. The first number was Brahms' Trio in C minor, Opus 101, followed by Maurice Ravel's Trio in A minor. This composition is a beautiful, inspiring, melodious work. In theme it is oriental. The second movement is crispy and ultra modern. Samuel Gardner at his violin extracted tones intensely human. It was beautiful, clear and exact; his quality was large and practically dominated his colleagues, though they are also capable musicians. This trio should penetrate far into the musical corners of America. The reputation of Samuel Gardner is sufficient to make this organization a drawing card. The third number consisted of Schubert's Trio No. 1 in B flat major. This concert was one of the most interesting so far.

The Opening of the Season of the Symphony Society of New York

Music lovers welcomed the organization at its opening of the season on October 31 at the Carnegie Hall, with Leo Ornstein, pianist, as a substitute to Ossip Gabrilowitch, whose wife was ill and which prevented his arrival from Detroit. Walter Damrosch was again at the baton for his thirty-sixth season. There was a large gath-

Sue Harvard in Recital

The song recital recently given by Sue Harvard at Aeolian Hall clearly proved, first, that she is the possessor of good personality and voice, and, second, that the latter is badly produced.

Her singing suggested the desirability of more vocal training (different from what she has had, preferably) and some of her interpretations were unintelligent—notably Grieg.

Debut of Thelma Given

Thelma Given, a very beautiful as well as talented American violinist, made her debut this week at Carnegie Hall in the presence of one of the finest audiences assembled there. She was greeted with great enthusiasm. A detailed report will be printed in these columns next week.

THEATERS

"An Ideal Husband" at the Comedy

Masterpieces cannot be commented on in such limited space as a magazine of music permits, and with the era of economy imposed by the Government Oscar Wilde's comedy will suffer. Satire, sarcasm, truth, faults, defects, love, philosophy, corruption, stupidity, idiocy, all these factors prevailing in our society—more so applied to our privileged class—are depicted by a master technician, brilliant writer. Geniality in itself is Wilde's attribute. Wilde wrote his realistic comedy for his compatriots, the Englishmen, but all the races of the universe come in the indictment of the Englishman's pen. In the cast Beatrice Beckley must be mentioned as the first in the order of excellent acting. Cyril Harcourt and George Hayes, correct in their roles. Norman Trevor is far from being the Englishman, either in action or speech.

"Blanchette" at the French Theater

Eugene Brecut, the famous author of the "Red Robe," deviated from his problem plays into a simple story of "Blanchette," whose parents sent her to school, only to see her come back with the same face but with the manners changed. Blanchette takes the degree of teacher, but in vain does she wait to follow up her profession by a position which never comes. She finds her parents' home monotonous and the surroundings unpleasant. The father despairs because of his girl's unemployment, and the daughter, refusing to obey him, is compelled to leave the home, only to return later chastened. Charles Dullin, as the father, gave a perfect artistic interpretation and succeeded in making the role a piece of artistic acting and the part a characteristic role. Louis Jouvet was splendid as the flagman friend of the father. The part was so admirably acted that the balance of the cast, though capable, except Suzanne Bing as Blanchette, who was too affected, was overlooked.

"Sleeping Partners" at the Bijou

This is the second foreign comedy which is being played in New York. The original name of this farce is "Faisons un reve" (Let Us Dream), by the Parisian author-actor Sascha Guitry. I have not seen it in the original, but I suspect that the play has suffered in its translation, especially in the puzzling phrases. It is based on the school of French farces, a rendezvous of a married woman with an admirer who avoids disaster by clever French manipulations.

"Humpty-Dumpty," Lyceum

We are back again to the English novel—a secret marriage between a lord and a poor girl but pretty; an inheritance which causes confusion as to the rightful heir; the adopted son, Humpty-Dumpty, who thinks he is the real successor to a coronet; his love to Crissie happens to be real, and therefore the inevitable marriage. When Albert Mott (Humpty-Dumpty) becomes the lord he tires of the false life of privileged English society and soon returns to his old occupation of a hairdresser at Swashcombe-on-the-Sea. The comedy, by Horace Annesley Vadell, contains some good satire and some interesting lines about the mockery which binds the lordship of England. Otis Skinner is admirable as Albert Mott; Beryl Mercer is brilliant as the mother; Elisabeth Risdon is fascinating as Crissie; Ruth Rose, excellent as Nancy Delamothe, and the rest of the cast is quite capable. It may be said that the cast is superior to the play, but as a whole it provides an interesting hour. Charles Frohman is the producer.

Hun Propaganda Spread in Music Is Huge Menace

GAYLORD YOST in Indianapolis Star

[Editor's Note.—A careful reading of the list of musical artists compiled by Mr. Yost in the following fine article shows it to be very incomplete. Without making any additions or corrections to it we can still say that we believe in proportion and average it would remain the same were the entire list of names of artists of the world to be added to it.]

In the past four years the people of the civilized world and particularly those of America have learned to what menacing proportions the German people had succeeded in spreading German "kultur" propaganda. Few there are who fully realize how extensive and far-reaching this has been. It has extended to almost every field of human endeavor. Not alone to the great industrial field, but to the fine arts as well. At last we have found that the Germans have been chiefly boasters who have appropriated the ideas of other nations and given them to the world labeled "Made in Germany."

The whole German system of education is inflexible, or, in other words, of "blood and iron." Their national attitude is one of superiority pertaining to all things relative to humanity. Their egotism and inflexibility superimposed by their educational system accounts for the present war.

There is one phase of the German propaganda which has had practically no publicity, and it is to this that I desire to call the attention of the American people.

Before the war started 90 per cent of the music students going to Europe went to Germany to study. The cities of the German empire were supposed to afford a better atmosphere for the development of their respective talents. I went to Germany with this idea in mind and spent some time in Berlin as well as other German cities. Therefore, I had the opportunity of closely studying their systems and conditions. In Berlin one could hear more mediocre concerts than in any other city in the world. Their operatic productions could not compare with those of the New York Metropolitan or Chicago Grand Opera companies. Their symphony orchestras are well trained, but I am sure that there are at least a half dozen in America superior to any in Germany. I found that many of the pedagogs and artists residing there were not Germans, but artists from other countries, who were there because the German propaganda had focused the eyes of the world upon Germany as the musical center of the universe. I went to Germany because of this propaganda, but am thankful that I fell into the hands of Issay Barmas, a Russian Jew, then a resident of Berlin, with whom I studied.

Germans Music Lovers

It is true that the German people are music lovers and have maintained national schools for the development of the fine arts, all of which is excellent and highly commendable. However, what I am about to disclose will convince the unprejudiced mind that the German methods of teaching music do not produce great artists. In these methods we find the same inflexibility and egotism which marks their national life. The German mind is cold, pedantic, stolid, philosophic and rigid, lacking the imaginative and plastic qualities which are prerequisities of art. I readily admit that they are good drill masters. They know how to beat time and are exacting in accuracy. They are sticklers for tradition and mechanical perfection. They are faithful workers but are clumsy and seldom elegant.

From Germany has come some of the world's greatest composers, such as Bach, Beethoven, Brahms and Wagner. Kindly note that all of these are of past generations. Since Wagner we find no German composers of marked individuality or charm. The German may know how to write counterpoint and compose scholarly music; he may be a good drill master and an indefatigable worker; but he is not an executant because his national schooling and natural bent of mind are narrow and inelastic, therefore quite restricted in the broader sense.

And now I shall give a carefully prepared list of the world's greatest contemporary artists, showing the nationality of each, thus proving that Germany can claim but a very small per cent as her own and still she has boasted that there is only one school, only one musician with the true impulse—the German.

Pianists—Harold Bauer, English; Busoni, Italian; Godowsky, Russian Jew; Ganz, Swiss; D'Albert, Scotch; Paderewsky, Polish; Joseph Hoffmann, Russian; Gabrilowitsch, Russian Jew; Dohnanyi, Hungarian; DePachmann, Russian; Lhevinne, Russian Jew; Alexander Siloti, Russian; Moritz Rosenthal, Austrian Jew; Mark Hambourg, Russian Jew; X. Scharwenka, Polish; Frederic Lamond, Scotch; Kathrine Goodson, English.

Violinists—Ysaye, Belgian; Kreisler, Austrian Jew; Thibaud, French; Sauret, French; Marteau, French; Kubelik, Bohemian; Zimbalist, Russian Jew; Elman, Russian Jew; Heifetz, Russian Jew; Spalding, American; Maud Powell, American; Witek, Bohemian; Petchuikoff, Russian; Hubay, Hungarian; Cesar Thompson, Belgian; Musin, Belgian; Seveik, Bohemian; Auer, Hungarian Jew; Eddy Brown, American; Macmillen, American; Arthur Hartmann, Hungarian Jew; Kocian, Bohemian; Ernesco, Roumanian; Joan Manen, Spanish; John Dunn, English; Nachez, Spanish; Loeffler, French.

Cellists—Casals, Spanish; Jean Gerardy, Belgian; May Muckle, English.

Singers—Farrar, American; Tetrazzini, Italian; Mabel Garrison, American; Caruso, Italian; Galli-Curci, Italian; McCormack, Irish; Bonci, Italian; DeGorza, Spanish; Mary Garden, Scotch; Maggie Teyte, English; Stracciari, Italian; Charles W. Clark, American; Dalmores, French; Julia Culp, Dutch; Schumann-Heink, Bohemian; Julia Claussen, Swedish; Matzenauer, Hungarian; Sembrich, Polish; Melba, Australian; Rappold, American; Jean DeReszke, Polish; Emmy Destinn, Bohemian; Clara Butt, English; Alma Gluck, American; Christine Miller, American.

German artists:

Violinists—Willy Burmester and Willy Hess (both pupils of Joseph Joachim, Hungarian Jew).

Pianists — Arthur Schnabel, Wilhelm Backhaus, Risler (studied in France), Emil Sauer (studied in Russia; later with Liszt, Hungarian).

Singers—Frieda Hempel, Gadski, Karl Jorn.

The above list speaks for itself. In conclusion, several other salient points deserve our attention. Puccini, an Italian, stands out as probably the greatest operatic composer of this generation. Debussy, a Frenchman, is the most distinct creative genius of this age, having given to the world a new style of music. The great Paderewsky studied with Letchitisky, a Pole. Busoni was a pupil of Liszt, who was a Hungarian. Godowsky was practically self-taught, with the exception of a short period spent with Saint-Saens, the French composer and pianist. Joseph Joachim, who for so many years was at the head of the Hochschule in Berlin, was a Hungarian Jew and was succeeded, upon his death, by Henri Marteau, a Frenchman. Kreisler and Thibaud were schooled in France. Kubelik studied in his native land with Sevcik, a Bohemian. Practically all of the other distinguished artists named, except the German ones not otherwise indicated, studied, not in Germany, but in Russia, France, Italy, Belgium, Bohemia, Austria or America.

It is time for Americans to drop the fallacious idea of Germany's wonderful achievement and supremacy in musical art for, as I have shown, the facts point indisputably to a decided decadence in German pedagogic science and creative art. If the German mind and methods of musical instruction are so pre-eminent why have they not produced greater artists?

BIENNIAL NATIONAL CONTEST FOR YOUNG PROFESSIONALS ARRANGED BY THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS

The following announcement has been sent out:

In making this announcement of the third Biennial Contest for Young Professional Musicians to the members and friends of the National Federation of Music Clubs, we desire to call to your attention the success of the former contests and our belief in the value of the work, not only to the young musicians who are assisted in their work but to the federation as an organization, because the young musician who had advanced so far in proficiency as to merit a public appearance was presented to the public, and also the public had a most conclusive demonstration of the fact, not heretofore perfectly understood, that we have in AMERICA a high class of teachers and students, and that it is not necessary to go away from America to find the best of both.

To bring the work of these contests to its highest possible value it must be representative, not of a few large clubs but of every club and musical interest in the States.

The following conditions in the contests are presented by the Committee in Charge:

1. Contestants must be trained in America. A young artist coming to America under ten years of age, receiving all subsequent training here, would be eligible.

2. Contestants must be between 20 and 30 years of age.

3. Contestants must perform entirely without notes (words or music), before their state jury, and later before their district jury, at least three, or, if desired, more compositions.

4. Compositions must be chosen from the official lists compiled by the Committee, and printed in the circulars, and furnished by the State Chairman, or by the national chairman, Mrs. Yager.

5. The contestant, to be eligible, must join the Young Artists' Contest Department of the National Federation of Music Clubs by filling out application blank with full name and address, and inclosing the one dollar registration fee to the chairman, Mrs. L. E. Yager, 300 Forest avenue, Oak Park, Ill.

6. Contestants must arrange for their own expenses in the contests. To the winners in the final or national contest will be given a public appearance at the eleventh biennial festival, to be held in Peterboro, N. H., in June, 1919, at the home of our great American composer, Edward MacDowell.

7. Should there be, in large cities, a great number of contestants, a preliminary contest, similar to the state contest, will be arranged by a local committee, in the city. This contest is to precede the one under the direction of the state president. The three winners from this preliminary contest must enter the state contest.

8. Should there be only one contestant, the state chairman shall appoint three judges, who shall hear and properly grade the contestant for entrance into the district contest.

9. No contestant will be permitted to enter the district contest who has not previously been heard and judged by a jury in the state, report of which must be sent to the district chairman not later than January 1, 1919.

State contests must be held in each state between November 1, 1918, and January 1, 1919. Report of state chairman must be in the hands of national chairman before January 10, 1919.

District contests must be held in the ten districts between March 1 and May 1, 1919. Report of District chairman to be in the hands of the national chairman before May 10, 1919.

10. No winner in a former district contest may contest again unless prevented from an appearance in the festival by illness or death in the family.

State winners may enter the state contests again and proceed through the contests.

11. Contestants must enter their own state contests.

12. The committee reserves the right to reject any contestant, even though given the highest markings, if, in the opinion of the jury, the performance is not up to the required standard.

13. Contests may be open to the public.

14. A small admittance fee may be charged, and may be used to defray expenses of the contest.

Prizes of $150 each will be awarded to the winner in each of the three departments

LEGINSKA SAYS THERE ARE TWO ASPECTS OF MUSIC

"There seems to be two ways of looking at music and its interpretation, the intellectual or the emotional way," says Leginska, the remarkable little pianist, whose playing combines both of these qualities. "There are pianists who are philosophers, scientists, who view their art from the philosophic side, as though it were on a purely scientific basis, quite apart from feeling and emotion. They seem to take no interest in the emotional side; it does not enter into their art scheme. I take exactly the opposite view. To me, music is a language; each note, every phrase, carries a message, a meaning. To find and proclaim this meaning should, to my sense, be the aim of the interpreter. I try to find out what the piece means. Even as a little child I had this idea, that music meant something definite. The music made pictures for me; I could see them in my mind. Now I often write verses over the notes. They may not be much as poetry, but they express the picture or mood I find reflected in the music."

SPALDING COMPOSING

Albert Spalding, writing from a training camp on the Italian front, says, "What do you think I did last night? Actually did some more composing. A nice theme for orchestra. Not a large orchestra, in its present form, as the stress of military duties makes it impossible for me to devote as much time to this work as I would like to. It is not yet up to symphonic proportions — only strings, wood-winds and minimum brass. I might change it to a serenade in two or three movements and reserve the main theme for a full symphony, but with the limited amount of time at our disposal for recreation—and I must keep up my violin technic between times—it is difficult to put in black and white many of the fine themes that this war inspires."

Who knows but that out of this struggle might come the inspiration for a truly great symphonic poem or grand opera?

VICTORY!!

Out of the World War America comes triumphant as well as purified and rehabilitated.

Our President has shown that he has the necessary intelligence and skill to evolve a Great Ideal of World Democracy and, through patience, persistence and integrity, to impress this upon the whole World and, finally, to secure its acceptance.

Our Country at large—once the war was shown to be just and necessary—took hold of it with such ardor and such determination that nothing could withstand the onslaught, and the present unqualified Victory was a foregone conclusion from that memorable Good Friday of a year and a half ago, when war was definitely declared.

Everybody has been whole-hearted in service of every kind. The entire resources of the country and the people have been gladly offered for the cause.

And now America will have its abundant reward. Out of the War we have come rejuvenated, enthused and united as never before, and out of it, too, have come wonderful opportunities.

The musicians of the country have given very freely of service, time and money and also they have suffered more severely than almost any other factor which could be named in the temporary suspension of interest in and patronage of their work.

But now, they too will reap their just reward and the glory of the triumph and the upbuilding of all that is best will be celebrated in music advancement as in other noble and uplifting ways.

From Isaiah 40:31 we quote again:

"BUT THEY THAT WAIT UPON THE LORD SHALL RENEW THEIR STRENGTH; THEY SHALL MOUNT UP WITH WINGS AS EAGLES: THEY SHALL RUN AND NOT BE WEARY; AND THEY SHALL WALK AND NOT FAINT."

PASSING COMMENT

Music News is in constant receipt of letters in praise of its whole-hearted advocacy of all things American and its outspokenness along the other direction. The following is a sentence taken from a letter received last week:

"You have the honorable distinction of having been steadfastly and consistently 100 per cent American and pro-ally from the very beginning of the war until the present day. And all the more praise is due you for this because thereby you antagonized the pro-German element among the musicians of this country and, temporarily at least, injured your material interests. But I do not believe I am wrong in saying that this spirit on your part must have struck a deep chord of sympathy and appreciation on the part of every true, patriotic citizen and musician."

The Herald and Examiner is printing, day by day, a series of letters from Annemay Powell Spoor which are interesting and illuminative.

For instance, in one of the latest she tells of the status in Berlin of various singers known to America, and the reversal of relative importance of the different ones is significant to say the least.

Mme. Emmy Destinn is reported to be virtually a prisoner in her Berlin home and very much under a cloud because of her known animosity to the Germans.

Julia Culp, considered in America as a fine interpretative artist, but not at all a good singer, is quoted as absolutely the most favored of all singers in Germany and particularly popular in Berlin.

"Frieda Hempel is disliked by press and public alike," writes Miss Spoor. "Germans cannot understand why she cared or dared to stay in America when their fatherland was at war with us. Newspapers print cartoons of her."

But the most astonishing statement in the whole letter is that which declares that Johanna Gadski is "scarcely known" in Germany, although her husband is known to every one.

If this statement be literally true, and there is no reason to doubt it, we have but another proof of the great ease with which the Germans in days gone by could fool the American public. This public has been ready to swear, through the press-agenting to which it has been subjected, that Gadski has been one of the really great German singers for lo, these many years; and now, behold!

We find out, suddenly, that she was only an American-made singer, one whose fame and vogue were of the "manufactured for America" variety only.

Music News is in receipt of the following interesting matter relative to a form of musical activity which should be taken up unreservedly by all musicians. We indorse the movement without reserve:

The Happy Revival of Christmas Caroling

Picturesque Custom of Old Begun Again—Miles and Miles of Song Go Through the City on Christmas Eve, Spreading Good Cheer

"Four thousand joyous voices bore
The songs of praise from door to door;
Old songs of cheer and joy they sang
Until the very pavements rang."

In olden times, particularly in England, it was the custom of children and young people to sing carols, those joyous Christmas songs of praise and devotion, upon street corners, at the doorsteps of their friends, and in public halls in order to inspire within the hearts of their hearers the true meaning of the Christmas message.

"Now I get me up to work;
I pray the Lord I may not shirk,
And if I die before tonight
I pray my work may be all right."

—LIEUT. ROBERT M. LOVETT
(who died in France)

This beautiful custom is being revived and extended throughout the country, much to the satisfaction of all who believe in the ennobling qualities of the Yuletide spirit. The city of Detroit was the first to revive it in an organized and comprehensive way.

How often regret has been expressed at the gradual passing of the true Christmas spirit which showed evidence of slowly being swallowed up by materialism! Many have endeavored to devise ways of bringing back some of the former idealism into these strenuous days, but seldom have the ideas seemed practicable and in keeping with modern-day activity. All the greater, therefore, is our welcome to a movement which serves in a simple way to reawaken in us the original Christmas spirit and which is admirably suited to relieve the tension of our present "rapid-fire" existence.

Original Christmas Spirit Rekindled

Imagine sitting in your darkened living room on Christmas eve, with only the soft glow of candles placed in your window to beckon young sweet voices bringing to you joyous melodies to cheer your heart and to awaken in you fond memories of Yuletides of long ago. What happier Christmas eve spirit could be created? The carolers' good cheer creeps in to you through the windows. When they have finished and pass on to bear their message to your neighbor, a sense of calm pervades all, and there is awakened in you the true Christmas spirit, the desire to help the needy and to be of service to others less fortunate than you.

Simple Plan of Organizing Groups of Carolers

In Detroit last year there were 200 miles of song, or, if you take into consideration both sides of the streets, 400 miles of song, when the bands of children carried the Christmas message in their carols through the residential section. There is every reason why this beautiful custom should be duplicated everywhere in cities, towns and villages throughout the country. Because of its simplicity, its adoption is practicable in every community.

In November, 1916, a small committee in Detroit got together and mapped out a plan which comprised the formation of an organization with officers representing every denomination in the city, thus making it strictly non-sectarian. A campaign by mail was inaugurated to acquaint all ministers and Sunday school superintendents in the city with the aims and objects of the new organization and to solicit their active cooperation in the way of helping to provide carolers. Besides making people happier by singing for them, it was deemed most appropriate to raise funds on this occasion for charitable purposes, a feature which appealed strongly to the singing groups. So the carolers sang for the benefit of the helpless children of Detroit and took up a collection at each home before which they sang.

The two most concrete evidences of the rapid growth of the movement in Detroit are the facts that in 1916 two hundred and fifty carolers participated, as compared with four thousand in 1917, and that in 1916 the sum raised for charity amounted to $287 and in 1917 it totaled nearly $3,500.

A picturesque feature of these occasions is the placing of lighted candles in the windows of all homes as a sign that the occupants desire to have the carolers sing for them. Costumes of red cambric capes and caps, while not essential, add charm to the group.

Immediate Start Important

Although not many weeks remain before Christmas, there is ample time to make a good start on the movement this year, so that the plans will be in fine working order for an earlier start next year. If work is gotten under way immediately, fifteen to twenty-five groups of about ten carolers each, recruited from the churches, Sunday schools, Boy Scouts and Camp Fire Girls organizations, etc., can be trained and be ready to carry their cheery message in song on Christmas eve through the city. Two weeks of training the carolers need are of the greatest benefit to them. The learning of such beautiful and simple melodies inspires a love for them in the caroler equally as much as in their listeners. Music is so closely associated with Christmas and the Christmas spirit as to make this plan appeal to everyone.

The spark of love for music thus kindled in the children will readily, under proper guidance, increase to a flame in years to come, and so, with little work, from this carol-singing training a musical child can be created from which to develop the adult with a lifelong love for music. Surely if so small an effort can bring about such far-reaching and significant results, it is eminently worth while.

Beneficial Musical Atmosphere Created

To the musical element of every community the organization of such a plan will make a ready appeal, for they can see ahead the ultimate benefits to be derived from it. So much wholesome enjoyment can be provided for the entire community that those who help organize the carol singing will feel amply rewarded for their preliminary work. It will be found that the newspapers will willingly give publicity to such a beneficial civic movement, a type of co-operation which aids greatly in popularizing the idea. With a modeset start made this year, the participation of largely increased numbers the following year can be confidently expected. Once organized, such a movement is bound to grow rapidly because of its own compelling impetus.

The National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, 105 West Fortieth street, New York, will be glad to give added information to all those who are interested in instituting carol singing in their communities.

The Salvation Army has a minstrel troupe at one of its huts in France. While the minstrels rehearse for their performances they make a very good chorus for religious services. In the Salvation Army huts every Sunday night there is enthusiastic general singing where the boys sing because they feel like singing and enjoy themselves. Some one writing home from the front tells of one Sunday night service in a dugout where the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" was rendered with zest while over the dugout "scores of hostile shells were at the moment whistling and around which shrapnel was falling, which would have made a case-hardened undertaker's assistant grin. Detonations of bursting shells may have made the tempo a little ragged and may have accounted for the fact that two different keys were struggling valiantly for recognition, but there was nothing doubtful or doleful about the spirit with which the song was sung."

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY

A faculty concert of exceptional value was given last Friday evening at the Northwestern University School of Music by the Northwestern Trio, the personnel including Ame Oldberg, Lewis Randolph Blackman and Day Williams, all artists of distinguished standing. The program was made up of the Cesar Franck Sonata for Violin and Piano and the Schubert Trio, Opus 99. The two numbers afforded a striking and pleasant contrast, the first abounding in modern and novel harmonies, wealth of tone color and nobility of conception; the second intensely Schubert, melodically conceived and welded together in almost child-like poetry.

The execution of the whole was fully consistent with the conceptions of both composers, revealing a versatility of insight on the part of the artists. The fineness of the ensemble showed not only the splendid caliber of these artists individually, but also the fact that they are thoroughly trained as ensemble players and well versed in the reading of chamber music.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

ANNUAL BENEFIT FESTIVAL OF THE CIVIC MUSIC ASSOCIATION

By the above pretentious name was made known the concert at Orchestra Hall last Tuesday evening which had for its best item the singing of several hundred children under direction of Herbert E. Hyde; for its second the community singing of the entire audience under the merry baton of Thomas J. Kelly; for its third the playing of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra under Eric De Lamarter, and for its last and least important item the solo singing of Miss Maggie Teyte, who chose to present only French arias, all very much of a color and all sung with such monotony of tone and expression as to make her work tiresome to the last degree even though her voice is a really pretty one.

Her best work was in "Knowest Thou the Land," from "Mignon," which she sung really very well, and her worst was in "The Last Rose of Summer," which she used for encore and which she sang as badly as it has ever been done in Chicago, probably, although one hesitates as to whether the greater blame for this should fall on Miss Teyte or on the orchestra, which gave her a very poor accompaniment indeed.

The singing of the children was delightful. There were voices from Armour Square, Davis Square, Christopher House, Hamilton Park, Hamlin Park, Jenner School, Lake Shore Park, Lane Technical High School, Mark White Square, Palmer Park, Seward Park, Sherman Park, and Fullerton Hall, and the teachers represented were Grace M. Norbeck, Marie Rueff Hofer, Dr. William Carver Williams, Anna McPherson, William Lester, Gretchen Ernst, Julian Worthington, and Louise St. John Westervelt.

This fine body of children and youths sang with immense sparkle and style as well as astonishing finesse and reflected infinite credit on their teachers as well as on Mr. Hyde, who directed with accuracy and skill.

The playing of the orchestra was splendid and Mr. De Lamarter seemed absolutely in the spirit of the Wolf-Ferrari "Secret of Suzanne" overture and the "Peer Gynt Suite" of Grieg, which were the chosen numbers.

Mr. Kelly is a definite and a very remarkable success in community singing, and every one who essays this work should have seen just how he accomplished his fine effects on Tuesday.

Not only has he splendid musical intelligence and acumen, but also he is well aware of the value of touches of human nature and bits of fun which attract and hold attention, and he knows how to apply them.

"If you cannot sing 'Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean,'" he said, "at least when you get to 'Three cheers for the red, white and blue' you can yell." And most certainly the audience did as he asked.

"It is said," he declared further, "that 'The Star Spangled Banner' is unsingable. That is all bosh, for 'The Watch on the Rhine' is just as freaky in intonation; it jumps about just as much and it runs just as high, and, besides," with a rare twinkle in his Irish eye, "'The Watch on the Rhine' has stopped."

NEVIN'S PATRIOTIC ANTHEM

The eminent critic, Mr. Albert Cotsworth, has expressed his appreciation of George B. Nevin's war-time anthem, "O Lord God to Whom Vengeance Belongeth" as follows:

Chicago, Ill., November 7, 1918.

My Dear Mr. Nevin:

I thank you for the anthem for war time and I shall put it on at one of our patriotic services. You have done something that was needed so aboundingly well that we give you gratitude and applause. It has the freshness of a young man glorying in his warrior's strength and the seer's eye which reads prophecy's fruition and far-reaching influences. You have done us all a distinct service.

With sincerest good wishes.

Yours very truly,

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

This anthem, which is dedicated to Mr. Nevin's personal friend, General Peyton C. March, chief of staff, U. S. A., will be sung in Washington, D. C., on the 24th in the Church of the Covenant. The celebrated choir of 100 voices is in charge of Sydney Lloyd Wrightson, who came from St. Paul's Cathedral, London, where he served under Dr. Stainer and later under Sir George Martin.

This anthem, issued by the Oliver Ditson Company, is receiving the warmest praises of the critics.

MORGAN KINGSTON AT RAVINIA

The record of Morgan Kingston at Ravinia during the opera season of the past summer was a notable one. This was his fourth year there and it resulted in greater successes even than before.

He sang the leading roles in nine different operas within the period of ten weeks, making in all twenty-four appearances, the last four of which were on four consecutive nights, this constituting a very distinct record, as well as a pronounced triumph for him.

KARL RECKZEH IN CHOPIN RECITAL

Karl Reckzeh of the faculty of the Chicago Musical College gave a recital of piano works of Chopin at Ziegfeld Theatre on last Saturday morning, thus affording proofs of his own fine musicianship and good pianistic ability as well as furnishing a program of distinct pedagogical value to the large audience present, which was composed very largely of students.

Mr. Reckzeh set himself a very difficult pianistic task in the choosing for his program of the G Minor Ballade, the D Flat Nocturne, the Sonata in B Minor and the entire set of Twelve Etudes, Opus 25.

This writer heard him only in the last group, but this was sufficient to prove his versatility as well as his definite knowledge of how the piano should be played.

These Twelve Etudes comprise in their progress every sort of technical difficulty as well as of musical charm, and to play them intelligently as well as effectively from the musical standpoint constitutes a fine test of ability.

Mr. Reckzeh showed himself the possessor of sufficient technic to hold mastery over every problem of scales, arpeggios, trills, octaves or whatever else Chopin chose to insert in these difficult numbers, and in the bringing out of the inner voices and the maintenance of the always present melody line he proved himself thoroughly a student of musical values.

The study in double thirds was done so well as to create a sensation and the D Flat Major and B Minor were also examples of skill, endurance and fine pianistic style.

The well known "Cello" Etude was played with a particularly glowing tone, and both the "Butterfly" and the "Revolutionary" found ample favor with the audience.

Mr. Reckzeh is noted for his ability as a conductor, having been in charge of the commencement concerts of the Chicago Musical College for a number of years, and his work as a teacher has also often been most favorably commented upon in these columns.

As a pianist he is not so well known, but with the ability to present so characteristic and so good a program as that of Saturday he should appear much more often.

THE KNUPFER STUDIOS

The Knupfer Studios announce a Children's Recital for Saturday, November 23.

On account of the large number of participants the program will be divided into three sections, the members of the Primary Grades to appear at 2 p. m., of the Intermediate Grades at 3, and of the advanced children's classes at 4.

Miss Myrtle Peterson, a professional pupil of Mr. Knupfer, has been invited to play before the Woman's Club of Lake Bluff on November 25.

The second term of the regular school year will commence November 18.

AT THE WARRINGTON

The people of Oak Park, as indeed of all the surrounding towns, should be proud of the possession of the Pyre Popular Players, and, by the same token, they should fill the Warrington Theater for nine performances every week.

And, of a truth, there was not only a goodly attendance on Monday evening to see "Under Arizona Skies," a western comedy drama, but also there was much enjoyment of it and a corresponding heartiness in the applause bestowed upon the work of the clever players comprising the company.

The play of this week is not only very carefully set and dressed, but it also provides an unusually good opportunity for every member of the cast. The excellence of the characterizations and of the performances are therefore so very nearly equal throughout as to make it possible to commend every one.

While the story of "Under Arizona Skies" is very simple and so obvious that every listener can tell by the middle of the first act exactly what will happen in the last one, it is yet couched in such nice diction and is so flavored with the western spirit and colored with the brightness and the bigness of the outdoor life of the ranch that it is interesting throughout and strongly appealing at many moments of its course.

To take the characters in the order of their appearance:

Karl L. Way, a sturdy, carefully poised player, finds in Steve Morton a strong part, and he plays it sincerely and well.

Kingsley Gordon, under whose direction the play was so skillfully produced, himself presented the part of Freckles, a goodhearted if somewhat "vacant" cow-puncher, and his co-worker on the ranch was Parson, so called because he could "swear louder and longer than any man in Arizona," played with the right touch and color by Robert Valentine.

Sheriff Hawkins, a splendid, if conventional, type, was given the exactly proper touch by Harry Castle, one of the absolute dependables of the company.

Charles L. Jones played Mendoza, who was very properly killed in the second act, and Cora King played the part of the Spanish woman Pepita, who, though not killed in the play, deserved richly that fate.

Miss King has great adaptability as well as routine, and plays every part with style and finish, and the same may very truthfully he said also of Jean Cooper, who has played many parts extremely well at the Warrington and who made of the part of Mrs. Cannon in this play a real and thoroughly intelligent character study.

Allen York, who in the last production of the Pyre Players (The House of Lies) appeared as a good-looking, well-dressed American youth and scored a fine success, was cast this time for the diametrically opposite part of Waughmega, "good Indian," although not a "dead one."

Mr. York made a fine study of this characteristic part, dressing it with great skill, walking and posing with effect, speaking with remarkable clarity and in good Indian imitation and rising to an emotional climax in the last act with full authority.

Bess Bennett as Elsie Randolph had a nice, appealing part and she played it in like manner—nice and appealing. Miss Bennett has fine taste in dress and an intuition in character drawing which always leads her straight to success.

CHICAGO CHAMBER MUSIC TRIO

The Chicago Chamber Music Trio completed, last Sunday afternoon, its first series of ensemble concerts and closed it with a creditable performance of a very good program. Although the rough edges are not all quite smoothed off, especially in the playing of the larger works, such as the Beethoven Trio, we will no doubt have much to look forward to in future concerts, for routine will certainly bring with it a high degree of finish. Closer attention to the delicate requirements of ensemble playing will be demanded, especially of the pianist, who is not at all times strictly attentive to the necessary welding together.

Another series of concerts has been promised us during January and February, to which we will all look forward with expectation and sincere wishes for success.

DEARBORN SCHOOL OF LYCEUM ARTS

The Dearborn School of Lyceum Arts gave a delightful recital to a large number of friends in their spacious studios last Sunday afternoon, Nov. 11, at 3 o'clock.

Mrs. Esther Gielow, soprano, and Miss Mildred Rodiger, contralto, sang the following numbers as duets: "The Passage Bird's Farewell" (Hildach), "Nearest and Dearest" a Tuscan folk song (Caracciolo), "Venetian Boat Song" (Blumenthal). They used as encore "Love's Old Sweet Song" in a duet arrangement with the contralto carrying the melody, while the soprano gave a lyric accompanying portion which proved very pleasing. The voices blended beautifully in the duets. The Tuscan folksong was given just the proper amount of coquetry and snap.

Mrs. Gielow is an artist pupil of Estelle Mandeville and shows unmistakably the thorough schooling which characterizes Mrs. Mandeville's teaching and the fine tone colors and shades which she gives to a voice as well as most artistic interpretation and clear enunciation of songs rendered. The soprano sang two groups of songs, the first containing "The Nightingale and the Rose" (De Koven), "Good Morning" (Lehmann), "Could My Songs with Birds Be Vying" (Hahn); "Ecstasy" (Rummel). All of these she sang with purity of tone and unmistakable charm. In the last number she gave a most perfect crescendo on the climax with an appeal in it.

Mrs. Gielow sang her second group in a most convincing manner. The dainty "My Mother Bids Me" (Haydn) and "One Fine Day" (Puccini).

She has just accepted an offer for chautauqua booking next summer.

Mildred Rodiger possesses the true contralto voice so rarely found and so frequently abused. She is one of the teachers of singing in the school and sang a very successful chautauqua season last summer.

The program was enriched by her group of songs which included "My Love Is a Muleteer" (Di Nogero), "Ishtar" (Spross), "Habanera" (Carmen). Each of these she gave to the audience with a directness, sincerity and rich flow of tones that won for her a hearty response. She has a commanding presence, and has made "Ishtar" an individual thing which makes a vivid impression upon the listeners.

The voices were ably supported by the piano, where Lillian Barr Johnson presided, giving most satisfying accompaniments during the entire program.

The young women were assisted by Virgil Huffman, a piano pupil of Mr. Albert Fox. He played exceedingly well his group, consisting of Humoresque (Dvorak), "Dancing Doll" (Poldini), "Black Butterflies" (Massenet), "Valse Caprice" (Newland).

The artistic surroundings added much to enjoyment of the affair, for Mrs. Mandeville knows the secret of soft coloring and warm hospitality and so success crowns her efforts.

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK SINGING AT THE TREASURY BUILDING IN WASHINGTON AT OPENING OF UNITED WAR WORK CAMPAIGN

Judging from the expression on Madame's face, she is singing "When the Boys Come Home." Over 8,000 listeners heard Mme. Schumann-Heink sing this and other songs. On the platform with her was Mrs. McAdoo, wife of the Secretary.

SCHUMANN-HEINK 'STARTS THINGS' FOR UNITED WAR WORK CAMPAIGN

"Sure, I'll come," was Madame Schumann-Heink's instant reply to the urgent request of a committee from the United War Work Campaign that the "Mother of the American Army" come down to Washington and lend her glorious voice and inspiring presence for the opening of their drive. For three days Madame put herself at the disposal of this drive and her services were in constant demand. She sang at a big mass meeting at the Liberty Hut and at a similar one on the steps of the treasury building. Then, having started the ball a-rolling sufficiently, she hied herself to sing for "her dear boys" at Camp Humphreys, Va., and at Camp Meigs, and last but not least at Quantico, Va., where the Marine Corps training camp is located. Here the great diva sang for her favorite "soldiers of the seas," thousands and thousands of them. "They are some boys—those marines—gee, great," was Mother Schumann-Heink's expressive verdict.

LUCIE LENOX STUDIOS

Frances Coates' programs so pleased the boys at Camp Custer, Battle Creek, this Fall that she has had two return engagements.

Last Sunday afternoon Miss Coates sang patriotic songs at the First Congregational Church, Oak Park. She also gave a program at the home of Mrs. Edwin Bolmer, Ossington avenue, Evanston, recently.

Margaret Neville and Frances Coates gave entertainments at Camp Dewey on Monday evening.

Mrs. Lenox will present Miss Coates in a costume recital at Recital Hall, 630 Fine Arts Building, November 30.

Geraldine Soares, who has just returned from a six months' entertaining tour in the camps of France, is again at the studio.

MARIE KERN-MULLEN

Marie Kern-Mullen, a Metropolitan Opera contralto, is a newcomer to Chicago and one eminently fitted to play a large part both in the world of teaching and in that of concertizing in Chicago and the Middle West.

One of her first public appearances in this city occurred last Sunday evening at St. James' Episcopal Church, where she scored a distinct success. Her studio is in the Auditorium Building, suite 63, and she is available for concerts, oratorios, recitals and private musicales.

This well known contralto has studied under eminent masters of Europe, has a rich voice of great volume, wide range and exquisite timbre and in the soulful interpretations of her art she is aided by a fine intelligence and an unerring musical and dramatic instinct, no less than a personality that is at once charming, persuasive and compelling. Her repertoire is very extensive, embracing both classic and modern song literature of France, Italy, Russia and Spain—special programs of American songs and folk songs of all nations. The versatility of her style makes her recital programs unique and of unusual interest.

Marie Kern-Mullen has appeared in "Orpheus" and "Martha" and her rendition of the "Dalila" Arias evoked great ovations in Europe.

Marie Kern-Mullen has toured with the former Boston Festival Quartet and last season with the New York Metropolitan Company on a transcontinental tour of one-hundred and sixty-two concerts in the United States and Canada.

MME. ELISE COLBRAN-MELIUS IN SONG RECITAL

Mme. Elise Colbran-Melius gave a song recital in the studio of her teacher, Mr. Whitney Tew, on last Tuesday evening which drew a capacity audience and thus proved her great popularity with her colleagues in study.

This popularity is easily understandable, for Mme. Melius has a charming personality as well as a beautiful voice, and she has added to these two assets also the force of definite and intelligent interpretation of a wide reach of songs.

On Tuesday night she presented three old Italian arias (Handel, Caldara and Carissimi), contralto range and followed this with the broadly dramatic "Farewell, Ye Hills" from Tschaikowsky's "Joan d'Arc" in mezzo range, and two groups of English, French and American songs, including Composers Henschel, Gounod, Buck, Allitsen, Goring Thomas, MacDowell, Nevin and Liza Lehmann.

Mme. Melius has very beautiful quality as well as richness and depth of tone and her range is also definitely well developed.

As a general criticism this writer would offer only the suggestion that most of her songs needed a little more movement and that frequently she allowed herself to be lax in rhythmic force and necessary accent.

This fault grows, no doubt, out of a concentration on tonal production which has its result, as stated above, in beautiful and at times luscious tone, but which would be enhanced in the opinion of this writer by a little more of sprightliness.

The Tschaikowsky number is a big thing even as in content it is pitiful in its appealing grief, and this quality Mme. Melius has sensed very fully and is able to project with accuracy.

The third group was particularly rich in solidity of tonal quality no less than in its religious appeal, inasmuch as it contained "Morning Hymn" (Henschel), an aria from "Ruth" (Gounod), "My Redeemer" (Buck), and "The Lord Is My Light" (Allitsen), all conspicuous examples of songs with breadth, body and substance.

Goring Thomas' "Summer Night," than which no more effective song has ever been written, opened the last group, which was followed by MacDowell's "Thy Beaming Eyes," which is not only a fine song in itself but which also afforded Mme. Melius the opportunity on which she rose to the most definite eloquence of the evening.

Nevin's "O, That We Two Were Maying" was scarcely less fine either as to content or in delivery, and Lehmann's "Cuckoo" closed the list with brightness and good effect.

GUIOMAR NOVAES WITH THE ORCHESTRA

The program of last week included, besides the popular playing of Guiomar Novaes, who chose the little used Fourth Concerto of Saint-Saens as her vehicle, a very charming Overture of Grieg, the C Major Symphony of Mozart, and the Scherzo Capriccioso of Dvorak under the baton of Eric De Lamarter and the "Rococco" Suite, Opus 27, by Louis Victor Saar, under his own direction.

This latter proved to be well written and exhilarating music.

Mr. De Lamarter, besides providing a splendid accompaniment (on Saturday night at least) for Miss Novaes, was particularly facile in the Dvorak number and very suave in his treatment of Mozart.

We have heard so much French and American music recently that a recurrence of Mozart on the Symphony programs came something as a novelty.

And, while it was true that its old time charm was still self-evident, it was equally and as emphatically true that it showed nothing of style or finish which we have not been getting from the work of writers other than of the old German school and its inclusion served, just as it should, to emphasize the fact that we are no longer dependent upon this school of music for the body of any program, but can omit it at pleasure, leaving the program still fresh and vital, or we can use it in moderation and thus prove not only its intrinsic worth but also the patent fact that it is no better than the works of less familiarity.

And it is this that the war has done for us in our relation to the music of Germany. It has completely emancipated us, and while we will continue always, probably, to rank the old German classics as fine music, we will never again consider them the essentials without which no program can be considered worth while.

Grieg, on this program, was distinctly fine and soothing; Saar was modern, forceful and interesting, and Dvorak was by far the best piece of style and color in the scheme of the evening, this leaving Mozart as the rather mild and childlike contrast—very sweet, very definite and satisfying in form, but by no meaens the corner stone of the program.

. . . . . .

Miss Novaes, whose solo appearance at the University of Chicago last season was a brilliant success and whose several announced Chicago appearances are awaited with keen interest, proved herself at the Symphony concert to be a pianist of rare gifts and attainments.

Her technic is so definitely good as to have become merely a routine asset and is never obtrusive, though always entirely ample to cover every demand.

Her tonal quality is very beautiful indeed. Few pianists can play so feathery and yet so clear a run as can she, and still fewer can bring out the full power of a grand piano without in the least giving the impression of forcing or harshness.

Her conception of the difficult Saint Saens work was definite and sane and her rendition scholarly and masterful.

AT THE WHITNEY TEW STUDIOS

No one could mistake the intent or the meaning of the monthly At Homes in the Whitney Tew Studios.

That they are for the purpose of presenting pupils in repertoire is sufficiently evident from the fact that at each such function there are heard many young artists and also many who are just trying their wings in public flight.

And that the events are also strictly informal and absolutely social in character is shown by the fact of the informality of seating, the visiting between numbers, the intense personal attention to each debutante and, over all, the fragrance of coffee and the cheerful click of silver and china as Mr. Tew's charming girls deftly and graciously offer refreshment toward the close of each such gathering.

On last Monday the occasion was particularly informal and, by the same token, it was distinctly fine in spirit.

There was a lot of music, and while the list of singers included several who had not before essayed any such trial as the appearance in the big Tew Studios before so many and such knowledgeous guests, each one did excellent work in his own style and degree and the totality of pleasure afforded was great.

Miss Harriet Cartwright, always a dependable accompanist, shared that field gracefully with Miss Levy, appearing also in solo group with full authority and fine effect, her numbers being the B flat Minor Scherzo (Chopin) and the crisply delicate "Nightingale" (arrangement by Liszt).

The debutantes (first appearance) were Ruth Carl and Pearl Wayne, each doing good work and winning liberal applause, the first in "Wood Pigeon" (Lehmann) and "The Crimson Petal" (Quilter) and the second in the bravely sounding "The Lord Is My Light" (Dudley Buck).

Mr. Tew has a most gracious and ingratiating way of introducing his pupils and in publicly commenting on their achievements, and in announcing the numbers to be sung by Miss Carl he told of the recent death of Liza Lehmann and made reference to her work and her personality in a very special way, which was made possible through the fact that he had been, in England, intimately associated with her professionally. He made the statement also that the four most characteristic and perhaps the best English composers of the present day are Elgar, Bantock, Quilter, and Cyril Scott.

Probably no one will dispute this classification. Mme. Colbran Melius, whose work in song recital on another evening is reviewed also in this issue of Music News, sang Dudley Buck's "My Redeemer and My Lord" with rich tone. John Alcott was authoritative in the big aria "She Alone Charmeth My Sadness" (Gounod) and repeated the fine impression made on another occasion in a Handel aria and the swinging "Marching Song" of Valerie White.

Miss McIntosh was tonally fine in Goring Thomas' "A Summer Night," although inclined to drag the movement, and Mrs. Jeanette Wright was heard to advantage in an aria from Mozart's "Magic Flute."

Miss Werra Schuette, the possessor of good style, showed that she has acquired the usual long range of the Tew pupils by singing "Bright Star of Night" (Spohr) in contralto key and the old stand-by coloratura aria "Lo, Here the Gentle Lark," and Mrs. Alcott performed a similar task with the contralto setting of the "Ave Maria" (Bach-Gounod) and the Micaela aria from "Carmen" (Bizet), a favorite with all lyric sopranos.

Mrs. Thorelius gave artistic interpretation to "Knowest Thou the Land" (Mignon), disclosing both voice and style in good proportion and effect, and Mlle. D'Oex, the possessor of unusual voice and always dependable in technic and reading, was heard in several of the finest of the show arias belonging to the coloratura repertoire.

RECITAL AT ST. JAMES

A short Sunday evening musicale was given under the most inspiring auspices of St. James' Church last Sunday evening. The soloists were Marie Kern-Mullen, contralto; Georgiana Macpherson, pianist, and Hugo Goodwin, organist and choirmaster of the church. The program, which is given below, was a short forty-five minutes in length, hardly more than a "curtain raiser," yet very perfect and complete, both in proportions and execution.

Second Legend ..... Bonnet
Mr. Goodwin
My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice ..... Saint-Saens
Mme. Kern-Mullen
Mignon's Song ..... Liszt
Miss Macpherson
Yesterday and Today ..... Spross
Lullaby ..... Scott
America, Arise ..... Just
Mme. Kern-Mullen
Marche Mignonne ..... Poldini
Humoresk ..... Tscherepnine
Polichinelli ..... Rachmaninoff
Miss Macpherson
Toccata in E ..... De Mereaux
Cortege ..... Debussy
Mr. Goodwin

Mr. Goodwin, with his customary reliability, gave a noteworthy reading of the Debussy Cortege in conclusion, one of the most impressive and colorful of modern organ compositions.

Mme. Kern-Mullen, recently with the Metropolitan Grand Opera Company, sang by special request the lovely Saint-Saens Aria from "Samson and Delilah," "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," and sang it with mature interpretation and full, deep tone. Her second group included two distinctive and interesting numbers, one a very odd and unusual Lullaby by that unusual and original composer, Cyril Scott, and the other, a modern patriotic song, "America, Arise," by the Chicago composer, Robert Just.

Miss Macpherson, a recent addition to Chicago's list of pianists, needed but a few minutes to distinguish herself as a thoroughly brilliant artist. Aided no doubt by the peculiarly wonderful acoustics of the church, her tone came out clear as a bell and her passage work precise and vigorous. The Tscherepnine "Humoresk" was especially piquant in style.

The choir will sing the Lutkin Te Deum in C, "Praise the Lord" (Dandegger) and "Ascription Gloria" (Foster).

WILBUR BEATTY AT Y. M. C. A. HOTEL

The Y. M. C. A. Hotel, situated at 822 Wabash avenue, at our very doors, is doing a wonderful work in furnishing good, clean and wholesome entertainment for their guests, which is characteristic of the work done by this organization. The world should never cease to thank the Y. M. C. A. for the very efficient work done in keeping up the spirits and morale of the men in the service.

At the hotel concerts are given every evening and on Saturday evening special pains is taken to furnish a good program. However, it may be stated that none of them rank with the "cabaret performances" which are sometimes given at other hotels and restaurants.

On Saturday evening, November 9, a recital was given by Wilbur Beatty. Mr. Beatty has a splendid voice, fine technical equipment and good stage presence.

His program consisted of the following: "Prologue" from Pagliacci (Leoncavallo), "Songs My Mother Taught Me" (Dvorak), "Elegie" (Massenet), "Stonecracker John" (Coates), "Ah Love but a Day" (Protheroe), "Banjo Song" (Homer), "Macushla" (MacMurrough), "For You Alone" "A Dream" (Bartlett), "Myself When Young" from the "Persian Garden" (Lehmann), "Invictus" (Huhn), "The Bass Viol" (Bohannon), "Mandalay" (Speaks), "Mother o' Mine" (Tours), "Danny Deever" (Damrosch), and "The Old Flag Never Touched the Ground" (Johnson).

These were all sung with a sincere and musicianly style, with much thought of the interpretative side.

Mr. Beatty has sung a number of times here and is an especial favorite.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

The following recital was given on November 2 by Earl Blair, pianist, and E. Warren K. Howe, basso, both of the American Conservatory faculty:

Menuet, E flat ..... Beethoven
Scherzo from Sonata, Op. 31, No. 3 ..... Beethoven
Rhapsodie, G minor ..... Brahms
Mr. Blair
Il lacerato spirito (Simon Boccanegra) ..... Verdi
Vulcan's Song (Philemon and Baucis) ..... Gounod
Mr. Howe
Nocturne, F sharp major ..... Chopin
Scherzo, B minor ..... Chopin
Mr. Blair
Shepherd, See Thy Horse's Foaming Mane ..... Korbay
Compensation (MS.) ..... Heniot Levy
When Childer Plays ..... Davies
The Eagle ..... Grant-Schaefer
Mr. Howe
Dance de Puck ..... Debussy
Pierrot (lento) ..... Cyril Scott
Lotus Land ..... Cyril Scott
Rhapsodie No. 11 ..... Liszt
Mr. Blair
(Mrs. Edward Beck at the piano)

Both artists distinguished themselves in some old favorites and some interesting modern numbers. Mr. Blair was especially good in the Chopin group and in the Debussy number. Tonal richness was lacking in the Scott pieces, though this was quite forgotten in the vigor and manly dash of the Liszt Rhapsodie.

Mr. Howe sang with his accustomed conviction and gallantry of style, including in his last group a manuscript song by Heniot Levy, "Compensation," somewhat outre in construction but sung with satisfying insight.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

HERBERT HYDE

To the efforts of Herbert Hyde, superintendent of the Civic Music Association, is probably due in large part the success of the annual benefit festival concert reviewed in another column of this paper. As has there been stated, the singing of the 600 children brought together from various community centers where choruses have been established was by far the most interesting feature of the program, and Mr. Hyde was instrumental in more ways than one in producing this enjoyment. His directing of the chorus displayed a peculiarly keen understanding of children's needs and a wise adaptability to their impulses. This insight was also brought into play in his very imaginative and clever orchestrations of the folk songs which they sang, taken from those of all nations, and at all times infused with distinct national color and a simplicity of effect entirely pleasing to a child's ear.

Two of the most striking songs were the two closing numbers by Chicago composers, "The Cuckoo Clock," by Grant-Schaefer, in which Mr. Hyde used (in his own words) "all the gingerbread in the orchestra," and Carpenter's "Khaki Sammy," in which it was evident that the children had been waiting for a chance to "let loose."

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Centralizing School—Miss Geraldine Soares, a pupil of William Owen of the Centralizing School, 20 East Jackson boulevard, is home from the front. She was the only entertainer of her class from Chicago. She will relate her experiences under the auspices of the Ex-Club at Centralizing Hall Thursday evening, November 21, at 8 o'clock.

THE SONG OF THE HOUR

"The Americans Come," by Fay Foster, is a victory song and will, without a doubt, become a classic.

One has only to read the beautiful poem by Elizabeth A. Wilbur to understand the inspiration it gave to the composer. Imagine after four long, tiring years of struggle on the part of France with her chief ally, England, bearing the brunt of the terrific onslaught and cruelty, of Prussian forty years' preparedness, being overrun, driven back, never giving up hope, holding on with a determination that at times seemed fanatic, true to all their ideals, not a murmur of reproach to each other, all fighting, fighting, at times anxiously looking towards the west to her old ally across the Atlantic, America, with her homogeneous hundred millions feeling the silent appeal across thousands of miles of ocean, herself unprepared for war, arose from her peaceful pursuits, speedily launched and willingly gave her finest to the great cause, the Salvation of Humanity and the making of the world Safe for Democracy. The impossible (?) was accomplished. Distance was not considered. It happened.

"The Americans Come!"

It is not possible for anyone to hear the words of this beautiful poem and not feel the true spirit of humanity and democracy. It grips the soul and, as some "service" men have said, "It makes you want to holler." We all have had that feeling some time in our lives. The house of J. Fischer & Bro. indeed have every reason to congratulate themselves that the composer, Fay Foster, well known to every American singer and who was the first to be inspired by the poem, turned over to them the publishing rights for "The Americans Come," a song that will steadily increase its hold on the public as only a good song will. Already it is being heard in France almost as much as it is here.

BACH CHORAL SOCIETY

The Bach Choral Society resumed its rehearsals on Monday, November 11, at the rehearsal room at St. James' parish house.

This society offers singular advantages to its members, through its prestige and its ambitions.

The Bach Choral Society has now in rehearsal a number of part-songs, and Bach's Passion music, according to St. John.

The vocal requirements are fair reading ability and at least a fair voice.

Through the adverse conditions of the season the rehearsals were temporarily discontinued, but now that they are about to recommence it is an extremely opportune time to join the organization.

The founder of the society was Mr. John W. Norton, now in service in the navy. His successor is Mr. Hugo Goodwin, the organist and choir director at St. James' Church.

No examinations are necessary for admission to the club. A few words with the director or secretary are sufficient. It is suggested that those contemplating joining the organization come directly to a rehearsal, coming, if possible, a few minutes early.

LEMUEL KILBY SINGS WITH EDISON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The feature of the Edison Symphony Orchestra Concert at Orchestra Hall on last Thursday evening was the singing of Lemuel Kilby, Chicago baritone, who made an altogether unprecedented success in his group of songs and was recalled again and again and even had to repeat a part of his encore number.

This chanced to be "Sammy," by Arthur Olaf Anderson, and, as usual, the audience found it very much alive and very much a proper song for the day as well as a work of distinct musical value.

Mr. Kilby's set numbers were "The Horn" (Flegier) and "The Floral Dance" (Moss), in both of which he disclosed voice of splendid quality and under fine control combined with a sense of interpretative values which made his readings glow with delightful color and contrast.

Mr. Kilby is a singer whose personality and whose musical ability always put him into prominence wherever he appears, but he has never done better work nor has he ever been better received than on last Thursday evening.

Accompanying is not the strongest point with the Edison Orchestra, but in this case the organization did fairly good work, showing considerable improvement over the last occasion.

The Edison Orchestra is a very large body of musicians, and while of especial eloquence when one remembers that it is largely made up of non-professionals, it yet should hardly be called Symphony Orchestra.

By a liberal use of drum and horn a curiously similar effect to brass band is produced and this resemblance is emphasized through the very free use of items which might just as well as not be used in a band.

Marches, quicksteps and brilliant arrangements of easily singable airs are played with great swing and effect, while conversely works of introspectivity and such as require finesse of musicianship are not played quite so well.

"Blue Jackets," a noisy march by Bennett, a serenade and a waltz movement by Drigo, and the waltz "Unrequieted Love" by Lincke (who, whatever else he may be, is surely a monotonous mimic of Strauss, the "Waltz King"), were the best played items, while the three dances from German's "Henry the Eighth" suite were also very well done and a Grieg overture was fair.

The real joy of the orchestral part of the program centered in "The Star Spangled Banner," "America," "Marching Through Georgia," "The Marseillaise," "Over There," "The Gang's All Here," and a-plenty of marches, musical comedy numbers and some other national airs which were unknown to the audience, strangely even that belonging to Canada seemingly being absolutely unfamiliar.

Morgan L. Eastman, the conductor, certainly showed himself a man of growing ability and one who will have to be reckoned with in any summing up of such forces in Chicago.

He is distinctly of the "prima donna" type of conductor and also he reminds one of the great John Philip Sousa in the eagerness with which he springs to the conductor's stand and adds an "extra" whenever he hears two people clapping their hands at one and the same time, but in spite of this he really has remarkable personality and much ability.

In conducting his orchestra, while, of course, no one would claim that he shows the possession of anything like the musicianship of Mr. De Lamarter, for instance, he certainly shows a lot more of originality and definiteness, while to compare him with either Mr. Dunham or Mr. Gunn, other young Chicago conductors, is futile inasmuch as he is greatly superior to either in interpretative ability and in style.

THE TRIAL OF SANTA CLAUS

For those who want something entirely new in the way of a Christmas bill we can recommend without reserve "The Trial of Santa Claus," an operetta, with music by J. S. Fearis and libretto by Laurene Highfield.

The usual religious element is left out this time and the story is told in brilliant, almost farcical style, resembling very much the "books" of Gilbert of "Gilbert and Sullivan" fame.

The music is in the same merry, carefree vein, and like everything emanating from the Fearis pen it is good music, while at the same time exactly apropos to the subject.

YEATMAN GRIFFITH

With this is shown a picture of Mr. and Mrs. Yeatman Griffith in their New York Studio, and also on our cover page today may be found a recent picture of Mr. Yeatman Griffith.

The studio of this talented couple in New York City has become one of the strongholds of music in that city as well as one of the most successful developments in pedagogy in the country.

Mr. Yeatman Griffith is known as a vocal teacher with no superiors anywhere and Mrs. Griffith is an accompanist and coach par excellence.

After a most successful career in this country Mr. Yeatman Griffith went abroad some years ago and very promptly stepped into success and eminence in London. His class in that city was made up of young artists from all parts of the world, including many from America.

At the beginning of the World War he removed to New York City and here there has followed him a clientele of artist singers which has not been surpassed in number or quality in any studio of Europe or America.

Among the Yeatman Griffith pupils there are established opera singers (as, for instance, Miss Florence Macbeth), and there are concert, church and oratorio singers without number and in a great many cases of national and even international reputations.

SPALDING OFFERED EUROPEAN TOUR

Albert Spalding, the famous violinist, now a lieutenant with the American Aviation Forces in Italy, has been offered a contract for another European tour after the completion of the war by Sig. Alfredo Carlotti, impresario of Milan, Italy. Mr. Spalding's last tour of the continent was in 1913 and included engagements in England, France, Italy, Germany, Austria, Holland, Belgium, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Russia and Africa. Since his enlistment, nearly a year and a half ago, he has canceled all professional engagements but has appeared a number of times at benefits for some worthy charity. Mr. Spalding has not decided yet if he will accept Signor Carlotti's offer or not before returning for his next American tour.

INTERNATIONAL CONCERT

During the excess of excitement incident to the premature peace news of Thursday, Cleofonte Campanini announced his intention of giving a popular concert program of an international aspect (confined to the nations of the entente allies as to soloists, of course) on Sunday afternoon, November 24, as a climax to the first week of the Chicago opera season at the Auditorium. Later developments have made him still more keen, and the Popular Concert International is continued in the schedule. The soloists will be Auguste Bouilliez, baritone, and Maria Claessens, mezzo-soprano, representing Belgium; Marcel Journet, basso, for France; Guido Ciccolini, tenor, and Virgilio Lazzari, basso, for Italy; Forrest Lamont, tenor, and Florence Macbeth, soprano, as American representatives; Dora Gibson, the English, and Vira Amazar, the Russian soprano. At the piano will be Marcel Charlier, the Belgian conductor, and Frank St. Leger, the assistant conductor of the Chicago opera staff, from Australia. The program, which is to begin at 3:30 in the afternoon, will be announced in detail next week.

BATON CLUB

The November dinner and business meeting of the Baton Club was held last Monday evening at the Central Y. M. C. A. In the absence of George Schuler, president, E. O. Robinson occupied the chair. After reports of the standing committees, Mr. Fitzsimmons of Lyon & Healy's and Franklin E. Hathaway of the National Music Company were elected to membership.

Dr. Maclean, Mr. Gingrich and others briefly discussed the organization and maintenance of children's choirs.

A committee was appointed to express the sympathy of the club to President George Schuler on the death of his sister.

Harold B. Maryott, chairman of the program committee, announced that the next meeting of the club would be held at the Woodlawn Baptist Church Thursday evening, December 5. The choir of this church will sing the cantata "Harvest Tide," by Blair, under Mr. Maryott's direction, and Dr. Juan C. Maclean will conduct a group of choirs in a triple number. The entire program will be announced at a later date.

All directors and members of choirs are cordially invited to attend the club concerts. Directors contemplating membership should communicate with J. A. Gilbert, secretary, room 803, 417 South Dearborn street.

ANOTHER BIT OF CHAIN LIGHTNING WORK

Minnette Warren, who recently played a successful piano recital in New York city and has in her home town, St. Paul, the reputation of being one of the most versatile creatures alive, and whose various exploits have been told the readers of Music News from time to time, was asked when she was in Chicago recently for another "story" about herself.

"There is nothing brand new," she replied, "but I was just thinking today of a little episode which might be interesting to you," and then she proceeded to tell the following, which we have repeated, as nearly as possible in her own very positive but naive style.

"A year and a half ago," she said, "after a terrific auto accident in which I was badly hurt, the comedian, Varley, who was appearing in St. Paul, brought to our school a new and rather complicated 'act' that he wanted orchestrated and arranged immediately before he left town. Mother tried to turn the work over to a gentleman in the school who was accustomed to doing that sort of thing and knew what he was about, but he, like every other Twin City musician who had seen the plan for the affair (said Varley) turned it down. Mother said then that of course it was best for me to drop the matter, for if all the professionals had refused the work there must be some vital cause for it. But I was just recovering from my delicious few weeks in the hospital, nursing my fractured skull, and I thought that a few days at the lake, writing a vaudeville stunt, might be just the right sort of sport. Of course, I had never done any orchestrating before, so thought, too, that this might furnish ample opportunity for a good rehearsal, and as Varley was leaving soon anyway, I thought it safe perhaps and took my courage in my hands and told him that I would do it. Now, the reason every one shuddered so at the proposition is easily explained. Varley is a lightning-change artist and his new act consisted of a series of ridiculous impersonations. For instance, the orchestra started with 'The Irish Washerwoman,' and meantime Varley became a buxom, red-faced washerlady; then one verse of 'Oh where, oh where has my little dog gone?' and Varley bobbed up as the characteristic Deutscher, etc., etc. But the real joy started when at the close of the act the first violins played the 'Irish Washerwoman,' while the second fiddles struck up the German air. Those two kept going with their particular tunes, while the clarinet chimed in with another, and so on, and so on, till the entire orchestra played violently, but each instrument with an entirely different and conspicuous tune. 'And,' said good man Varley, 'they simply MUST harmonize. No discords, please.' So there was my little job.

"I had failed to obtain, the year before (though I had scoured the country o'er), the instrumentation book I desired, and had copied it completely, word for word, from a borrowed copy, so I had that to refer to. It was my only salvation, too, and I had my act all done in two days, and a month or so later, when Varley was in Portland, I was delighted to receive a flattering letter on the success of the new production, which, said the comedian, he had tried out before a large house, and it was exactly as he had planned."

Civic Music Fete Affords Delight

By Karleton Hackett

The people who were at Orchestra hall last evening, and there was a gratifyingly large number present, now know what the Civic Music association has been doing. If in the minds of those people, and they present a very intelligent outward appearance, there is any relation between cause and effect it will be easy today for the association to raise what money it needs to carry on its work. There is nothing can take the place of a practical demonstration, and they gave it last evening in full measure.

There were hundreds of little girls on the stage, too many to count, though I made a manful attempt, and they represented that heterogeneous mass which used to stagger us a few years ago, when we accidentally thought about the matter, and which we now know is emerging from this awful world's labor into the new-born race of Americans. The folk songs they sang and the joyous spirit in which they sang them touched something deep within us all—the hope of youth.

But it was not mere youthfulness, for they already felt something of the meaning of music. You could not call it "art," for there is in the child's mind nothing of the sophistication that the word suggests, but there was the instinctive feeling for rhythm and the pleasure of tone. Of course all the men and women who have been laboring with these children in the parks and playgrounds all over the city had their necessary part in helping them to the utterances of their feelings, but the instinct was there. It is the work of the Civic Music Association to make it possible to warm this instinct for music into active life instead of letting it shrivel up and die for want of air and sunlight.

Some of the songs were delightful and stirred such a chord of sympathy in the hearts of the audience that they had to be repeated, at which the children almost laughed aloud in their gratification. They gave real quality to the tone in a tender little bit like the Algerian lullaby, and then you should have heard the vim with which they sent John Carpenter's "Khaki Sammy" along. "Sammy" may not be the term officially approved by our boys over there, but they will have to make an exception for this song. One hearing proved that Mr. Carpenter has hit it again and right in the center of the bull's-eye. Of course they had to repeat it, and they did it in style with a ritard and a hold on the high tones of the climax and all the other fixings just like the grown-ups do.

Everybody applauded and then said something complimentary to his next-door neighbor, as if he had not realized what kind of thing these children are capable of doing—and perhaps these people had not known. However, if so, it was their own fault, since they have been told times enough. Maybe they will remember this time, at least for long enough to write out a check for the association. They are doing something that must be properly supported, and if they don't get it after last night then the de'il's in it.—Chicago Evening Post.

The French Band in Washington

One of the rarest of musical treats Washington was privileged to enjoy yesterday afternoon, when the Symphony Orchestra of the Conservatory of Paris, under the direction of Andre Messager, gave its first concert at Poli's Theatre, with the distinguished French pianist, Alfred Cortot, as soloist.

To greet these notable guests of the nation, who come to us under the auspices of the French government and the French high commission, a large and distinguished audience was gathered. It was made officially important by the prominence of the uniforms of the military diplomatic mission of our allies here and of our own army and navy officers.

High were one's hopes at hearing this foremost orchestra of Paris, and they were fully realized. M. Messager plays upon his orchestra as though he had the zephyrs at his command. There is no sense of instrumentation in the flow of this music. In tone of faultless purity, of amazing oneness, and pastel shades of color in its subtle graduations, this orchestra plays with a sinuous rhythm that charms through its every phase of musical utterance. And varied are the tone-pictures it evokes! But whether it is the absolute repose of exquisite pastorals or the mellow-toned vital life of the d'Indy scene, always is there felt a vibrant beauty of tone that answers to the will of the director.—Washington Post.

Professor Smith in the Middle West and in New England

The Worcester Community School of Religion has been fortunate enough to secure Professor H. Augustine Smith of Boston University. Professor Smith has had a unique experience in choir and chorus work. For sixteen years he was minister of music in the largest Congregational church west of New York City. There he evolved a quintet of vested choirs that became famous throughout the country. Professor Smith's work in Chicago was so effective that Boston University persuaded him to come east and give his time to the development of choruses and choirs in connection with their community schools of religion. In addition he has charge of the singing at the University, where some 800 men in the student army training corps are getting drill at his hands. Professor Smith also had charge of the music and pageantry at a Boston Common Christmas celebration last year, and at Malden, Lowell, Braintree and Tremont Temple.

During the past summer Professor Smith covered some 7,000 miles of conventions, chautauquas and summer schools. During the next twelve months he will reach some 29 state and provincial gatherings all the way from New Hampshire to California. Just now he is at work on an Armenian Syrian Pageant which is to be circulated throughout the country to aid in the $30,000,000 war relief drive for these stricken people.

Professor Smith's work in Worcester will consist of a series of lectures intended for the instruction and inspiration of school people, dramatists, ministers, musicians and civic workers. The lectures are as follows:

1. The church, the nation and the new day in song.
2. A study of comparative religions in hymns.
3. The redemption of congregational singing through a virile, living, hymn book.
4. The power of music to tell its own story, illustrated from public school music.
5. A clinic in pageantry. Studies in symbolism, costuming, lighting, etc.
6. War's victories through community singing.
7. Adult and children's choirs in church and community life.
8. The ministry of art—modern art pictures and some interpretations.
9. Building a Worcester song book for home, community, union worship.

—Worcester Telegram, Oct. 11.

Helen Boyle Haworth

Following is some newspaper comment on the work of Helen Boyle Haworth, contralto:

Helen Haworth's rendition of Sullivan's "He Is Risen," added another leaf to the laurels this young woman wears. Her tone, enunciation and expression were all that the most critical could ask for and the number was distinctly well sung.—Arizona Republican (Phoenix, Ariz.).

Helen Haworth, contralto, sang two groups of songs in the exquisite way that has so endeared her to the music loving people of Phoenix.—Arizona Gazette (Phoenix, Ariz.).

With truth it can be said that to the Saint-Saens cantabile from "Samson and Delilah" she gave the most important rendering. It was one of the most interesting bits of the afternoon, and was wonderfully well read.—Arizona Gazette (Phoenix Ariz.).

Assisting was Helen Haworth, a young woman who has attained things in the world of musical study, whose contralto voice is pleasant to the ear and whose phrasing and interesting interpretations are a source of great joy to her friends.—Arizona Gazette (Phoenix, Ariz.).

Helen Haworth of Phoenix, Ariz., who is now making a tour of the coast cities, sang before a crowded chamber of the young men's institute last Thursday evening. She is a typical Irish beauty and won the admiration of every one present. She possesses rare ability as a vocalist.—The Tidings (Los Angeles, Cal.).

Helen Haworth is the fortunate possessor of a very beautiful contralto voice of considerable range and particularly pleasing quality—rich and sympathetic.—The Republican (Phoenix, Ariz.).

Florence Macbeth Writes a Letter

Among the prize letters written to the Herald and Examiner in response to the question, "What shall be done with the kaiser?" is the following from Miss Florence Macbeth of the opera:

"What shall be done with the kaiser?" He should be tried by a jury of his peers.

In these days of enlightenment and universal striving toward liberty of mankind, no criminal, even though he wears a crown, should escape trial and punishment.

The kaiser stands today as the world's arch criminal. He planned the destruction of millions of lives. For years he has carefully calculated every obstacle which would gain for him a world empire, and to attain which he staked the lives of his people. He has lost.

No punishment that can be imposed upon him will alleviate the sufferings of the thousands upon thousands of mothers, wives, brothers and sisters, or will stop the torrents of tears shed because of his crime. But when it is meted out it should be of such nature as to warn all future rulers of the fate that will befall them when liberty awakes and tyranny is doomed.

GEORGIA HALL QUICK, BURTON THATCHER, AND LETA MURDOCK AT BIRCHWOOD MORNING MUSICAL

On Monday evening, November 4, the Birchwood Morning Musical presented Georgia Hall Quick, pianist; Burton Thatcher, baritone, and Leta Murdock, violinist for their "Evening Guest Program," at the Rogers Park Woman's Club House.

For her first number Mrs. Quick played the beautiful "Eroica Sonata" (MacDowell). This music is so playable; there is charm and interest in all of the lines, and Mrs. Quick brought them to the fore in graceful decision and with much poise and elegance of delivery.

She has a splendid technical equipment, and artistic achievements are, and should be, hers in large measure.

Her second number was a Chopin group, consisting of Impromptu, F sharp; Etude, Opus 25, No. 1 (Aeolian Harp); two Preludes, No. 21 and 22, and Ballade, A flat. Her last group comprised the "Tambourine" (Raff), "On the Wings of Song" (Mendelssohn-Liszt), and "Militaire March" (Schubert-Tausig). These were all played with the same fine style and finish that she manifested in the Sonata.

Mrs. Quick received much applause and surely deserves a warm greeting when she visits Chicago again.

Mr. Thatcher sang "The Haunt of the Witches" (Cassard), "Lunge dal Caro Bene" (Secchi), "Have You Seen but a Whyte Lily Grow" (old English), and "Pensee d'Autouine" (Massenet). This was quite a widely varied group, all were admirably suited to his voice, and Mr. Thatcher sang them with much finesse and his usual fine style and splendid interpretation.

Miss Leta Murdock chose for her group "Sicilienne et Rigaudon" (Francoeur-Kreisler), Poem (Zedenko Fibich), "La Capricieuse" (Elgar), and "Spinning Song" (Popper). Miss Murdock has abundant technic, and she plays with a style that is both exhilarating and fascinating.

Miss Mora Murdock and Mrs. Malcolm Imbrie gave excellent support at the piano.

ELEANORE CAPPS-HOSTLER.

HOW TO SING

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS

Given a well-balanced mind, a healthy body, and a voice, how can one learn to sing?

Sound is produced by a column of air directed against the vocal cords, causing them to vibrate. This vibration, resounding in all parts of the head resonators, is tone. Now, where doees the power come from that propels this column of air? Not from the throat, although there are the muscles which contract or relax the vocal cords; and certainly not from the muscles in the walls of the abdomen. Immediately below the lungs there is a muscle stretched across the body that compresses the lungs and drives the air against the vocal cords. That is the first principle of singing—that the diaphragm is the source of power. The ability to sustain a tone and shade it, and to do all this with ease, depends on a strong, well-controlled diaphragmatic action.

But to produce a tone with living colors in it, more than muscular action is involved; thinking and feeling are absolutely necessary. We study a song. Its words summon up conceptions in our mind. Its rhythm makes some similar impression on us. When we go to sing it there is a strong, clear thought in our minds—in other words, a vivid picture. Now, how can we convey to a listener our thought with all its meaning? How can we paint for him the picture which we see? The way is simple and yet subtle. Just this—be wholly possessed by the sentiment, and then, with every organ free and responsive, allow that sentiment to go out in the tones. The mind gives the impulse, the diaphragm furnishes the power, the throat is an open air passage; tongue, jaw and lips become active only as agents of articulation, and the tones emerge round, rich and full of life. To think clearly, feel intensely, and have every organ responsive—this is the second principle of singing.

When a singer has grasped the significance of these two principles—that is, when his diaphragm has begun to act in response to clear, imaginative thinking—then his task is to acquire a beautiful tone quality, to sing with ease, and, lastly, to develop power. The most important of these is the acquiring of a beautiful tone.

What is a beautiful tone? How is it made? What are its characteristics? Two things must be recognized as not beautiful; the one is the "white" tone, and the other is its opposite, the "throaty" tone. In both, the immediate trouble is with the focusing of the air column. In the case of the former it is not focused at all, and the breath escapes straight out of a wide-open mouth. Thus the cavities of the head are not called into play as resonators, and so the tone, lacking in resonance, is blatant. It is called a white tone because it is without tone-color. It is a yell rather than a musical sound. It is certainly not beautiful.

On the other hand, in the throaty tone the column of air is focused not far enough forward—and the result is that the tone resounds through the head, but never gets out. It sounds muffled. It lacks in brightness and in distinctness. Let these two kinds of tones be avoided consistently.

They strain the whole constitution; they are injurious to the voice, and they are not beautiful.

To make a beautiful tone the column of air must be focused well forward, the exact point depending on the quality of the vowel sound. In the singer's mind there must be a mental picture of each tone as he is about to make it, and the lips must articulate the distinctive feature of each tone. No teacher can tell you just how to produce a beautiful tone. He can set forth a few principles—give helpful suggestions at each lesson—but beauty will come only with practice and experience.

Singing is a temple of sound supported on two great pillars; the one is diaphragmatic breathing, the other is clear thinking. Into the structure enters a manifold of work, romance, sorrow, love, longing and hope. Some parts of this temple are shrouded in shadow; mourners enter in. But from the higher places there fall rays of brightness and echoes of gladness. And the pinnacle of this temple is a beautiful tone. Round, rich, resonant, sweet, clear and liquid—it carries in it the appeal of a sensitive and disciplined soul.

It seems now almost unnecessary to say that singing must be characterized by ease, for, of course, beauty denotes ease. Tones that have a background of knitted eyebrows, set jaws, and rigid body cannot possibly be beautiful; anything that suggests force or labor works against beautiful tone and artistic singing. The artist sings with perfect ease.

The public, however, likes to hear high notes and big voices. And because it means popularity and success that comes quickly—but, alas, goes quickly—the singer is tempted to hurry his work, slighting what is preparatory and aiming far ahead. In other words, he forces his high notes and tries to make big, loud tones. The final result of this is that he sings badly and his voice is spoiled.

To produce beautiful tones is important; to produce them easily is just as important; ease demands perfect control, or, rather, abandonment. The idea is not to hold any or several organs in a fixed way, but rather to give them freedom to express themselves. This freedom of expression is possible only where there is a great confidence, confidence in one's own power and confidence in the message of the music; and this confidence comes with much practice, which is directed by intelligence, and in which there is present always a feeling for the very finest qualities of tone. In the case of most music students it is by the well-worn way of practice that ease is acquired.

Further along the same way power can be developed, for it is only by practice that muscles are made strong. This muscular strength makes possible big tones. If they are to be made living and expressive, as well as loud, there must be strength in the singer's personality. To be master of big tones the singer must be master of himself. Power comes with maturity.

Singing is an art which, through the medium of tone and rhythm, tries to give expression to the variegated content of the human heart. To make it a beautiful and a powerful art, it must be built upon sound musicianship, and all must be enlivened by human sympathy. Progress must be slow and sure in order to obtain the most satisfactory results. Rome did not build in a day; neither can a voice.

FLORENCE EASTON WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY STIRS AUDIENCE

The honor of being the first soloist to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season was awarded to Florence Easton, whose appearances at Symphony Hall, Boston, last week called forth all sorts of admiring comment. The charming prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera Company sang Mozart and Debussy arias and caused Mr. H. T. Parker, the distinguished critic of the Boston Transcript, to liken her singing to that of Mme. Eames in her prime. He said in part: "There is like limpidity, like measured radiance of tone, but Mme. Easton's voice is at present the warmer, the more susceptible to play characterizing color." Other Boston critics agreed with Mr. Parker on the beauty of Mme. Easton's voice and her accomplished musicianship, and we feel sure that there will be like harmony of opinion amongst the critical brethren of Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore, where Mme. Easton has also been engaged to appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Thelma Given's Debut

From Columbus, Ohio, to Russia, and from the land of chaos to France, and thence to New York—this is a brief biographical, or rather geographical, sketch of Thelma Given, who made her debut on Sunday afternoon, November 3, at Carnegie Hall. No need to take much time to describe the physical traits of this beautiful American girl, but in a word we can say that Thelma Given gives us the illusion of an Oriental girl, and her playing has also the traits of Oriental manners and feeling. Of the woman violinists who have appeared in New York in the last two seasons none has given us a better exhibition on the violin than Thelma Given. Not that she has created a sensation. Real musicians don't believe in that. But what she showed with her bow is ample justification for placing her in the ranks of the really excellent violinists. Within a season or two Thelma Given will have climbed to the highest point of artistic playing, for she is bound to place herself among the greatest.

Opening her program with a classic but endowed with ample technic, the Chaconne by Vitali had no difficulties for her. She went through the execution with sufficient skill to place her in the ranks of its best interpreters. A Concerto by Corms displayed again her facility and agility of execution in complicated scales, cadenzas and octaves. In the shorter pieces, like one by a Russian (difficult to spell) and "The Last Rose of Summer" (Flotow-Auer), she convinced us of her pure tone and clear intonation. Another quality possessed by the young lady is the emotional powers for correct rendition of melodious pieces. Her tone is large and carries more than well. Her debut should lead to other appearances, and we prefer a more interesting program, for the writer has no doubt of her having a large repertoire. L. T. Grunberg was at the piano.

Jacques Thibaud's Recital at Carnegie Hall a Treat to Artists, a Delight to Admirers

We had to wait for that genuine and truly great school of France, the school of violinists which gave birth to such distinguished masters as Vieuxtemps, Wieniawski, Sarasate, Marteau, Kreisler, Cesar Thomson and Jacques Thibaud. They are all pupils of Allard, Marsik, Massar and Berthellier. Future generations will refer to this representative list, and no matter who is to compile the musical dictionaries, their names will be engraved in letters of immortality as great musicians and supreme artists.

Though the present musical season is only in its teens, we have had at Carnegie and Aeolian halls several violinists, but all will have to bow to that supreme player, the representative of the great French school, Jacques Thibaud. When Mr. Thibaud played some years ago in this country he was a sensation. Today he is a marvel. When we have reviewed other violinists we looked for their faults. When Thibaud plays we look into his qualities. Very few others would dare to offer such a colossal program.

JACQUES THIBAUD

Mr. Thibaud gave us Guillaume Liken's Sonate with piano, Mozart's Concerto in E flat and Chant d'Hiver, by Ysaye. All the terms in a musical dictionary, to be applied only to truly great violinists, can be expended in eulogizing the master violinist, Jacques Thibaud, who possesses all the virtues.

Begin with the fine stage presence and the unaffected nature of playing, and you have before you the violinist with the characteristic traits of the master, and therefore the octaves, staccatos and cadenzas which form the technical sides of a player are the perfection of the master violinist in his manipulations.

In Mozart he showed grace, finesse, clear intonation. In Liken he disclosed musicianship, artistry, technic of unlimited powers. In Ysaye, the poetical instinct. His tone is as soft as velvet; every tone is carried far into the distant parts of a great hall. Thibaud's emotionalism is an internal factor, a thing which associates his violin with the pulsations of an audience. He carries the message of the muse from the strings to your heart. Thibaud plays to the connoisseurs; to the expert audience; to musicians and artists. He plays for art's sake, in the name of art.

Other numbers executed with inimitable style were: Guiraud's Caprice, Largo (Fiorillo), Etude (Rode) and Polonaise (Wieniawski). Nicolai Schurer was an artistic associate at the piano, especially in the Sonate.

Florence Otis in Recital

In spite of election day, this recital was fairly well attended, at Aeolian Hall. It would be unjust to be too critical about her singing, for nervousness marred her work. We never can guess what will fail a singer in such circumstances. We cannot intrude in the realm of secrets connected with a singer's life. Therefore we reserve the privilege of analyzing her singing on a future occasion, when under normal circumstances she will be open to criticism.

There is no doubt about her voice being a very good one, and it may be said that it is a valuable one for all purposes—operas and concerts. Among the American songs, we heard her in Vanderpool's "Values," a dramatic song and nearly classical in mood. It is advisable for other recitalists. The same can be said about Gilberte's "Laughing Song." On the program: Stradella, Monteverde, Rontani, Donizetti, Handel, MacDowell, La Forge, Holmes, Dalcroze, Lenormand, Debussy, Manna Zucca, Kramer, Warford and Scott. About Mr. Gilbert's accompanying work I am speaking elsewhere.

Brief Notes of Recitals and Concerts

On Sunday, November 3, at the Hippodrome, for the benefit of the Navy Comfort, a musical program enlisted the services (gratis) of Enrico Caruso and Claudia Muzio. Over $35,000 was taken in.

On November 4 Winifred Byrd gave a piano recital at Aeolian Hall.

On November 5 Florence Otis gave a song recital at Aeolian Hall.

The Humanitarian Cult presented Sophie Braslau as its bi-monthly soloist at Carnegie Hall on November 5.

Harry M. Gilbert, Accompanist

The characteristic feature of the Florence Otis recital on November 5 was the excellent accompanying at the piano by Harry M. Gilbert. Very seldom is it that accompanists are so conspicuous in their work as Mr. Gilbert's assistance on this occasion. He was an admirable factor of the event, and indeed just as important as the recitalist, if not more so.

The Boston Symphony in New York

The regenerated Boston Symphony, under an Allied conductor, Pierre Monteux of the Metropolitan Opera Company, gave its first concert on the evening of November 7 at Carnegie Hall, and on the afternoon of November 9. A large gathering was present.

The Society of American Singers—"Pirates of Penzance"

Reverting from opera comique to comic opera, the revivals of the golden era comic operas by Gilbert and Sullivan are welcome and perhaps to the management it is more gratifying because the attendance has grown to the extent that a prolongation of the season is effected. In fact the week ending November 9 was a Gilbert-Sullivan affair, "Mikado" being also on the boards, with increasing audiences. In the performance of "Pirates of Penzance" we found many pleasurable moments afforded by the music and also by the interpreters. Only the male chorus requires more fresh voices and of better qualities. The female chorus was excellent throughout the performance. Of the principals, Craig Campbell, tenor, in the part of Frederic, disclosed a warm quality of voice. Also his singing was in good taste and the English enunciation was clear. Josephine Jacoby still possesses a pure contralto voice and as Ruth she gave much pleasure. Herbert Waterous, basso voice, contributed to make the performance interesting, in acting and singing. Save for a few poor attacks in the upper voice, Miss Blanche Duffield as Mabel helped to the general good of the performance. Bertram Peacock as the Major-General added no little contribution in making the performance commendable. John McGhie conducted in spirited manner.

Anna Case Appears at the Biltmore Musicales

The brilliant American soprano was welcomed by a fashionable and large gathering, assembled at the Biltmore Hotel, when the first musicale of the season was given on the afternoon of November 8. Her renditions consisted of old Swedish songs, Scotch airs, Lithuanian songs set to Chopin's music, and numbers by Sgambatti, Bemberg, Grieg, Horsman, Kjcrulf and Spross. Others on the program were Mischa Elman and Louis Graveure, English baritone.

"St. Erik" Society Presents Swedish Compositions— Edna Gunnar Peterson, Soloist

Though another concert took place at Carnegie Hall simultaneously with this concert, the event is given precedence because of its great value. I could not hear the whole program but listened to enough to be able to give an idea of what actually took place. In chronological order: The Swedish Glee Club of New York rendered "Stand Strong, Thou Nightly Guard of Light" (Wennerberg), "The Singing Birds" (Lindblad), "Out of the Way, There" (Bellman), and "Fredman's Epistle," No. 38 (arranged by Soderman).

The chorus consists of some twenty-five voices and it needs more training. The pianissimo singing was agreeable but on the forte fragments the chorus left much to be desired. Samuël Ljunkvist, tenor, sang one song by Stenhausmar, two by Axel Wachtmeister and one by Peterson Berger. He is the possessor of a good tenor voice, but should avoid pinching the tone. In mezzo voce singing he was excellent. He was followed by the Chicago pianist, Edna Gunnar Peterson, who rendered two Tone Poems by Emil Sjogren and the same composer's "In the Wayside Inn." Miss Peterson has done more for this composer than would seem possible. She played brilliantly, exhibiting an excellent technic and a clear, beautiful, liquid tone. Another pianist would have perhaps done little justice to this Scandinavian composer, but the Chicago pianist extracted whatever there was in it and in so doing again proved herself a splendid artist. It would be pleasurable to hear her in her own recital when greater variety would be in evidence and a more detailed review would be afforded. Miss Greta Torpadie, soprano, gave two songs by Stenhammar and one by Peterson-Berger. Whether she was not in voice or a decline of her vocal powers, Miss Torpadie's singing on other occasions was more commendable. There were other numbers not heard, all Swedish music. The chorus was directed by Frederick Axman. The accompanist was Randolph Hanson and the house was packed. The St. Erik Society is the organization for the advancement of Swedish music.

Symphony Society of New York; Mischa Levitzki, Soloist

Carnegie Hall was packed to its capacity on the evening of November 9, due to the first appearance of Mischa Levitzki with Walter Damrosch's Symphony. Naturally the interest was centered on his playing of the Concerto for Piano and Orchestra by Saint-Saens. He gave a magnificent performance, one of those rare executions at the keyboard—rare for the beauty of interpretation and the superb playing. Saint-Saens has rarely been treated as musically as on this occasion. Though six recalls were effected no encore was given, but those who love to hear him play will again listen to him when he appears in recital at Aeolian Hall, some time in December. The orchestral numbers consisted of Borodine's Symphony No. 2, three pieces by Paul Vidal, for the first time in New York, and "Kowantchina," by Moussorgsky.

Raoul Vidas, French-Roumanian Violinist, Makes a Remarkable Debut at the Carnegie Hall

I reserve the privilege to review this recital for the next issue, for neither the time nor the space could give a correct description and a detailed criticism of Raoul Vidas' debut. The principal qualities of this product of the French school must be reviewed extensively and this will be done in our next issue of November 22. In brief, the applause was thunderous, the recalls were numerous, the ovation accorded to this 16 year old boy was epochal. Carnegie Hall on November 10 was jammed with the largest attendance recorded this season. Chicago will have a treat when he effects his appearance there.

LYCEUM ARTS CONSERVATORY

Another of the delightful faculty informals was given during the past week at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory. Mr. Klammsteiner was unable to make his appearance as scheduled, so that the program had to be rearranged and his place was taken by Miss Gibson, who gave some interesting interpretative dances. The other soloist was Mrs. Ora Padget Langer, contralto, in a number of well chosen songs. Mrs. Langer's voice is velvet in quality and deeply resonant. One of the most pleasing of her numbers was "At Morning," by Jeanne Boyd, a recent find among the young talented composers of our city. Mrs. Langer was accompanied by Mrs. Katherine Howard-Ward.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

THE MUSIC SUPERVISOR'S DUTY TO THE AMERICAN COMPOSER

By O. E. ROBINSON
Director of Department of Public School Music, American Conservatory of Music, Chicago
(Reprinted from The Musician)

It was with a great deal of interest that I recently read an article by Mr. Harlow Gale on Musical Education. If the reader should have curiosity as to Mr. Gale's treatment of the subject, I refer to the Pedagogical Seminary, edited by Dr. G. Stanley Hall, Volume XXIV, No. 4.

Mr. Gale takes the view that musicians do not know music as the English teacher knows English literature. "This condition," he says, "is due to the teacher's having learned an instrument rather than the literature of music. . . . Singers and teachers of singing, of all musicians, get and give the least esthetic musical values. . . . What music has been introduced into our public school system is largely of the recreative and busy-work type."

I shall not attempt to dispute these assertions. There may be more truth in them than most musicians are willing to admit. Whether they be true or not, is not the question I wish to discuss in this paper. Indeed, my thoughts have been directed into a more specific channel.

It is evident from Mr. Gale's article, which covers twelve printed pages, that his entire line of thought is based on the premise that the music of the German composers constitutes practically the entire musical literature of the world. He mentions Chopin frequently, however, and Tchaikovsky and Saint-Saens, each once. He refers repeatedly to the masterpieces of Bach. Beethoven, Brahms, Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn, and Chopin to the exclusion practically of all other composers. The only American referred to is MacDowell, and he is mentioned only casually. This condition is not as it should be. It is merely one of many instances which show how the American composer is ignored.

A great deal is being said and written now relative to the rights of the American composer. Musical editors are urging the America first idea in music as well as in the engagement of artists. Orchestra directors are beginning to give the American composer a chance. An American opera is produced occasionally. Women's clubs are giving programs made up entirely of music by American composers. Are the supervisors of music thoughout the country doing their duty by the American composers?

The lack of knowledge on the part of the average high school pupil concerning the big musical events of this country is rather appalling, to say nothing of the pupils in the grammar grades. The majority of our high school pupils have never heard of MacDowell, John K. Paine, Horatio W. Parker, or George W. Chadwick. It is true that the patrons of the symphony concerts have an opportunity from time to time to hear works by American composers, but the vast majority of high school pupils do not attend these concerts. The supervisors of school music are in a better position to reach the masses of young people than persons engaged in almost any other field of musical activity.

Assuming that it is one of the many duties of the supervisors of music to make the names and compositions of American composers familiar to our boys and girls as far as possible, let us discuss the best means of putting this suggestion into effect. As a practical worker in the field of public school music, I am endeavoring to do something toward this desired result. Perhaps a statement as to my own personal efforts in this direction may be of interest to some of my co-laborers.

Formerly, in giving work in Musical Biography, we devoted most of our attention to the European composers. If we had any time left, the American composers came in for a few short paragraphs. In giving the work in the History of Music, we began with the ancient Egyptians, Hebrews, and so on, and finally came down to the modern period. Now, high school boys and girls are living very much in the present. They are an army of restless, pulsating individuals, filled with the spirit of the present, and not seriously interested in the Greeks, Egyptians, or Hebrews of three thousand years ago. In teaching history and biography to active youth, what, then, would be the intelligent course to pursue? Why, to begin with the present, the now, right where these young people are living, and begin with America. Impress upon these boys and girls the fact that there are American composers who have written good music and will write a great deal more. Make the names of these composers as well as their music familiar. This is what I have been doing during the past year and I find the interest of the pupils in music is greatly stimulated by the process.

To begin with, I read to the pupils an article on current musical evnts. Then I kept them informed as to musical happenings of the country, of the Chicago and Metropolitan Opera activities, of the big series of concerts given by our great symphony orchestras. I kept them abreast of the times by relating the musical events of each week. Next, I discussed the older American composers, then the younger group. If we still had time after the American field was covered, we discussed the music of the composers of the allied countries, or of our alien enemies. In other words, by putting America first in music, in the minds of the school boys and girls, I found they reacted with a much keener interest than in the old way.

Further to stimulate interest in American music I organized a musical club, to the membership of which any pupil in the school is eligible. The one vital requirement is that he must have a strong interest in music and a desire to learn more about it. The club gives a program once a month. These programs are made up of the compositions of American composers, and some phase of American music is usually discussed. The programs are sometimes given by members of the club and sometimes we have assistance from musicians of the city. In a large school of 2,500 pupils we limit the membership to the number of seats in the music room, which is 100. Dues of 50 cents a year are required. The money raised in this manner is used to pay for magazine subscriptions for the club, to place new musical works in our library, to buy new records, or to purchase pictures of musical subjects for the music room. The interest must depend upon the enthusiasm at the head of it. The supervisor must be a "live wire" to stimulate the required interest.

We have a waiting list. When a member is absent for two consecutive meetings without a reasonable excuse he automatically loses his membership and his place is filled from the waiting list. A club of this kind, if properly looked after, serves as a good stimulant for the dreaming youth. The same kind of a club could and should be maintained in the grammar schools as well as in the high school in every town. The co-operation of the music teachers of the town should be sought in the preparation of programs of American music. The piano and vocal teachers should be encouraged to give to their pupils compositions by Americans which can be used in the programs of the club. Thus an interest in and sale for American compositions would be awakened.

With this propaganda for American music should go the opportunity to become familiar with the compositions themselves. A limited number of records are available for both the player-piano and the victrola. Although the foreign composer predominates, still there are available records of a goodly number of American songs to be had in the Columbia and Victor records. A number of compositions may be had in the Universal Music Rolls for all Standard Players. Among these selections may be found compositions by MacDowell (notably three sonatas), Victor Herbert, L. M. Gottschalk, Nevin, Sousa, Hadley, Liebling, De Koven, and others.

Then there is a large list of choruses by American composers, from which selections should be made for the regular chorus work. Among the many choruses available for use with a good high school chorus may be mentioned:

"Gypsy Heart" (Baltzell), "O, When 'Tis Summer Weather" (Brewer), "My Lady Chlo" (Clough-Leighter), "My Lady's Lips Are Like the Honey" (Cook), "Cherry Ripe" (Damrosch), "Happy Day," from "Robin Hood" (De Koven), "Serenade," from "The Fencing Master" (De Koven), "Song of the Flag," from the "Knickerbockers" (De Koven), "The Merry Miller," from "Rob Roy" (De Koven), "The De'il's Awa'" (De Lamarter); "What the Chimney Sang" (Dunham), "Italian Salad" (Genee), "Hong Kong Romance" (Hadley), "Invictus" (Huhn), "Maid Marian's Song" (Johns), "Land of Mine" (MacDermid), "Our High School" (Miessner), "The Return of Spring" (Otis), "Lullaby," six parts (Saar), "Ye Singers All" (Spry), "The Wooing of the Rose" (Weidig), "Would God I Were the Tender Apple Blossom" (Weidig).

Lastly, I desire to emphasize the necessity of the continued and repeated use of American patriotic and folk songs. Such songs as "Old Folks at Home," "Star Spangled Banner," and "Dixie," and many others should become a part of every household vocabulary. Two of the good later songs are "Sammy," by A. O. Anderson, and "When the Flag Goes By," by Nevin.

THE MUSIC SCHOOLS OF THE MIDDLE WEST AND THE WAR

By MAX L. SWARTHOUT

War conditions in their direct bearing on the schools and colleges of the country have been more or less generally discussed during the past year through the newspapers, educational periodicals and at the many school men conferences, and in consequence are fairly well known and appreciated by the people as a whole. As a result of these unusual conditions many important program changes have become necessary, especially in the institutions of so-called "higher education"—changes affecting not only the courses of study offered the students, but including also readjustments of faculty and budget. In some cases the demands have been actually prohibitive to the school's continuance; in others, additional endowment funds have been raised, tuition rates increased, to offset the loss in revenue or to meet the greatly advanced expense account. And the end is not yet, nor can it be until we have fought the war to a successful finish.

But what of the music schools of the country? How have the newly imposed conditions affected them, and how have these demands been met in their case?

With a view of ascertaining, in some degree at least, how matters are at present with the music school men of the land and in what respects the year just closed has been different from that immediately preceding, the writer prepared a questionnaire —eleven questions in all—touching, in his opinion, some of the more salient points which have confronted the schools of music during the past year and making inquiry as to certain other possibilities of the near at hand future Realizing the magnitude of the task were one to attempt a thorough canvass, one embracing all of the music schools of the land, it was deemed advisable by him to choose a comparatively small area within which to confine his work, selecting then only such schools as would be truly representative of the situation as regards locality, kind of school and scholastic standing. Some thirty-six schools were decided upon, embracing departments of co-educational institutions (including state universities) and colleges for women, as well as music schools and conservatories of a private or corporate nature. A portion of the United States comprising several of the so-called Middle West states was selected for the "restricted area," which, while differing doubtless in some respects from other parts of the country as to local conditions, could, nevertheless, be considered as generally representative. An almost exact two-thirds of the questionnaires were returned with replies—possibly an exceptionally good showing, though the writer regrets his inability to procure the entire number sent out.

It is, perhaps, unnecessary to remind the reader that in drawing his conclusions, certain features peculiar either to a school of music or to the general institution of which it is a department, should be kept in mind. For instance, enrollment figures as given in this article represent to a very large degree young women students. (One good result, we believe, of the many which shall come out of the war will be a larger number of male students enrolling in our schools for the serious study of music.) Again, and perhaps the natural result of this long experienced attendance record in music schools in favor of young women students, the faculties of practically all such schools are made up of women rather than men teachers. Then, too, it can be easily seen that certain conditions, especially those pertaining to enrollment and the courses of study usually pursued, would be different in a department of music at a state university from corresponding conditions at some other co-educational college or university not supported by state funds or in one of the so-called private schools of music. And so one might go on mentioning other characteristics of the several kinds of schools and comparing them were this article to be other than general in its character.

Attendance Statistics

Attendance figures for the year 1917-18, considered generally, are more gratifying than some school authorities, even the more sanguine ones, would have prophesied a year ago. There have been losses in enrollment, it is true—in some schools as high as 20 per cent—but taken as a whole about 45 per cent of the institutions replying to the questionnaire reported normal or nearly normal attendance. State university music departments showed decreases from 3 to 20 per cent, while in other co-educational institutions maintaining departments of music a more favorable showing was noted, practically two-thirds of these reporting enrollments as good or slightly better than those recorded for the preceding year. (It might be added, however, that in several of these replies an increased showing in elementary students, offsetting a similar loss in adults, was noted.) The replies from women's colleges showed an almost equal division on the matter of increased or decreased attendance. Private or corporate schools of music, as could have been surmised, made the most favorable showing, some 60 per cent reporting normal attendance, 10 per cent an increase, while only 30 per cent noted a decrease in the number of students for the year.

Faculty Members in Military Service

That musicians can fight and will fight, if in a just cause, is proved by the fact that considerably more than half the number of schools reporting have contributed of their faculties in order to help push back the Hun across the Rhine. Reports of two or three members of the faculty in military service are frequent, while more than one of the larger schools of music mentions as many as ten or twelve of its faculty forsaking music for the time being in order to make the world a more harmonious place in which to live. And this is not all. With the extension of the limits of the draft, the contributions from the music faculties of the land will be even greater—a sacrifice anxiously but willingly anticipated by the music schools and departments in their forecast for the coming year.

Greater Seriousness of Purpose Noted

It is but natural that the feeling of unrest and uncertainty so in evidence generally during the year should manifest itself in the music schools. Faculty and students alike were affected by the unusual conditions. Faculty morale, if the expression be permitted, was affected, not only through the enlistment and drafting of a number of the faculty men, but also was noticeably unsteadied because of the indefiniteness of the future, especially as regards draft extension and the effect of such a measure on the plans of other faculty members. Instances are frequent of students, for the most part young women of serious purpose, having to curtail their plans for study, giving up their work in midyear because of financial considerations, though not a few enlisted in Red Cross or other war aid service. In the voice departments particularly a considerable falling off in the number of men students was noted, due in great measure to the acceptance of military service on the part of these young defenders of democracy. However, it is especially noteworthy to read in practically all of the replies sent in that at no time in the past was so great a seriousness manifest in the work of both faculty and student bodies. Each, as it were, put forth its best efforts to the end that the co-ordination might be as nearly perfect as possible, both realizing that the future days, possibly, would demand still greater sacrifices on the part of all, and that the art, whose priests they are, would come in for a large part in the softening of the discords of life, now so harsh and so evident.

Tuition Rates and Faculty Salaries

It is fortunate, no doubt, in view of the necessity, now greater than ever before, for universal education, artistic as well as "utilitarian," that tuition rates have not kept pace with the ever-mounting cost of living. Without question, were colleges and universities to demand correspondingly higher prices for their instruction thousands of students anxious to continue their education would be obliged to forego that privilege. Quite naturally, in schools backed up by large endowments, the necessity for this increase is not found and fortunate, perhaps, are those schools of music connected with such institutions, although it has long been a question in the writer's mind as to the benign effects of endowments, generally speaking, on the faculties of the departments of music. He may be in error in his belief that such schools of music, aside from taking care of their own needs, are often called upon to befriend other less remunerative college departments when the general financial report for the year is made up. But private or corporate music schools, as a rule, have no endowments and, as a consequence, naturally find themselves confronted these days with both sides of the economic question. The result, as noted in almost all the replies from departmental as well as private schools, might be termed "philanthropic" so far as the schools (and faculties) are concerned, namely, tuition rates for the coming year will remain practically the same as those for 1917-18. As a direct consequence, the faculty salaries will not be increased, although in several schools slight concessions in favor of such teachers as are on a purely commission basis are announced.

Concerning German Music

A positive, direct and practically universal discrimination against German music, particularly that of contemporary German composers, constitutes another of the interesting findings from a perusal of the questionnaire replies. The older classic composers, accepted everywhere as belonging to the world at large rather than to the German people, are in the same good repute and favor as heretofore, and their names have appeared frequently on the programs of the past year, but German titles as well as German texts to songs have been quite completely disbarred, even visiting artists being required to fall in line with this decision. Music of allied nations, especially that of America, has been used to a much greater extent than formerly, and all schools, apparently, are enthusiastically encouraging our own composers to still greater endeavors in the hope that a truly American school of composition is a near future possibility.

Community Music

At no time in the past has the music of the masses received such general consideration and help as were given to it by the musicians of the country this past year. Musicians everywhere, with no thought than that of service, offered their best talent to the nation, and it is no overstatement of facts, in the writer's opinion, to attribute a large part of the undreamed-of popularity and success of the community sing movement to the enthusiastic and inspirational leadership furnished by the music schools of the land. Who among us can measure the results already obtained or can forecast the good to come to the American people because of this universal awakening to musical expression, brought about largely through this one of the many efforts put forth to promote community interests? What will be its reflex action on the music and the music schools of the future? Perhaps, because of the baptism of fire now over us there shall come to the musician a refining, a democratizing as it were, of his musical ideals through which all music, in the true sense of the word, shall have new values and all musicians a deeper insight into the soul needs of the people.

Suggestions

But the task remains to be completed; the call to service still comes ringing clear. How can the musicians and the music schools best help in the work that lies ahead and to which every institution, as well as every individual, must contribute its best efforts? "By staying on their job, doing the best work they possibly can, and instead of lowering standards, raising them," writes Charles H. Mills, director of the School of Music, University of Wisconsin, a suggestion contributed by a number of the replies received; by doing more "to assist in making the music in the schools efficient; by organization among those musicians not connected with schools in order that their work may count for more," are two of the several splendid suggestions from J. Lawrence Erb, University of Illinois; "by making themselves as useful as possible in the community and by responding in a financial way to the just requests of the government as liberally as possible," suggests Director Albert A. Stanley, University School of Music, Ann Arbor, Mich.; "by furthering community singing and by cooperating with the public schools by offering their facilities to bring good music to the children," says Dean Lutkin, Northwestern University School of Music, Evanston, Illinois, which latter suggestion expresses the opinion of Director Edgar M. Cawley of the Indianapolis Conservatory of Music, a school which next year will furnish the services of its entire public school music class to the schools of the city without charge. "Use compositions of American composers in all lines; insist on greater respect for the flag; employ American teachers," are timely suggestions from the Detroit Conservatory of Music, Francis York, director. "Emphasize the thought, 'music as usual,'" contributes Kenneth M. Bradley, Bush Conservatory, Chicago, and continues, "As the art of a nation represents the soul of the nation, and music is the art of the modern world, we should not forget that our nation has a soul," while Dean R. G. McCutchan of DePauw University, Greencastle, Indiana, an authority on community appreciation, tersely suggests that musicians "be of all possible service in whatsoever capacity they are called upon to serve," stating that "we never needed music so much as now," an opinion backed up by a comprehensive experience this past summer in conducting community singing from chautauqua platforms.

Will the musicians of the country measure up to the nation's need of them in the times that lie just ahead? Their record during the past year is the best answer to the question. And the music school, so long in gaining for itself the recognition and appreciation to which it is entitled as a most vital factor in the education of the youth, will unquestionably fulfill all that is expected of it in the speedy bringing about of that day of gladness, when the American people shall lay aside the weapons of war to enjoy the fruits of a righteous and victorious peace.

MUSICIANS' CLUB OF WOMEN

On Monday, November 4, occurred the president's reception of the Musicians' Club of Women.

Following the reception a short musical program was given. The first number was a trio made up of Mrs. Calvin A. Whyland and Mrs. A. F. Callahan, sopranos, and Mrs. Rose Lutiger Gannon, contralto. Their numbers consisted of "Beauteous Morn" (Matthews), "Persian Serenade" (German) and "Song of a Shepherd" (Fox). It was an excellent ensemble, the voices blending most beautifully, while the interpretation was all that could be desired.

The soloist of the afternoon was Orpha Kendall Holstman, who chose for her group "From a Prison" (Panizza), "A Negro Spiritual" (Guion), and "The Americans Come" (Fay Foster). Mrs. Holstman was in excellent voice. These were all done with much finish vocally, and with a true regard for the dramatic content. The patriotic number brought forth much applause.

The last number on the program consisted of the Tschaikowsky Trio, Opus 50, played by Amy Emerson Neill, violinist; Vera Poppe, cellist, and Carol Robinson, pianist, and once more displayed the fine musicianship of these young artists.

Miss Neill's tone is so round and firm, while her technic is so clean that it is a delight to hear. Miss Robinson at the piano was very positive, very musical and very effective, although not to the extent that she predominated. Miss Poppe has a splendid, virile tone and her work with the trio was entirely satisfactory. Priscilla Carver and Anna Gray were the accompanists of the afternoon.

The president, Mrs. Harriet Smulski, in her remarks said that "Music is not a mere amusement, but a 'Psychological necessity,' as has been proven in this war"; that "We are the second line of defense, and that our work has been self-sacrificing and patriotic."

In introducing Herbert Gould, the speaker of the afternoon, she paid him great tribute. Mr. Gould, preferring not to be called a speaker, talked on "Mass Singing With the Men." He said that it was a vital necessity. He also stated that this was the "Day of Opportunities for Musicians," and not alone the musicians, but the music trade. He cited the quotation from Walt Whitman, "I See America Go Singing to Her Destiny," saying that "Silent America had suddenly become a Singing America," the "Great Heart of America had become stirred." He also made a plea for more musical instruments for sailors and soldiers.

"ON TO VICTORY"

An interesting feature of the program given at the Lake View High School last Wednesday night was the singing of John C. Zouboulakis' new and stirring patriotic song "On to Victory" by Miss Eugenia Vessella, mezzo-soprano, with violin obligato by George Kampas and the composer at the piano. Mr. Zouboulakis has an ideal combination in his words and music and was wise in the choice of artists in presenting his song.

Miss Vessella's voice is of fine range and quality and with excellent support from the violin and piano the song made an impressive number.

No doubt this song will become widely known.

ALBERT SPALDING SCORES GERMAN WAR MUSIC

In a recent interview in Rome, Albert Spalding, the American violinist, took exception to certain forms of German music. He is quoted as saying, "I saw in the London Times the other day that they were giving 'Walkyrie' in London. Imagine it! A Wagner opera. True it was in English, but still it remains Wagner. Now I am no Germanaphobe when it comes to music, as I think that the great German musicians, such as Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Schumann, Brahms, etc., are the contradiction of modern Germany today. But somehow Wagner, with his 'Wotans' and 'Frickas' and blatant brasses, is too potently a modern German and a precursor of Hun conceit and Hun frightfulness. I am not in a humor to hear tall Amazons shriek out a Teutonic Ho-yo-to-yo while Hun guns are pouring their hellish destruction into the heart of France and Italy. Somehow I wouldn't mind 'Tristan' or 'Meistersinger' so much, but blood and thunder 'Siegfrieds' and 'Brunnhildes' get my goat. . . .

"The trouble with most artists (and the best of them) is that they are not sufficiently sure of what they really want to say. You have heard many people talking of having this same defect and the result becomes an incoherent, unconvincing exposition of a chaotic mind. It's just as important to 'think straight' in music as in anything else. The art of suggestion is too little understood. You can always accomplish so much more by suggesting mountains than by running up hills. In other words the old Aristotelian theory of drama, a 'probable impossibility rather than an improbable possibility.' It is this art of suggesting great things, rather than doing astonishing things, that distinguishes one artist from another . . . and in this way so many fiddlers, carried away by the momentary exultation of producing a big tone, will do so at the cost of losing the chance of producing a big phrase."

A FEW ARTHUR MIDDLETON FACTS

It is not often that a press agent descends to facts. It is not often that one can, because in the majority of cases facts are not startling. In the case of Arthur Middleton, our great American baritone, however, one does not have to garnish, embroider or otherwise treat facts to make them interesting. For instance, Mr. Middleton enjoys the distinction of being the only soloist engaged for twelve consecutive performances with the Apollo Club of Chicago. He was soloist on two tours with the New York Symphony Orchestra, three tours with the Minneapolis Symphony and appeared as well with the Chicago Symphony, the New York Philharmonic, St. Paul Symphony, etc. Arthur Middleton is purely an American product, never having been abroad and yet without any previous operatic experience he was engaged for the Metropolitan Opera Company and during his first season there had thirty-five appearances. As an oratorio artist his popularity is shown by the fact that he has appeared over 200 times in "The Messiah" and 150 times in "Elijah."

MUSICAL PROFESSION SCORES ONE ON THEATRICAL

Reed Miller, the tenor, and Nevada Van der Veer, his contralto wife, tell an amusing incident that happened during the recent Liberty Loan drive, when they were booked to appear on the same program with Donald Brian—he of the dancing feet and musical comedy fame. The three were riding over to the meeting in the same taxi when Brian began to tell them a "brand new" story. In fact this story was so new that he (Brian), who had just heard it from an actor friend, gave his solemn promise not to use it in public because his friend wanted to "spring" it the following night in his show. Throughout the telling Mr. and Mrs. Miller tried hard to look as if they were being present at a debut, and when the end came they courteously laughed, but evidently Mr. Brian's trained ear got the perfunctory note in their laughter, for he looked at them sharply and said, "You've heard it before, haven't you?" "To be brutally frank," said Mr. Miller, "my wife has been telling that story for over a year, but don't feel badly—we've often had them put over on us that way."

Johnston-Briscoe—Lillian Thomas-Johnston, soprano, and Addison Briscoe, pianist, both of the Metropolitan Conservatory of Music, will appear on a program given by the Baron Hirsch Woman's Club at the New Morrison Hotel Wednesday afternoon, November 13.

FOREIGN VIOLINISTS TAKE NOTICE

By GAYLORD YOST

It has been three years since Clayton F. Summy published the Concerto in E Minor for violin, by Cecil Burleigh. This splendid work has not been publicly performed by any of the well known violinists. Why? Are these artists too lazy to learn a new work or are they indifferent to American creative art? Perhaps both. But for the life of me I cannot comprehend why such a great work should be so heartily slighted and quietly ignored. Surely not on the ground that it is not worthy. Any musician examining this concerto could not fail to be favorably impressed with its greatness and breadth, for it has, first of all, substance, and further, is spontaneous and inspired and written by one who understands how to score effectively for the violin.

Year after year we hear the Mendelssohn, Bruch, Beethoven and Brahms Concertos played by Elman, Zimbalist, Thibaud, Kreisler and others. Countless small transcriptions of tunes from the antiquated composers are perpetrated upon an innocent and unsuspecting public—unsuspecting because the public little realizes that these transcriptions are played by the transcribers to further their own pecuniary interests. A short time ago I heard two American violinists who appeared on programs that were supposed to be made up entirely of American compositions—one played a group, some of which were his own arrangements of Italian tunes; the other used a transcription of a tune by Cramer. And these American compositions?

Of the foreign violinists who have played American works I might mention Ysaye, who played the Huss Sonata; Elman in Carpenter's Sonate; Zimbalist, who introduced John Powell's fine Concerto; Kreisler in Schelling's Concerto. Excepting in the case of Zimbalist, the works were given only one hearing. These artists evidently considered their duty discharged after one performance.

The fashion among violinists these last ten years has been to see who could find the oldest and most impoverished music with which to surprise and bore a patient and indulgent public. Surely the Spohr Concertos are tedious enough to listen to, but imagine two seasons ago one famous Russian violinist played Spohr's Ninth and Bach's Fourth on the same program. The Haendel Sonates in E and A have been played threadbare. Aside from this monomania to resurrect the skeletons of the past the programs of the contemporary fiddlers have been hackneyed in the extreme. If these distinguished artists would utilize the time in looking for new works instead of searching the dusty archives of antiquity, I am sure that America would not suffer from lack of representation.

America is now sheltering practically all of the great foreign violinists. Most of these have made their money in this country. Some of them got out of military service, while Spalding, Macmillen and many splendid American artists are "over there" fighting in their stead. The least that these foreigners could do would be to investigate the work of America's composers and be fair and courteous enough to program the result of their investigations. American music certainly could not bore the public more than many of the "war horses" it has patiently tolerated so long.

For general information it would be well to add that the Concerto by Cecil Burleigh is not the only worthy work from the pen of this gifted composer. There are perhaps three score published works by Burleigh, many of which are gems of the first water. Spalding's Suite and smaller pieces should find a place on programs. Carpenter's great Sonate in G should be heard frequently. Likewise some of the works of Mrs. Beach, Arthur Foote and many lesser known but equally worthy composers. Doubtless many fine works in manuscript could be found if a willingness were indicated by violinists to examine and perform new things.

I should suggest that all clubs and societies engaging artists or musical organizations should adopt the slogan "Something American on Every Program." This would react in a beneficial way for American creative art and it might compel the self-centered foreigner to a courteous condescension.

BENEFIT FOR FRENCH KIDDIES

Four benefit performances — three evenings and a matinee — will be given under the auspices of the Library Association of Chicago in Centralizing Recital Hall, November 14, 15 and 16, for the purpose of supplying books for a contingent of kindergarten teachers who are to be sent to France by the Red Cross.

Miss Lida Pendry, librarian of the Englewood High School and a former student of the Centralizing School of Music, is responsible for this splendid plan. She felt that this would be an effective way to facilitate the work of the unit in teaching the refugee children, by replacing in their minds the scenes of terror through which they have passed with healthy, wholesome, cheerful pictures.

William Owen, director of the School of Acting, who is always ready to do his utmost in patriotic work, suggested the production of four one-act plays: "The Maker of Dreams," "Overtones," "Suppressed Desires" and "The Twelve Pound Look." These are all fresh, up-to-date, vital and interesting and have gained popularity wherever they have been produced. The cast is made up of Mr. Owen and associate players and the four performances will be given under Mr. Owen's personal direction. Irene A. Skinner, who is in charge of the Expression Department, will appear in "Suppressed Desires," and Mr. Owen in "The Maker of Dreams" and "The Twelve Pound Look." The cast has been carefully selected and the artists chosen with regard to their particular fitness for the parts. Special scenery has been designed for these plays by R. Weisenborn, who is an artist of the new school. He has contributed many pictures to the Art Institute, and those who are interested in the evolution of art will look forward with keen anticipation to the scenic effects in these plays.

RUDOLPH REUTER IN PIANO RECITAL

Rudolph Reuter, the popular pianist, will play a recital at the Playhouse on Sunday afternoon, November 24, under the auspices of the War Relief Club, of which Mrs. Archibald Freer is chairman.

He will be assisted by Mrs. William Mack Baxter, soprano.

The program will be of miscellaneous compositions, including novelties by Griffes, Ravel and Saar. Full details will be printed next week.

The War Relief Club maintains a French military hospital, which will need help for many months to come in spite of the end of the war.

It also gives money to the French Red Cross.

Craven—Carl E. Craven, tenor, is probably the only Chicago singer who had any engagements on last Monday (The Great Revel Day), or at least the only one who fulfilled his engagements—for as a matter of fact he had two. The first was in the afternoon in recital at the La Salle Hotel before the Culture Club, and the second was in the evening in "The Prodigal Son" at a north side church. Mr. Craven is appearing all of next week in the bill at the Hippodrome.

Neill—Amy Neill appeared in concert at the Illinois Theater on Sunday afternoon for the benefit of the "Off the Street" Club. Edgar Nelson was accompanist.

New Era for Music in the United States

Under the caption "On the Job Again," James J. Montague contributed one day last week a very interesting poem to the editorial page of the Chicago Herald-Examiner, one verse of which is here reproduced:

"The tumult and shouting, made famous by Kipling,
Have died as they did in his widely known poem,
A headache is all that is left of the tippling,
The whistles are still and the bands have gone home.
We still are brimful of delight and elation,
Our hearts are serene, though our temples may throb,
But life isn't ever one long celebration,
So let us go back on the job."

In the issue of Musical America just preceding the signing of the armistice, in Mephisto's column occurred this sentence:

What with the war, Liberty Loan drives, the consequent disturbance to business, all emphasized by the terrible epidemic which has swept the country, the musicians are having a pretty hard time of it, especially as in many cities the auditoriums have been closed for the time being. But the darkest hour is before the dawn, and the time is coming, coming soon, when the natural energies of the peoples here and abroad, repressed for so long in the effort to win the war, must find expression, and then, however great the temporary disturbance during the period of reconstruction, music will find her own again, so that all those who labor in the musical field, whether great or small, world renowned or only locally known, will enjoy a period of prosperity such as they have never known before.

In a splendid editorial in the Chicago Tribune one day recently the following sentences were used:

One of the first orders to the armies on the French front after the moment of armistice was in effect this: "Do not relax your vigilance; be ever alert; do not fraternize with the late enemy; keep the lines complete."

If that order is essential in the very heart of the present tense situation is just as essential with us in America. The interests that have been inimical to the United States may have decreased in number but not in ardor. Armistice may have removed the means of some injury but not the spirit that actuates propagandists.

These three utterances, very divergent in thought on the surface, all point to one fact, i. e., that America must, on emerging from the war, take up the questions of rehabilitation and reorganization of all her essential occupations in a serious way, and with a "vision" which extends far into the future.

Music, which has played so big a part in the emotional aspects of the war and so remarkable a one in the keeping up of morale, both of those in actual service and those in "the second lines" at home, had reached, just before the close of the fighting came so suddenly, a place where not much greater discouragement (in a business sense) could have been possible.

A keen critic of events said to this writer a month or two ago: "If the war continues another twelvemonth there will be no musical profession left. There will be some people making their living by teaching, some in church music and other established routines, but no professional class devoted to public work."

This, of course, was the opinion of a pessimist and was an exaggeration. But it was so perilously near the truth that all musicians must welcome the coming of Peace very enthusiastically, not alone because of the world meanings involved, but also because it brings the chance for music to reassert itself and to resume the satisfactory growth which was in progress before the war began.

But, just as in other lines of occupation, those who make music their business must, from this time forward, adopt more careful business rules and must rid themselves of much folly and many mistakes.

To have given freely and gloriously of their art for the boys in camp and in aid of the various war charities was a privilege as well as an obligation, and this was met nobly.

It will have to be met for a little while yet, perhaps.

But once the war work is done and the world is settling down to rebuild itself and to rejuvenate all professions and arts, music should adopt the real business policies contained in recent articles in Music News on the subject of the free giving of services and should become, at once and emphatically, business-like in all its interprofessional dealings and in its contacts with the public.

There should be no more giving of musical services for nothing—there should be no more juggling with prices.

Each professional musician should set for himself a status and a price, which he will refuse to abrogate under any circumstances.

The public must be taught that there is a difference between the work of the amateur and the professional, and must be made to expect always to pay a fair price for the latter.

Musicians must uphold each other. American musicians must insist that their work in every respect is as good as that of foreigners, and in practical ways emphasize their own belief in this dictum.

Music News proposes again this slogan and hopes that more and more will the professional musicians adopt it—NOTHING FOR NOTHING.

Something About Raoul Vidas and His New York Debut

By JOSEPH DE VALDOR

At the moment when these lines are written the echoes of the ringing ovation, of the thunderous cheers, of the spontaneous calling of the "bravos" and "bis" are still fresh in my mind, but away from the tumultuous audience I can for a moment forget the outward impressions of the memorable Sunday afternoon—November 10—and devote myself to memories of the beautiful music heard then.

For once, let me commend the management on the absence of exaggerated publicity previous to the appearance of the artist, for every one who purchased a seat came to Carnegie Hall free from prejudice and only to listen to another newcomer. It was for the public to apply the label of "an ordinary violinist" or "a great genius." None in the audience suspected that this new arrival could transform the listeners into a company of admirers, and that from a quiet crowd the metamorphosis into a tumultuous one could be effected.

Some months ago I made a prediction which was an exception to my rule—that the 16 year old boy would create more than a merely passing interest. I hoped then not to be disappointed. None in the profession knew of Raoul Vidas' progress as did the writer—none among writers was in such close relations—for I had followed his career from Paris—when as a boy of 9 I heard him play (as a prodigy), later in 1913 in concert in the Salle des Agriculteurs and Salle Gaveau in Paris, and lately at his Now York home. Still with all confidence in him I never allowed enthusiasm to run away with me and never wished to stamp him a great violinist until after his public appearance on November 10.

Without bombastic publicity the boy succeeded in interesting three thousand New Yorkers, for Carnegie Hall was packed. It is necessary to give a brief note of Raoul Vidas' teachers. The man who first discovered the violinistic gifts of this boy was his own father—he himself a violinist of repute, formerly director of an orchestra at Buckarest, Roumania, and teacher of violin at the National Roumanian Conservatory. The father undertook to train his son for a career, as in the case of Jacques Thibaud's father. The progress achieved necessitated the departure of young Raoul from Roumania to the City of Lights—Paris. Believing (although not conceited) that he had talent he aimed to get a hearing from the great French master Berthelier, who was a pupil of Massar and Marsik—the teachers of Thibaud, Kreisler, Ysaye and others. Berthelier was delighted, for, as with all great masters, he never wanted to waste time on a boy with a limited talent, but Vidas impressed him to such an extent that he took him under his protective wing until the day of his death—some fourteen months ago—and the result of Berthelier's teaching was emphasized at the debut of the talented pupil. The greatest violinists come from France and Belgium and these two schools are justly ranked as the greatest, and from them have come such results at Vieuxtemps, Wieniawski, Sarasate, Ysaye, Kreisler, Thibaud, Musin, Marteau and Cesar Thomson. The above have made violinists whose work are epochal and have established a great modern school equaled only by the great Venetian School of Paganini.

We will not speak of Raoul Vidas' European career, what interests us just now is his American debut. In appearance he is just a boy; in playing he is twice as much, for his art has outgrown his years. Physically speaking, he has more personality than anyone who has appeared here in a decade save for one or two exceptions, as, for instance, Thibaud and Ysaye in their early years.

Throughout his recital he was calm, tranquil, unmoved, perfectly poised and devoid of any mannerism or affectations. He stood his ground firm, unshaken and disciplined, as only a soldier is accustomed to do. It is also remarkable that even smiles were absent, save after the concluding number. He takes his art seriously, even though only a boy of 16.

His technic was emphatically good in the rendition of Lalo's "Rhapsodie Russe," a composition not as great as the same composer's "Symphonie Espagnole"; the second movement, the "Chant Russe," was played with a divine tone, bringing out that Slavic note of sadness so characteristic of the Russians. The last movement was characterized by its difficult passages—octaves, cadenzas and complicated technic; here Raoul Vidas gave a performance which placed him instantly in the rank of the great violinists of the day. The opening number, "Folies d'Espagne," by Corelli, disclosed his clear and perfect intonation, his large tone, his emotional powers and his agility of handling the bow. In the "Saltarelle," by Wieniawski-Thibaud, which was encored, his muted playing was admirable and ravishing in beauty. After this piece the applause was thunderous. The violinist directed his bow toward the box where the great Jacques Thibaud was sitting, who was certainly delighted at the enthusiasm which his transcription evoked. Marvelous was the execution of the Pugnani-Kreisler Prelude Allegro. The second composer in attendance at the recital was Raoul Lappara, whose "Piece Intermezzo" was given a magnificent rendition, and again the boy pointed his bow to the French composer facing the violinist from a box.

Andante by Tartini and Jota Navarra by Sarasate were also on the program, and the violinist, who received many recalls, was compelled to give several encores. Not until the lights were out did the audience leave the hall. Outside a great throng awaited Raoul Vidas and hundreds of spectators rushed to shake hands, and the boy still showed poise and composure.

A great future awaits him, and when the readers of the Windy City see the announcement of his appearance with the Chicago Symphony on November 29 and 30 let them not fail to go and hear him. Raoul Vidas is another of the glorious pupils of the great sister republic—France—who has given the world many a great man.

THE MAGIC OF YOUR EYES

Programs without number have come into Music News office in which have been included "The Magic of Your Eyes" by Alfred A. Penn, and numerous hearings of the graceful song has solidified the impression created at the first hearing, i. e., that it is not only original and beautiful, but also that it has basic merit and intrinsic values which will make it, for long, a constantly used piece.

Some inquiry among Chicago singers has elicited the following facts about the use of this song:

Mable Corlew Smith sang the number for a whole week at the Hippodrome and thinks it one of the most successful songs she has ever used. "The audience warmed to it at once," she says.

Charles W. Clark has used the duet arrangement in his studio recitals (pupils), and Frank Parker and Karl Buren Stein, well-known teachers of voice, have both used it extensively and both have written commendatory letters of the piece to the New York publishers, Witmark & Sons.

Clara Edmunds-Hemingway, the Gary composer-singer, has scheduled "The Magic of Your Eyes" on her program lists for a year, and Grant Hadley has used it repeatedly both in concert and studio.

WHAT A SINGER SHOULD KNOW

BY DONATO A. PARADISO

The voice is formed by the action of the diaphragm, lungs and larynx, and is modified by the action of the pharynx, palate, tongue, nasal cavities, teeth and lips. By opening the glottis (which is the superior aperture of the larynx) more or less deep or high tones are produced.

Respiration is one of the greatest factors in the art of singing—in fact, the foundation of the voice. Therefore it is of absolute necessity that strict attention be paid to this function. Also the practice of deep breathing purifies the blood and keeps the body in good physical condition. The venous blood is full of poison, which it has acquired in its circulation through the body, and this poison can only be removed by bringing it into contact with the atmospheric air, which takes place in the lungs by the process of breathing. When taking a breath no sound should be heard. Loud breathing is not only improper, but very unpleasant to hear.

Flexibility is needed by the voice for the varied coloring of song. Without it singing is cold and without feeling, and no expression can be given by promiscuously increasing and diminishing the power of the voice in musical phrases. Singing is subject to the same rules as speaking. Joy or splendor is not expressed with the same quality of tone as prayer or love. In the case of the former the voice is brilliant and vibrating with joyous feeling, while in the latter case the voice must be veiled and soft to express sanctity or adoration.

It is not sufficient to have only a good voice to become a great artist. One must also have musical intelligence and dramatic feeling. That there are so few great singers is not due to the scarcity of good voices with the above requirements but the lack of strict discipline in vocal training.

I cannot agree with the idea of some teachers who think they can produce good singers by fine theories. Voices are like faces—there are no two alike. Each is marked by a trait peculiar to itself.

Faults usually found in singers are singing out of tune, singing through the nose, singing throaty, tremolo, and incorrect breathing. All of the foregoing must be corrected by the teacher before going any further. After this has been accomplished perfect intonation is needed, which can be acquired only by proper instruction and conscientious study.

Too much attention cannot be paid to the developing of good head tones. These tones must be sung with ease, without the least restraint. Beautiful head tones give brilliancy and carrying power to and preserve the voice, thereby prolonging the singer's career. While studying with one of my teachers, Amelio Belari, I became acquainted with Lillian Nordica. Nordica, who possessed a beautiful head voice, often spoke of what a wonderful asset it was to the artist.

The singer must submit to a life that is systematic and prudent in every respect, abstaining from self-indulgence and excess, which inevitably ruin the voice. Too vigorous exercise, such as dancing, skating, etc., impair the process of breathing and are therefore injurious. The habit of loud talking is another bad feature, as it makes the voice harsh and unmusical. Exercise in the open air, walking, swimming, horseback riding—these (in moderation, of course) are beneficial to the singer.

It is absolutely useless for anyone to aspire to a concert or grand opera career, even though he possess the necessary requirements, unless he is in a position to devote a part of every day to serious study.

APOLLO CLUB

On Thursday night, November 14, the Apollo Musical Club held its first semi-annual banquet and social evening at the Stevens restaurant, where the entire east end of the eighth floor had been converted into a reception room and banquet hall.

Mrs. Byrge Kitson Schwarz, hostess for the evening, welcomed the members and their friends and, after singing "America," a splendid seven course dinner was served, the table decorations being flags of the allied nations and chrysanthemums.

Dr. F. W. Booth was the genial toastmaster of the evening and many delightful responses were given. Henry Selinger, a first violinist from the Chicago Symphony, accompanied by A. L. Shynman, formerly court pianist at Petrograd, played a number of selections, and Miss Bertha Beeman, contralto, sang a group of songs, all of which was thoroughly appreciated by the club.

Under the management of Miss Mabel Jones and Miss Bertha Guthman a clever parody on grand opera was given as a surprise following the dinner.

Those participating were Miss Marie Haerron, Miss Madeline Reed, Florence DeHart Westerman, W. J. Molitor and Armour Armstrong. The last entertainer of the evening was Raymond Raymouth, an impersonator, who sings equally in male or female voice, and who proved himself a most interesting artist.

The committee in charge is to be congratulated on the success of the affair. May we meet again under the same happy conditions where Mr. Whipple, who carries out plans so successfully, is at the helm.

MME. FLORA ZYGMAN PRESENTS PUPILS IN RECITAL

At her Kimball Hall studio on last Wednesday evening Mme. Flora Zygman presented several pupils (piano) and some young artistic friends (vocal and dramatic) in the following well balanced and beautifully given program:

Tambourin ..... Rameau
Mazourka ..... Gliere
Paula Salamson
Rhapsodie, No. 2 ..... Liszt
Gertrude Movitt
Pastoral ..... Varracini
Elegie ..... Massenet
Sarah Lessick (vocal)
Concerto, II and III ..... Mozart
Dorothy Friedlander
Polonaise (Mignon) .....
Valse, E Minor ..... Chopin
Irene Davidson
Concerto for Violin ..... Wieniawski
Marion Barry
The Lark ..... Balakirew
Elias Moll
Bob's Croix de Guerre ..... Barry
Evelyn Hattie Fox

Of those numbers heard, Marion Barry showed fine intonation and good musical qualities, as well as a well developed musicianship in the Wieniawski Violin Concerto, and Evelyn Hattie Fox was distinctly clear-cut and impressive in her reading, which, being about the war, was apropos and full of interest to the audience.

Paula Salamson and Gertrude Movitt, heard on other occasions, again proved their careful study, as well as good talent, while Dorothy Friedlander in the Mozart Concerto disclosed the fact that she has rapidly grown toward the artist rank and that much may be expected of her.

Elias Moll, a youth who cannot have seen more than sixteen summers, is yet very artistic in his playing and so accurate and definite as to prove himself a conscientious student.

He also proved, as did each of the other students, that Mme. Zygman is a careful and successful teacher.

THE CLARKES IN RECITAL

The Clarkes (Edward, baritone, and Rachel Steinman, violinist) gave a delightful recital at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory last Tuesday evening. The attendance was large and the program varied and interesting. Mrs. Clarke plays with much vivacity, clean technic and a broad sympathetic tone. She gave for her opening number Wieniawski's Scherzo-Tarentelle, playing it with much color, contrast and spirit. For an encore to this number she gave a charming reading of the "Little Shepherd" (Debussy). Later in the evening a broad and masterful interpretation was given to the movements of Mendelssohn's Concerto for violin and piano. Mr. Clarke appeared to decided advantage in four numbers. The first was a group of old negro slave songs arranged by Burleigh. Then followed a group consisting of "Fairy Pipers" (Brewer), "After" (Elgar) and "Smuggler's Song" (Kernochan). Mr. Clarke then sang with much spirit and fine sense of dramatic values the Vulcan Air from the opera "Philemon and Baucis." The final number of the program, given with violin obligatos, was Cadman's beautiful cycle, "Sayanara"—a cycle full of oriental color and charming pictures, giving fine opportunity for tone contrast and shading, in which this singer excels. Miss Jeanne Boyd played a most satisfactory accompaniment. She senses the mood of the artists and helps to carry out their effects in a most pleasing way.

STURKOW-RYDER AND LILLIAN PARKS

By the simple omission of the apostrophe and an s, our printer last week made us schedule Miss Lillian Parks incorrectly.

Miss Parks is an artist pupil of Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, and from that splendid teacher has learned reliable and brilliant technic and has imbibed also musical feeling in a remarkable degree.

This writer heard Miss Parks play at a studio recital of Mme. Sturkow-Ryder's pupils last Summer and at once determined that she was a young artist of marked ability and very definite attainments, who would certainly make a fine impression on any public before which she might appear.

Her big success at the Hippodrome, where she appeared all of last week in piano numbers, is full confirmation of last Summer's prediction.

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder has many other professional pupils on her list, and, in fact, any talented pupil who remains with her long enough is bound to reap substantial success, for her knowledge of technical requirements is so complete and her interpretative acumen so delicate that no one could fail to advance under her tutelage.

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder has been fulfilling many engagements throughout the country recently and has a very big season of recital concert playing booked. But she never has so many engagements but that she finds time to keep up her Chicago class, for she is devoted also to teaching.

FALL FESTIVAL CONCERT

The Fall Festival concert of the Men's Choral Union was given at Orchestra Hall last Friday evening, under the direction of Edward Clissold, in the presence of a large and very much enthused audience.

One hundred and fifty picked singers from the Sunday schools of the county have been drilled by Mr. Clissold until they have reached a splendid degree of proficiency, and his acumen and good taste in the selection and arrangement of the program, combined with several attractive soloists, served to insure an excellent concert and fine results.
